Non-credit. Students admitted to candidacy for the doctoral degree who have completed all course and dissertation registration requirements and who are regularly using the facilities of the University for study and research are required to be registered each quarter of the academic year until the dissertation and final examination have been completed. PREREQUISITE(S): Admission to Candidacy. Independent Study form required. (variable credit)

Human Community (HC)

HC 116 | PSYCHOLOGY OF MALE DEVELOPMENT | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the development of boys from infancy through adulthood within socio-cultural context. We therefore address in addition to gender, the impact of race, ethnicity, class and related issues of societal /governmental failures when it comes to non-voting children. We cover why boys have more trouble at school, more problems with anger, and more incarcerations than girls or boys of higher social class, but our focus will be on their capacities and how those in power can help them thrive rather than present obstacles in their path from birth onwards. In my work in Chicago schools from Englewood to Rogers Park, I found young boys and teens very capable of caring and empathy but not reinforced by adults to develop these skills. This course suggests ways to change that and help teachers, parents and society not stereotype boys or give up on them so early in life. We will focus on how boys can develop fully as men of character and care, who can succeed in relationships, as parents, at work and in their community. We will learn of advocacy work to convince society to improve the conditions in which boys live. We draw upon the work of the Search Institute, the book "The Men They Will Become" by Eli Newberger (free online) and other current research. We will view workshops including feminist Judith Jordan's "Raising Competent and Connected Boys" and learn of local and national efforts to support young boys development. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 118 | MAKING SOCIAL CHANGE: THE LEGACY OF THE 1960'S | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In the first twenty years following World War II, Americans participated in the democratic process and in civil society in record numbers. They participated in public meetings, belonged to labor unions, joined churches, and formed professional societies. These civic structures and habits of involvement empowered citizens to believe they could make a difference in their communities and laid the groundwork for some of the major social movements of the second half of the 20th Century. Civil rights, second-wave feminism, gay rights, and Latino rights all have their roots in the 1960s and continued their work over the following decades. In this class, we will explore civic engagement through the lens of our recent history. We will look at how these movements developed and analyze how they achieved their goals. We will take lessons from our predecessors and apply them to our own efforts to make a contribution to the lives of people in our local, national or global communities. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 165 | CHINA: MONEY, POWER AND THE 21ST CENTURY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The greatest migration of people in the history of the world is occurring right now, in China. Hundreds of millions of people, whose families have lived in rural China for thousands of years, are moving to rapidly urbanizing cities. This course analyzes, through the voices of the Chinese people, the dramatic impact of this social and economic revolution upon families and individuals. These changes are having a worldwide impact upon economics, trade and the new world order. Through lecture/discussions, videos, readings, on-line discussion boards and independent research, students will have the opportunity to form their own viewpoints as to the impact of globalization upon one of the oldest civilizations on earth. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 192 | THE ART, SCIENCE AND PSYCHOLOGY OF FOOD | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

We have many connections to food. Food sustains us but it has meaning that extends far beyond basic nutrition. Eating is an individual pleasure and comfort, a tool for creating and sustaining social bonds, and a way to express one's cultural identity. Food is tied to many aspects of life including culture, politics, agriculture and the environment. Americans have become disconnected from both the production of our food and from the joy of eating it and suffer from food related health problems such as diabetes, obesity and eating disorders. In this class we will explore the myriad of food-related habits and choices, that determine how what and why we eat. This experiential class moves beyond specific dietary guidelines by presenting concepts and skills that will help you reframe your connections with food. We will explore the multiple dimensions of food and eating from an individual, community and national level. We will explore the true meaning of nourishment. Topics include: identifying personal eating styles, mindful eating exercises, the slow food movement, locating Chicago food deserts, a field trip to a popular Chicago organic garden/restaurant, guest speaker from a Chicago restaurant mural artist, examining types of hunger and nourishment, and issues involving food and ritual, food and story, food and psychology, food and art. We will combine art, film clips, lectures, field trip, research, and mindful eating skills. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 208 | THE HEART OF THE ENTREPRENEUR | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Entrepreneurs are an integral part of a thriving economy yet the aspects of successful entrepreneurship remain a mystery. This course takes a detailed look at the characteristics of successful and unsuccessful entrepreneurs, enabling the students to acquire a personal understanding of what it takes to start a new business venture. This course is especially targeted for those interested in starting their own business or aspiring to be an employee within an innovative business. (2 credit hours)

HC 215 | EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE IN THE WORKPLACE | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

How do individual emotional traits support, or detract from, leadership behaviors in today's ever-changing organizations? We learn to identify and strengthen core traits of emotional intelligence at work, and to collaborate intelligently and effectively with others to meet the high standards of organizational improvement. Special focus on theories of active leadership and their relevance to an emotionally-positive workplace culture. (2-6 hours)

HC 219 | THE FIGHT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS: ONE WOMAN'S CRUSADE | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Helen Prejean is a leading human rights activist in the United States. For the past 30 years, she has helped shape conversation about equal treatment for all within the criminal justice system, especially persons of color and the materially poor. Dead Man Walking, the eyewitness account of her experience accompanying condemned prisoners to execution, has had a major influence on discussion of violence, poverty, civil rights, criminal law, and social justice. In this course, we use her work and interact with her personally to study power inequities across race and class lines that perpetuate injustice and examine her strategies for reform. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 221 | PROFESSIONAL SPEAKING SKILLS FROM ZOOM TO ROOM | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Authentic, credible oral communication is paramount to attain professional and personal success. The purpose of this course is to hone each student's ability to orally communicate effectively and with ease. Regardless of the starting point - as a beginner or a seasoned speaker - we will identify personal strengths and improvement areas, then work upward from there. To accommodate today's high demand for online communication (Zoom, Google Meet, WebEx, et al), instruction will focus on both virtual and in-person delivery. With an emphasis on the professional environment, we will explore a variety of common scenarios. Students will gain practical techniques to boost performance and shine - ranging from formal presentations to meeting facilitations to impromptu speaking. Because we represent different industries, backgrounds, and experience levels, we will employ a mix of individual and collaborative activities. The latter will ensure that we are capitalizing on resources within our unique learning group. Students will be encouraged to select topics relevant to their respective careers or areas of study. As well, students have the option to work on their real-life speaking scenarios(s), provided it fits within the assignment parameters. (2 credit hours)

HC 222 | FACILITATIVE DIALOGUE | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course aims to help students understand the psychology surrounding difficult, emotionally volatile interpersonal situations in order to facilitate appropriate dialogue to arrive at a solution. These situations can include: confronting an uncooperative coworker, assessing alleged wrongdoing by a student, addressing resistance in a patient, providing feedback to a friend, or meeting the needs of a disgruntled customer. In these situations, our own behavioral and verbal actions are important determinants in the direction, duration, and consequences of the interaction. Given the potential for us to be hostilely confronted, and for those whom we are talking to for them to act defensively, we often have to manage our own emotions while trying to quickly assess the situation to facilitate dialogue. Students will learn, develop, and practice a framework to more effectively manage these situations. This course is appropriate for those in professional settings such as human resources, patient- and service-oriented industries, counseling, education, leadership development, in addition to personal settings where facilitative dialogue is necessary.

HC 223 | ECONOMY, SOCIETY, AND SUSTAINABILITY IN THE 21ST CENTURY | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course targets undergraduate and postgraduate students who want to familiarize with economic principles, but do not intend to major in economics. No prior economic coursework is required. Students learn to develop an understanding of the use of analytical and data-handling tools. At the same time, they benefit from an accessible yet complete primer of economic principles and concepts that are essential to understand economic policymaking and the role of politics, as well as a host of issues facing our societies, such as: economic prosperity and inequality; economic efficiency and fairness in policymaking; institutions, power, and inequality; the labor market and unemployment; production and the market mechanism, etc... The course operates on the premise that the Economy shouldn't constitute the sole focus of public and private decisionmakers, and that equal attention should be devoted to two other essential dimensions of the human condition, Society and the Environment. (4 quarter hours)

HC 238 | CULTURAL COMMUNICATIONS IN CUBA: WHO TALKS TO WHOM IN SCHOOLS AND CAFES | 2-4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This study abroad course will provide participants with a foundation in the theories of intercultural communications. They will observe how people from different cultures communicate in public spaces, cafes, schools and other institutions and evaluate how communications are affected by place. Through their stay in Havana and a day trip to Vinhales, participants will analyze how different socio- cultural factors interact to shape individuals and interaction patterns in these different settings, as well as in the United States. They will engage in global communication and evaluate the impact of communication differences that diverse political, religious, social, ethnic and educational backgrounds have on individuals communicating within an organization or individually. Prior to departure, participants will use interactive, online technology to engage in cross-cultural communication and to create criteria for evaluating and comparing communication patterns. In Cuba, participants will collaboratively use the criteria to analyze cross-cultural aspects of language and interactions in various settings from social and political perspectives. The trip duration is 7 days. The readings and activities ground students in recent theories of intercultural practice and provide a framework for students to become interculturally competent. Students will be staying in small groups in Casa Particulares, similar to Bed and Breakfasts, and hosted by Cuban families. The activities tentatively planned include touring Old Havana and the Plaza de la Revolucion, a visit to the Museo de la Revolucion, a visit to the Callejon de Hamel street fair, a day in rural Cuba to visit a tobacco farm and the Sierra del Rosario Biosphere Reserve, a visit to the Akokan community and the Casa de Africa, and a day at the beach. An important part of the curriculum are visits to local elementary schools, guest lectures with local university professors and an afternoon and evening with university students.

HC 239 | BUSINESS, TECHNOLOGY AND OUR GLOBAL FUTURE | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Students will study the latest changes in the fields of intercultural communication and leadership development in today's global corporations, including reading interviews from some of the world's leaders in manufacturing, energy, telecommunications, and health care from numerous countries. This course combines hard science with cutting-edge organizational research-based case studies in today's trans-cultural global corporations. Students study key behaviors needed today to be successful in a global corporation, including cultural self-awareness, frame-shifting, inviting the unknown, third-way solutions, and others. Students will also study how "disruptive technologies", mobile internet, automation of knowledge work, cloud technology, next generation genomics, 3D printing, advanced materials, and renewable energy are changing and will continue to revolutionize global corporations. This course concludes with an analysis of the effects of social justice and corporate social responsibility on today's global corporations. (2-4 credit hours)

HC 247 | APPLYING ECONOMICS: A PRACTICAL APPROACH | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This applied economic course is tailored to introduce students to economic issues, without employing complex graphical and mathematical models. The material to be covered caters to students who are concerned citizens and active participants in the economy, and want to achieve a better grasp of problems facing society today. Students will learn how to use fun tools from game theory to analyze some of society's most puzzling problems, such as pollution, health care, the depletion of natural resources, how the pursuit of individual goals can lead to poor collective outcomes, and also the challenges of monetary and fiscal policy, economic growth, inflation, unemployment, income inequality, etc. Students will learn by doing, through hands-on experiments and practical exercises. (2-4 credit hours)

HC 253 | FAMILY LIFE: THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE OF FAMILIES | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In history, families have been defined as mother, father, and children. In our current experience, more families differ from that model than comply with it. Family structure is evolving. Missing fathers, Single parents, and Blended families are only a few of the changes to the family structure that have occurred with some significance beginning in the 1950s. (2-4 quarter hours) What influences family structure? Do economics and education make a difference? Are race and ethnicity important factors? What about gender, personality and religion? Is the two parent family necessary? What role do grandparents and great grandparents play in the changing family? Perhaps the most important question we can ask about the family is what comes next. What are the many ways in which families might be redesigned in the future? How do these changes impact individuals in society? Competences: H4, H3X, A3A, FX.

HC 257 | PARTICIPATION AND DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Why don't more Americans vote? How do education, income, and age impact voting trends? Why are some Americans more interested in politics than others? How is inequality reflected in other forms of political participation, such as donating money? Do recent trends in voter ID laws help to safeguard the democratic process, or restrict it? In summary, how democratic or representative are American elections? The course begins with some famous arguments about why participation matters. Trends in voter turnout then become the primary object of study, but we also consider other forms of participation including writing members of Congress, attending political meetings and contributing money. We explore recent discoveries in behavioral psychology that are changing the strategies of modern campaigns. After taking this course, you will understand the fundamental role of participation in democracy. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 274 | THE BILL OF RIGHTS IN CONTEMPORARY LIFE AND WORK | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will be organized around a series of central questions: What is a law? Who has the authority to make one? What are the various sources of law? What is or should be the relationship between law, ethics and morality, between law and religion? What is the difference between legislative law and constitutional law? What are the legal, historical, philosophical and political sources of American constitutional law? What sort of society did the Framers of the Bill of Rights have in mind and are their ideas still applicable in 21st century America? How does the Bill of Rights fit into our constitutional framework and what rights does it guarantee? What is the relationship between the states and the federal government in guaranteeing those rights? What is the relationship between our legal system and our political system generally? What criteria do judges use to interpret laws? How does our own legal system differ from those of other countries and cultures? Are there any universal rights worth protecting? What role does (or should) science play in upholding our rights under the Bill of Rights? Possible areas to be covered are freedom of speech, religion, establishment of church and state, the right to privacy, the 4th, 5th and 6th Amendments? protections for criminal defendants and the death penalty. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 282 | JAZZ AGE PARIS: 1919-1939 | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a history of Parisian society and culture in the era between the two world wars. We will explore issues of race, class and gender in the interwar period in French society. We will also examine the role of American writers, artists, musicians and performers in the cultural world of Paris, the City of Light, and an outpost in the Harlem Renaissance. (2-4 credit hours)

HC 283 | GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES OF WORK & FAMILY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

What role does the political, economic, and cultural structure of a nation play in its concepts of work and family? This course develops students' understanding of issues in the history of family and work through historical and contemporary accounts from Europe and the United States. We will take a close look at issues such as the gender division of labor, child labor, government policies on maternity, economic structure as well as social and political movements. Course materials include historical documents, lectures, films, and varied readings. Assignments will include essays, reflection journals, discussion, and a research project on work-life balance. (2 - 4 credit hours)

HC 299 | ASSESSING AND MANAGING CONFLICT | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Our usual method for presenting, analyzing, and resolving conflicts has centered around legalistic argument; the goal being to discover the "right" answer and suppress the "wrong" ones. However, the multiple worldviews operating in the world today make such an approach to conflict less viable. Reflecting this reality, ways of communicating about and resolving conflict have arisen that go beyond enforcement of rules or legal determinations of right and wrong. In this course, we will look at various methods for handling conflict and consider how we might apply them to personal, work, community and literary conflicts through lecture, small group work, role playing, reading, various written projects, and discussion. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 300 | GLOBALIZATION AND PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

For decades scholars have observed a growing body of evidence and employers a growing body of experience of significant changes in the way that international business is conducted. These changes in the business world, brought on largely by globalization, present new challenges. These challenges require staff with specific skills related to global competence in order for the business to remain competitive. The goal of this course is to help students to cultivate and/or refine the skills and capabilities necessary to succeed in today's global work environment. Organized around four learning units and one major project, the class will provide each student with extensive content and resources; it will also provide a forum for assessing the competences necessary to attain success in a global workplace and a method for honing those skills each student needs to cultivate. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 302 | ACTIVE CITIZENS: MAKING A DIFFERENCE IN THE COMMUNITY, WORKPLACE WORLD | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Americans are known for active participation in organizations that strengthen our communities. We coach our kid's sports teams, take meals to members of our congregations, work for candidates that we believe in and join marches to support or oppose government action. With all these activities, we engage with other members of our community and workplace to make it better for ourselves and our families and to promote social justice. In this class, we will develop the knowledge and practice skills that enhance civic engagement and explore the role of citizens' voices in a democracy in the face of powerful political and economic interests. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 306 | TRAVEL AND LEARN IN BOSTON: EXPLORING ITS ARTS AND HISTORY | 2-4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Boston is a city of many faces. It's a world class city from a cultural and educational perspective by any standard, but it competes with New York City and Philadelphia for the title of best place for American history and art. Boston has fame for the riches made by old money profits but also for its colorful mob history. With such internal paradoxes and external competitors, why choose a travel course to Boston? Here's why: In this domestic travel course, participants will walk the famous freedom train and other historic sites, visit Boston's famous art collections, and experience its diverse neighborhoods like Boston Common, Beacon Hill, and the North End. Issues such as Boston's immigrant populations, its fame as a seat of American higher education, its connection to events in American history, and its stake in the meaning of freedom and democracy will be discussed in the preparatory classes as well as in post travel learning as students work on individual projects.

HC 315 | ECONOMICS FOR DECISION-MAKING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The purpose of this course is to provide the modern consumer living in a global economy fueled by unabated technological progress, with basic notions to understand the path that has led to sustained prosperity in the past many decades. The focus is on endowing students, as householders, with conceptual tools to make optimal financial and consumer decisions throughout the lifecycle. That theoretical foundation is reinforced and exemplified with a wealth of practical applications offered through a student-friendly online interactive learning platform, which also provides a convenient means to complete weekly assignments. That online platform will help students relate what they learn to their everyday experience as economic agents. The course is divided into two modules, microeconomic and macroeconomic. The microeconomic module studies the market mechanism. Topics covered include scarcity, opportunity costs, the law of diminishing returns, the trade principle of comparative advantage, the mechanism of the price system, the laws of demand and supply, the impact of market interventions by the government, etc. In the macroeconomic module, topics covered include the workings of the gross domestic product (GDP), of inflation and unemployment, of money and banking, the role of fiscal and monetary policy, etc. The course will visit the relevance of balancing the requirements of economic growth (efficiency in the use of inputs) with the necessity of attending to the needs of both society (need for equity) and the environment (need for sustainability). Students will also discussed at length the economic implications of topics of heightened public interest, such as the Great Recession of 2008-2009 and the coronavirus pandemic that unleashed itself on the world around the onset of the year 2020. Throughout the course, we will refer to the idea that knowledge of economics leads to practical, informed decisions that can help us minimize cost and maximize return and satisfaction as voters and taxpayers participating actively in the economy. (2-4 credit hours)

HC 326 | CONTEMPORARY NATIVE AMERICAN/AMERICAN INDIAN ISSUES | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Native Americans are part of our history and heritage, yet many Americans have little knowledge beyond stereotypes. While invisible to the mainstream, Native American cultures are surviving, striving, and in some cases, thriving as we enter the new millennium. This course will explore the complex issues facing Native Americans today through discussion, film, readings, and Native American news media to enable students to gain a cross-cultural perspective. Students will choose an area of focus on this subject and conduct independent research to present to their classmates. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 329 | MALE IDENTITY IN TRANSITION | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course, open to men and women, examines issues of gender with a focus on male identity. You will examine your own perspectives, attitudes, and experiences in light of psychosocial development theory, media influences, power struggles among social groups, and relationship issues in an effort to gain a greater understanding of factors that influence male identity in today's society. The course is offered in a hybrid format, meeting every other week and interacting in an online course discussion between meetings. Projects to demonstrate competence will relate gender issues in power relations in the US, the impact of media, adult development and the workplace. (2-4 quarter hours)

HC 330 | LAW/ BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The influence of the law is far-reaching in the corporate world. Whether an entrepreneur, manager, administrative assistant, union employee, nonunion employee, sales representative, purchasing agent, etc., the law ultimately affects how we make decisions in the work arena. This course allows students to discover the wide range of laws affecting America's business environment. Students will learn how the law is established and developed, and be provided with tools to recognize potential legal issues that arise in daily business operations. The curriculum considers the impact of the law in the global workplace, and in commerce, business operations, employer/employee relationships, and in the regulatory environment.

HC 365 | JAZZ AND CHICAGO | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This short course will introduce the student to the pleasures and enrichment of jazz. Students will learn what jazz is, learn about its fascinating history and some of its most influential players, and learn about the special role that Chicago has played-and still does play-in great jazz. In the classroom we'll hear records, view videos, engage the instructor in question-and-answer sessions, and hear stories about this unique musical art form and Chicago's ongoing role in it. The instructor, a jazz writer and longtime jazz drummer, will enliven the course with personal anecdotes covering a considerable part of Chicago jazz history. (2-4 quarter hours)

Human-Computer Interaction (HCI)

HCI WV412 | HCI 412 WAIVER | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)*HCI 201 | MULTIMEDIA AND THE WORLD WIDE WEB | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the World Wide Web and web development for non-technical majors. Students will create web pages using a WYSIWYG editor. Students will evaluate web sites using a variety of analytical and empirical methods. Students will conduct technology-related experiments following the principles of the scientific method and use technology to analyze their results. Topics include web-based technology, creating content for distribution on the web, and design principles for web sites. Students will develop an appreciation for the connections among science, mathematics, and technology in modern society, as well as for the principles guiding advances in science and technology. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

HCI 302 | FOUNDATIONS OF DIGITAL DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Shape, line on two-dimensional surfaces. Color. Composition rules as they apply to digitally created documents. Digital manipulation of two-dimensional images. Use of commercially available draw and paint tools to create two-dimensional designs. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

Graduate standing is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 402 | FOUNDATIONS OF DIGITAL DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Shape, line on two-dimensional surfaces. Color. Composition rules as they apply to digitally created documents. Digital manipulation of two-dimensional images. Use of commercially available draw and paint tools to create two-dimensional designs. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

HCI 406 | WEB SITE DESIGN FOR HCI | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Web design introduced in a user-centered context. Application of visual design principles and common design patterns for web sites and mobile interfaces. Page markup using HTML and CSS addressing responsive web design, accessibility, and search engine optimization. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

HCI 412 | HCI DESIGN FUNDAMENTALS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Focus on visual design basics. Evaluate, critique and create two-dimensional artifacts (using digital and non-digital tools). Introduction to design elements that include gestalts, color, line, value, shape, patterns and perspective.

HCI 421 | DESIGNING FOR CONTENT MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Design and development of Web sites using common database-driven content management systems (CMSs) and publishing tools such as those used to manage blogs, community portals, and other content-heavy websites. Discussions of how familiarity with CMS tools assists the role of the user experience designer. Visual design and theme customization using prior knowledge of CSS. Taxonomy systems, installation of add-on modules, and user management using today's widely used systems.

HCI 406 is a prerequisite for this class

HCI 422 | MULTIMEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Multimedia interface design. Underlying technological issues including synchronization and coordination of multiple media, file formats for images, animations, sound and text. Hypertext. Information organization. Survey of multimedia authoring software. Topics in long distance multimedia (World Wide Web). Students will critique existing applications and create several multimedia applications.

HCI 440 or consent of the instructor

HCI 430 | PROTOTYPING AND IMPLEMENTATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Overview of prototyping methods ranging from low-fidelity to interactive script-based prototypes. Analysis of prototyping tools and their relative advantages. Projects include prototype development over multiple iterations using a variety of strategies.

HCI 440 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 440 | INTRODUCTION TO USER-CENTERED DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The user-interface development process. Introduction to methods for practicing user-centered design including user and task analysis, user interface design principles and testing using low-fidelity prototypes. Students may not receive credit for this course and HCI 441. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

HCI 441 | INTRODUCTION TO USER-CENTERED DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Overview of the user-centered design (UCD) process with an additional emphasis on user interface development. Coverage of UCD process includes effective, low-cost methods for user research, interaction design and evaluation. User interface development involves application of front-end development languages (HTML and JavaScript) and frameworks (jQuery). This course is offered to students with programming experience as an alternative to IT 411 and HCI 440. Students may not receive credit for this course and HCI 440.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 445 | USER RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with skills necessary to conduct, analyze and communicate user research. Topics include: (a) common methods for collecting user data; (b) analysis techniques to examine user research data; and (c) ways to document and communicate user research findings. HCI 440 AND IT 403 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 450 | FOUNDATIONS OF HUMAN-COMPUTER INTERACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Application of engineering and psychological theory to the design of computer systems. Overview of applicable research methods and research on perception, cognition, errors, and screen design. Attention will be given to creating and applying guidelines derived from research. IT 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 454 | INTERACTION DESIGN AND INFORMATION ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Information architecture and interactive page design. Perception and use of menus, labels and user controls. Structuring information for navigation and presentation. Selecting and placing user controls for optimizing task flow on pages and across pages. Creating wire frames and using content managers.

HCI 440 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 457 | INFORMATION ARCHITECTURE AND CONTENT STRATEGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Organization and design of applications and web sites for effective information navigation. Survey and practice of methods for content strategy (CS) and information architecture (IA), including content inventories and card sorting. Processes include mapping content to structure and creating controlled vocabularies for specific audiences. Students apply CS and IA methods in the design of diverse applications.

HCI 460 | USABILITY EVALUATION METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Survey of evaluation methods that can be applied to user interfaces. Methods include expert inspections, walkthroughs, usability testing and analytical approaches. Students evaluate existing systems by applying some of these methods.

HCI 440 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 470 | DIGITAL DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Focus on the visual aspects of interfaces for information and communication technologies (ICTs). Evaluate, critique and create ICT interfaces using design principles. Learn to choose color, type, layout and imagery to create aesthetic and usable ICT interfaces. Introduction to information visualization. Applying course concepts, students create and develop their own web-based portfolio.

HCI 402 and HCI 406 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 472 | HCI DESIGN FUNDAMENTALS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Focus on the visual design in digital artifacts. Evaluate, critique and create digital artifacts organized by design principles. Choose color, type, layout and imagery towards the creation of aesthetic and usable, responsive and accessible digital artifacts. Introduction to accessibility, information visualization and animation.

HCI 412 AND HCI 406 AND IT 411 are prerequisites for this course.

HCI 511 | ACCESSIBILITY CONSIDERATIONS IN HCI | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Methods and principles for designing interactive technologies for diverse users, including children, elderly, and people with disabilities and alternative skills. Analysis of how current technologies address diverse user needs and considerations about how technologies might be improved to better meet diverse user needs. Class projects include a web accessibility evaluation based on current w3 standards and an in-depth research project in which students ideate a new technology or evaluate an existing technology in which they work directly with people who have disabilities.

HCI 445 is a prerequisite for this class. HCI 460 is recommended.

HCI 512 | INFORMATION VISUALIZATION AND INFOGRAPHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Communicating information through visualizations. Students learn how to choose effective means to visualize data for (a) their intended audience(s) and (b) for the message they intend to communicate. Students practice creating and evaluating visualizations using a variety of tools and methods.

IT 403 and (HCI 470 or HCI 472) are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 513 | DESIGN/STRATEGIES FOR INTERNET COMMERCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

(Cross-listed with ECT 555) An integrated study of design, technical, and strategic issues for Internet commerce. Web analysis, design and publishing. Visual, textual and content organization, response time, usability testing. Authorizing tools and administering web server. Internet database servicing. Internet service providers and pricing. Digital cash and encryption. Impact on the value chain, intermediation, and market structure. Strategies for mass customization, interactive marketing, and support for collaborative work.

IS 422 or HCI 430 is a prerequisite for this class

HCI 514 | GLOBAL USER RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theories and approaches for conducting HCI research and creating digital media for international audiences. Varied topics include (a) cultural models and global differences that influence design of digital artifacts (b) approaches to conducting usability and other types of user research and (c) information communication and technologies for development (ICT4D).

HCI 445 and HCI 460 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 515 | DESIGN ETHNOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This discussion course focuses on topics related to ethnographic methods such as activity theory, value sensitive design, online ethnography and reflexivity. Students will conduct participatory observations, interviews, and diary studies (all methods designed to engage with users "in the wild") and translate the results from those studies into design implications. In this service learning course, students will work with community partners to conduct ethnographic studies and design a tool for the organization based on the results from the formative study.

HCI 454 or HCI 457 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 516 | BEHAVIORAL SCIENCE & UX | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Behavioral Science & UX will examine addressing complex behavior change through a deeper understanding of behavioral science. This course begins with the foundational elements of behavioral science including context, mental models, emotions and social dynamics and will progress into implementation methods. By having a foundational understanding of how we as humans make decisions, we are able to design more impactful solutions and persuasive technologies.

HCI 445 and HCI 450 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 520 | LEARNER-CENTERED DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Design and evaluation of technology-based learning systems. Theories and models of human perception and cognition as they apply to learning, instruction and training. Application of established principles for analyzing and designing learning systems. Projects include evaluating existing learning systems and the creation of a learning system.

HCI 440 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 522 | UX STRATEGY AND WEB ANALYTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, students examine how to align user experience (UX) approaches with business strategy. Topics include: (a) examining how business and UX strategies are aligned; (b) translation of business goals into measurable metrics; and (c) assessing metrics using services such as Google Analytics. Prerequisite(s): HCI 460.

HCI 460 is the prerequisite for this class

HCI 530 | MOBILE DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theoretical and practical issues for designing mobile devices. Design strategy, patterns and research within a mobile context. Students will learn to create useful, usable and enjoyable experiences that consider the unique capabilities and constraints of mobile platforms. Project deliverables includes wireframes for diverse platforms such as responsive mobile web, iOS, and Android native apps.

HCI 454 or HCI 457 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 541 | SURVEY DESIGN AND ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Design and analysis of surveys with an emphasis on user experience research. Benefits and costs of using surveys compared to other UX methods; factors for when survey use is appropriate. Sampling and threats to validity. Survey question design, pilot testing, implementation, and analysis. Application of statistical methods for analysis of survey data. Use of survey software such as Qualtrics.

HCI 445 or DSC 441 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 545 | EMBODIED INTERACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course covers the history, theory and philosophy behind embodied interaction (including cognitive, physiological, and social aspects), and discusses some of the best current examples of embodied interaction in digital interfaces. The course leverages students knowledge of User-Centered Interaction Design (UCID) from HCI 440 and their exposure to the psychological and physiological theories and experimental findings from HCI 450 and extends these into embodied interaction in three dimensions. It does this by exposing students to post-WIMP (windows, icons, menus, pointer) and blended/ubiquitous computing interfaces. Coursework includes a series of individual assignments that results in an embodied interaction prototype suitable for evaluation by real users; critical review and discussion of current research and development in embodied interaction; and critical review of other students' work. The sequence of assignments require students to identify an opportunity or need for application of embodied interaction; perform user research; create appropriate models as precursors to design; perform conceptual design; and design and create an embodied interaction prototype in a medium of their choice. They must then evaluate their prototype in tests with real users. Students are expected to share their application proposal, elements of other assignments, and reading summaries with the rest of the class.

HCI 440 and HCI 450 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 553 | SOCIAL INTERACTION DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

UX principles and strategies for designing social apps and web sites. Analysis and use of interaction patterns for organizing, sharing, and discussing content. Application of theories relating to social networks, privacy and social capital. Students apply user-centered processes to the design of a social app.

HCI 454 or HCI 457 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 558 | INTERACTION DESIGN AND ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Design and analysis of interactive technologies with emphasis on complex interactions and repeated use. Analysis and selection of appropriate interaction styles including command entry, form completion, menu selection, direct manipulation, code-based automation, and intelligent speech-based interaction. Specifying interaction using flowcharts, wireframes and prototypes. Taxonomy of errors and common approaches for avoiding them. Practices for minimizing effects of multi-tasking and cognitive load. Analysis methods, such as application of the GOMS keystroke-level model, for informing design. Student projects include the design and analysis of interactive user interfaces for diverse contexts and uses.

HCI 580 | USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Working with clients, students choose and practice appropriate methods learned in the HCI foundational courses to address business goals and user needs. Course coverage includes best practices for consulting, effective communication with clients and coworkers, understanding business and organizational needs, and setting realistic goals and expectations.

HCI 454 or HCI 457 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 590 | TOPICS IN HUMAN-COMPUTER INTERACTION | 1-4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Specific topics selected by the instructor. Topic varies with each offering. Contact instructor for more information. Prerequisite(s): See syllabus or consent of the instructor.

HCI 445 and HCI 460 are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 594 | HUMAN-COMPUTER INTERACTION CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

HCI 594 provides an opportunity for students to apply all of the skills they have learned on one comprehensive project. Multidisciplinary teams design, evaluate, and implement a user interface intensive project. Students prepare written documents describing their activities and present the final results to the class. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of the HCI core courses or consent of the instructor.

HCI 445 and HCI 430 and HCI 450 and HCI 460 and (HCI 454 or HCI 457) are prerequisites for this class.

HCI 596 | HCI RESEARCH CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides students with the experience of reading and synthesizing the literature on a particular HCI topic, with particular attention to judging the quality of the sources. The course also teaches the student to develop an annotated bibliography on a particular topic, and develop a research plan for writing a research survey paper or develop a research plan to answer a specific question by designing an experiment/questionnaire. After presenting their paper, the student will review other student's papers, and provide appropriate criticism. All students will be required to sign up for the CDM/COMM participant pool. We will invite researchers at CDM to discuss their current research.

HCI 450 or HCI 460 is a prerequisite for this class.

HCI 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Prerequisite(s): Consent of the instructor.

HCI 690 | RESEARCH SEMINAR | 1-4 quarter hours(Graduate)

PREREQUISITE(S): Instructor consent required. (variable credit)

IIT Chemical Engineering (ICE)

ICE 100 | INTRODUCTION TO THE PROFESSION I | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to chemical engineering and engineering productivity software. Communication skills development, technical reporting and presentation, engineering ethics, and a variety of topics are discussed.

ICE 104 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER PROGRAMMING FOR ENGINEERS | 3 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduces the use of high-level programming language as a problem-solving tool in engineering including basic data structures and algorithms, structured programming techniques, and software documentation. Designed for students who have had little or no prior experience with computer programming. (Taught at IIT as CS 104)

ICE 202 | MATERIAL AND ENERGY BALANCES | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Material and energy balances for engineering systems subjected to chemical and physical transformations. Calculations on industrial processes. CSC 224/225 or equivalent; MAT 149/152/162 and CHE 113 or CHE 131 recommended. (Taught at IIT as CHE 202)

ICE 239 | MATHEMATICAL AND COMPUTATIONAL METHODS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Utilization of numeric and analytic methods to find solutions to a variety of chemical engineering problems. Emphasis placed on development of computer code, and interpretation of results. Topics covered include systems of algebraic equations, initial value differential equations, and boundary value differential equations. Taught at the Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 239.

ICE 296 | INTRODUCTION TO IPRO | 1.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to process design. Principles and techniques in effective team work. Performance of selected design tasks in project groups integrated with ICE 496. Practice with process design software. First part of the ICE 296 - ICE 496 project package. Only chemical engineering students should register for this course. ICE 101, ICE 202, or consent recommended. [Taught at IIT as IPRO 296].

ICE 301 | FLUID MECHANICS AND HEAT-TRANSFER OPERATIONS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Flow of fluids and heat transfer. Fundamentals of fluid flow and heat transfer design equations as applied to selected unit operations. ICE 202 and ICE 252 recommended. COREQUISITE(S): ICE 343, MAT 260. Taught at IIT as CHE 301.

ICE 302 | MASS-TRANSFER OPERATIONS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Mass transfer in stagewise and continuous contacting equipment. Mass transfer design equations as applied to selected unit operations. Unsteady state operations in mass transfer equipment. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 302) ICE 301 recommended.

ICE 311 | FOUNDATIONS OF BIOLOGICAL SCIENCE FOR ENGINEERING | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This introductory course will introduce engineering students to basic principles of Biological Sciences, which will enable them to understand more advanced courses on the topic and provide a solid base for further study in all life sciences-related topics required in their individual programs. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 311)

ICE 317 | CHEMICAL ENGINEERING LABORATORY I | 3 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Laboratory work in the unit operations of chemical engineering, fluid flow, heat transfer, and other selected topics. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 317) ICE 301 recommended.

ICE 320 | TRANSPORTATION PHENOMENA | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The equations of change in different coordinate systems (mass, momentum, and energy transport). Velocity distribution in laminar and turbulent flow. Formulation and analytical solutions to the problems of viscous flow, molecular diffusion, heat conduction and convection. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 406) ICE 301, ICE 302 & ICE 252 recommended.

ICE 322 | CHEMICAL ENGINEERING LABORATORY II | 3 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Laboratory work in distillation, humidification, drying, gas absorption, filtration, and other areas. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 418)

ICE 324 | CHEMICAL REACTION ENGINEERING | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduction to the fundamentals of chemical kinetics. The design, comparison, and economic evaluation of chemical reactors. Emphasis on homogeneous systems. Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 423. ICE 302, ICE 351 and ICE 326 recommended.

ICE 326 | PROCESS MODELING AND SYSTEM THEORY | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Principles of process modeling. Modeling of non-reactive and reactive dynamic processes. Transfer functions. Modeling of multistage and non-linear processes. Discrete-event processes, Markov processes, and automata theory. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 433) COREQUISITE(S): ICE 302, ICE 351. ICE 301 recommended.

ICE 328 | PROCESS CONTROL | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Dynamic process models, stability assessment, feedback and feedforward control strategies, design and tuning of closed-loop controllers, time domain and frequency domain design and performance assessment methods. Multivariable systems, interaction, multi-loop control. Software for process simulation and controller design. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 435) ICE 302 and ICE 326 recommended.

ICE 330 | NUMERICAL AND DATA ANALYSIS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Utilization of numerical methods to find solutions to a variety of chemical engineering problems. Emphasis placed on problem formulation, development of computer code, and interpretation of results. Techniques covered include: systems of algebraic equations, linear regression, and statistics. Numerical differentiation and integration, solution of ordinary and partial differential equations. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 439)

ICE 332 | CHEMICAL PROCESS THERMODYNAMICS | 3 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Second law analysis of cooling, separation, combustion, and other chemical processes. Chemical reaction equilibrium and processing applications. ICE 351 recommended.

ICE 334 | CHEMICAL PROCESS DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduction to design techniques and economic aspects of chemical processes. The technical and economic aspects of equipment selection and design, alternative methods of operation. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 494) ICE 302, ICE 351 and ICE 326 recommended.

ICE 336 | STATISTICAL TOOLS FOR ENGINEERS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Descriptive statistics and graphs, probability distributions, random sampling, independence, significance tests, design of experiments, regression, time series analysis, statistical process control, and introduction to multivariate analysis (Taught at IIT as CHE 426).

ICE 338 | PROCESS DESIGN II | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Group project in process design. Integration of technical, safety, environmental, economic, and societal issues in process development and design. Final part of the IPRO project package. Project teams consist of chemical engineering students and students from other disciplines and professions. Students from other academic units should register for designated section of IPRO 497 (three credits) and their contribution to the project tasks will be defined accordingly. (Taught at the Illinois Institute of Technology as CHE 496.) ICE 324, ICE 328 and ICE 334 are required prerequisites.

ICE 351 | CHEMICAL ENGINEERING THERMODYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Laws of thermodynamics and their application to chemical engineering operations. (Taught at IIT as CHE 351) ICE 343 recommended.

ICE 352 | THERMODYNAMICS II | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Second law analysis of cooling, separation, combustion, and other chemical processes. Chemical reaction equilibrium and processing applications (Taught at IIT as CHE 451).

ICE 383 | ELECTRIC AND ELECTRONIC CIRCUITS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Circuit concepts, Ohm's Law, Kirchoff's Laws, network theorems. Circuit elements, DC and AC network analysis. Diodes, transistors, and electronic amplifiers. Digital electronics circuits and instrumentation. (Taught at IIT as ECE 383) PHY 172 recommended.

ICE 397 | INTERPROFESSIONAL PROJECT | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Interprofessional projects allow students to learn teamwork, leadership and project management skills, while working in multidisciplinary teams on projects involving technical, ethical, environmental, economic, public policy and legal issues. IPRO project teams are typically comprised of 6-10 students from sophomore through graduate level from all disciplines that can broadly contribute to a project effort. While every effort will be made to accommodate students' first choices, it may be necessary to balance students across all projects that will be scheduled for the semester or to consolidate students into fewer projects to meet minimum team requirements. Specific rules about selection of IPRO projects may apply in certain degree programs. Some projects may carry Humanities or Social Sciences credit. Students must consult the lead faculty member for the project and their faculty advisor before registering for a project. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as IPRO 397)

Illinois Institute of Technology (IIT)

IIT 105 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER PROGRAMMING I | 3-4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduces the use of high-level programming language (C/C++) as a problem-solving tool including basic data structures and algorithms, structured programming techniques, and software documentation. Designed for students who have had little or no prior experience with computer programming. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CS 105.) (3 quarter hours)

IIT 115 | ENGINEERING GRAPHICS AND DESIGN | 3 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Basic traditional and computer-based techniques and applications, multiview sketching, orthographic projection, isometric and oblique pictorials, sectioning, auxiliary views, principles of descriptive geometry, dimensioning, detail drawings, introduction to design and computer-aided drafting and design (CAD). (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as EG 105.) (3 quarter hours)

IIT 200 | INTRODUCTION TO C++ PROGRAMMING | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Problem-solving and program design using C++. Introduces a variety of programming techniques, algorithms, and basic data structures including an introduction to object-oriented programming. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CS 200). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 201 | MECHANICS OF SOLIDS I | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Free body diagrams. Equilibrium of a particle, a system of particles, and a rigid body. Distributed forces, centroids, centers of gravity, and moments of inertia. Analysis of structures. Friction. Internal loads in bars, shafts and beams. Stress and strain in axially loaded members. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 201.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 202 | MECHANICS OF SOLIDS II | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Stress and strain relations, mechanical properties. Axially loaded members. Torsion of circular shafts. Plane stress and strain, Mohr's circle, stress transformation. Elementary bending theory, normal and shear stresses in beams, beam deflection. Combined loading. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 202.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 203 | INTRODUCTION TO MECHANICS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Equilibrium concepts. Statics of a particle. Statics of a system of particles and rigid bodies. Distributed forces, centroids and center of gravity. Friction. Kinetics of particles: Newton's Laws of motion, energy and momentum. Kinematics of particles. Dynamics of rotating bodies (Taught at IIT as MMAE 200). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 210 | CIRCUIT ANALYSIS I | 4.5-6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Ohm's Law, Kirchoff's Laws, and network element voltage-current relations. Application of mesh and nodal analysis to circuits. Dependent sources, operational amplifier circuits, superposition, Thevenin's and Norton's Theorems, maximum power transfer theorem. Transient circuit analysis for RC, RL, and RLC circuits. Introduction to Laplace Transforms. Concurrent registration in ECE 212 and ECE 218 is strongly encouraged. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 211. Updated Dec 2015 to reflect change to 3.0 semester hr at IIT) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 211 | MATERIALS SCIENCE | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The scientific principles determining the structure of metallic, polymeric, ceramic semiconductor and composite materials; electronic structure, atomic bonding, atomic structure, microstructure and macrostructure. The basic principles of structure-property relationships in the context of chemical, mechanical, and physical properties of materials. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MS 201.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 212 | ANALOG AND DIGITAL LABORATORY | 1.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Basic experiments with analog and digital circuits; familiarization with test and measurement equipment; combinational digital circuits; familiarization with latches, flip-flops, and shift registers; operational amplifiers; and transient effects in first-order and second-order analog circuits; PSpice software applications. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 212) (1.5 quarter hours)

IIT 213 | CIRCUIT ANALYSIS II | 6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Circuit Analysis II Sinusoidal excitation and phasors. AC steady-state circuit analysis using phasors. Complex frequency, network functions, pole-zero analysis, frequency response, and resonance. Two-port networks, transformers, mutual inductance, AC steady-state power, RMS values, introduction to three-phase systems and Fourier series. Concurrent registration in ECE 214 is strongly encouraged. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 213) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 214 | ANALOG & DIGITAL LAB II | 1.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Design-oriented experiments including counters, finite state machines, sequential logic design, impedances in AC steady-state, resonant circuits, two-port networks, and filters. A final project incorporating concepts from analog and digital circuit design will be required. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 214) (1.5 quarter hours)

IIT 218 | DIGITAL SYSTEMS | 6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Number systems and conversions, binary codes, and Boolean algebra. Switching devices, discrete and integrated digital circuits, analysis and design of combinational logic circuits. Karnaugh maps and minimization techniques. Counters and registers. Analysis and design of synchronous sequential circuits. (Taught at IIT as ECE 218) Was previously 4.5 hr, changed to 6.0 hr in August 2015 to reflect change in IIT. (6 quarter hours)

IIT 232 | DESIGN FOR INNOVATION | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Product design and development including engineering design, good versus bad design, human-centered design, sketch models and prototyping, material selection, sustainable product development, product tear down, and product architecture. Global topics encompassing intellectual property, innovative thinking, global competitiveness, business economics, and managing product development (Taught at IIT as MMAE 232). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 242 | DIGITAL COMPUTERS & COMPUTING | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Basic concepts in computer architecture, organization, and programming, including: integer and floating point number representations, memory organization, computer processor operation (the fetch/execute cycle), and computer instruction sets. Programming in machine language and assembly language with an emphasis on practical problems. Brief survey of different computer architectures. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 242) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 252 | INTRODUCTION TO DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Linear differential equations of order one. Linear differential equations of higher order. Series solutions of linear DE. Laplace transforms and their use in solving linear DE. Introduction to matrices. Systems of linear differential equations. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MATH 252) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 271 | ENGINEERING MATERIALS AND DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Mechanical behavior of metals, polymers, ceramics and composites, laboratory testing methods including tension, torsion, hardness, impact, toughness, fatigue and creep. Evaluation of structural performance in terms of material processing, service conditions and design. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 271.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 300 | INSTRUMENTATION LAB | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Basic electronic skills for scientific research. Electrical measurements, basic circuit analysis, diode and transistor circuits. Transistor and integrated amplifiers, filters, and power circuits. Basics of digital circuits, including Boolean algebra and design of logic circuits. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as PHYS 300) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 301 | COMMUNICATION ELECTRONICS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Radio frequency AM, FM, and PM transmitter and receiver principles. Design of mixers, oscillators, impedance matching networks, filters, phase-locked loops, tuned amplifiers, power amplifiers, and crystal circuits. Nonlinear effects, intermodulation distortion, and noise. Transmitter and receiver design specification. Credit will be given for either ECE 401 or ECE 409, but not for both. (Taught at IIT as ECE 401) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 302 | ADVANCED MECHANICS OF SOLIDS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of stress and strain. Torsional and bending structural elements. Energy methods and Castigliano's theorems. Curved beams and springs. Thick-walled cylinders and spinning disks. Pressure vessels. Contact stresses. Stability of columns. Stress concentration and stress intensity factors. Theories of failure, yield, and fracture. Fatigue. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 302.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 303 | MECHANICS OF SOLIDS III | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of stress and strain. Design of torsional and bending structural elements. Energy methods. Curved beams. Thick-walled cylinders, spinning disks. Stability of columns. Stress concentration, stress intensity factors, fractures toughness. Fatigue. Theories of failure and yield. Design applications. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 303.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 304 | MECHANICS OF AEROSTRUCTURES | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Loads on aircraft, and flight envelope. Stress, strain and constitutive relations. Torsion of open, closed and multi-cell tubes. Energy methods. Castigliano's theorems. Structural instability. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 304) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 305 | DYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Kinematics of particles. Kinetics of particles: Newton's laws of motion, energy; momentum. Systems of particles. Kinematics of rigid bodies. Plane motion of rigid bodies: forces and accelerations, energy, momentum. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 305.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 306 | MECHANICS OF SOLIDS AND DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of stress and strain. Torsional and bending structural elements. Energy methods and Castigliano's theorems. Curved beams and springs. Thick-walled cylinders and spinning disks. Pressure vessels, contact stresses, stability of columns, stress concentration and stress intensity factors. Theories of failure, yield and fracture. Fatigue. Design of shafts, beams and springs. Design of gears and bearings. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 306) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 307 | ELECTRODYNAMICS | 6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of circuits using distributed network elements. Response of transmission lines to transient signals. AC steady-state analysis of lossless and lossy lines. The Smith Chart as an analysis and design tool. Impedance matching methods. Vector analysis applied to static and time-varying electric and magnetic fields. Coulomb's Law, electric field intensity, flux density and Gauss's Law. Energy and potential. Biot-Savart and Ampere's Law. Maxwell's equations with applications including uniform-plane wave propagation. (Taught at IIT as ECE 307)

IIT 308 | SIGNALS AND SYSTEMS | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Time and frequency domain representation of continuous and discrete time signals. Introduction to sampling and sampling theorem. Time and frequency domain analysis of continuous and discrete linear systems. Fourier series convolution, transfer functions. Fourier transforms, Laplace transforms, and Z-transforms. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 308) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 310 | FLUID MECHANICS WITH LABORATORY | 6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Basic properties of fluids in motion. Lagrangian and Eulerian viewpoints, material derivative, streamlines, etc. Continuity, energy and linear and angular momentum equations in integral and differential forms. Integration of equations for one-dimensional flows and application to problems. Incompressible viscous flow; Navier-Stokes equations, parallel flow, pipe flow, and the Moody diagram. Introduction to laminar and turbulent boundary layers and free surface flows. Lab Component: Introduction to measurements of fluid properties and basic features of fluid flows; flow through pipes and channels, flow-induced forces on bodies; First Law of Thermodynamics; six laboratory experiments in small groups supplemented by demonstrations and films. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 310.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 311 | COMPRESSIBLE FLOW | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Regimes of compressible perfect-gas flow. Steady, quasi one-dimensional flow in passages. Effects of heat addition and friction in ducts. Design of nozzles, diffusers and wind tunnels. Simple waves and shocks in unsteady duct flow. Steady two-dimensional supersonic flow including oblique shocks and Prandtl-Meyer expansions. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 311) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 312 | AERODYNAMICS OF AEROSPACE VEHICLES | 4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of aerodynamic lift and drag forces on bodies. Potential flow calculation of lift on two-dimensional bodies: numerical solutions; source and vortex panels. Boundary layers and drag calculations. Aerodynamic characteristics of airfoils; the finite wing. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 312) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 313 | ENGINEERING ELECTRONICS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Physics of semiconductor devices. Diode operation and circuit applications. Regulated power supplies. Bipolar and field-effect transistor operating principles. Biasing techniques and stabilization. Linear equivalent circuit analysis of bipolar and field-effect transistor amplifiers. Laboratory experiments reinforce concepts. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 311) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 314 | ELECTRONIC CIRCUITS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Analysis and design of amplifier circuits. Frequency response of transistor amplifiers. Feedback amplifiers. Operational amplifiers: internal structure, characteristics and applications. Stability and compensation. Laboratory experiments reinforce concepts. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 312) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 315 | FLUID MECHANICS | 4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic properties of fluids in motion. Lagrangian and Eulerian viewpoints, materials derivative, streamlines, etc. Continuity, energy, and linear and angular momentum equations in integral and differential forms. Integration of equations for one-dimensional forms and application to problems. Incompressible viscous flow; Navier-Stokes equations, parallel flow, pipe flow, and the Moody diagram. Introduction to laminar and turbulent boundary layers and free surface flows (Taught at IIT as MMAE 313). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 316 | ELECTRIC MOTOR DRIVES | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Fundamentals of electric motor drives are studied. Applications of semiconductor switching circuits to adjustable speed drives, robotic, and traction are explored. Selection of motor drives, calculating the ratings, speed control, position control, starting, and braking are also covered. Simulation mini-projects and lab experiments are based on the lectures given. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 412.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 317 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER NETWORKS WITH LABORATORY | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Emphasis on the physical, data link, and medium access layers of the OSI architecture. Different general techniques for networking tasks, such as error control, flow control, multiplexing, switching, routing, signaling, congestion control, traffic control, scheduling will be covered along with their experimentation and implementation in a laboratory. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 407) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 318 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER NETWORKS | 4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Emphasis on the physical, data link and medium access layers of the OSI architecture. Different general techniques for networking tasks, such as error control, flow control, multiplexing, switching, routing, signaling, congestion control, traffic control, scheduling will be covered. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 408.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 319 | FUNDAMENTALS OF POWER ENGINEERING [CORRESPONDS TO ECE 319] | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Principles of electromechanical energy conversion. Fundamentals of the operation of transformers, synchronous machines, induction machines, and fractional horsepower machines. Introduction to power network models and per-unit calculations. Gauss-Siedel load flow. Lossless economic dispatch. Symmetrical three-phase faults. Laboratory considers operation, analysis and performance of motors and generators. The laboratory experiments also involve use of PC-based interactive graphical software for load flow, economic dispatch, and fault analysis. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 319) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 320 | THERMODYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to thermodynamics including properties of matter: First Law of Thermodynamics; and its use in analyzing open and closed systems; limitations of the Second Law of thermodynamics; entropy. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 320.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 321 | APPLIED THERMODYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second-law analysis of engineering systems. Chemical Equilibrium. Thermodynamics of non-reacting systems. Water-air mixtures. Phase diagrams. Thermodynamics of reacting systems. Combustion. Fuel cells. Analysis and design of refrigeration and power generation systems. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 321.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 322 | HEAT AND TRANSFER | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic laws of transport phenomena. Similarity relations and analogies. Steady-state heat conduction; heat generation and extended surfaces. Multi-dimensional and transient heat conduction. Numerical and graphical analysis. Fundamentals and empirical relations of forced and natural convection. Radiation concepts, networks, solar energy. Combined effects. Lab component: Introduction to thermal science measurements; combustion, thermodynamics cycles, conduction, convection and radiation heat transfer. Six laboratory experiments in small groups. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 322.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 323 | MICROWAVE CIRCUITS AND SYSTEMS WITH LABORATORY | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Maxwell's equations, waves in free space, metallic and dielectric waveguides, microstrips, microwave cavity resonators and components, ultra-high frequency generation and amplification. Analysis and design of microwave circuits and systems. (Taught at IIT as ECE 423) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 324 | HEAT AND MASS TRANSFER | 4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic laws of transport phenomena, including: steady-state heat conduction; multi-dimensional and transient conduction; forced internal and external convection; natural convection; heat exchanger design and analysis; fundamental concepts of radiation; shape factors and network analysis; diffusive and convective mass transfer; phase change, condensation and boiling. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 323.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 325 | ANALYSIS AND DESIGN OF INTEGRATED CIRCUITS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Contemporary analog and digital integrated circuit analysis and design techniques. Bipolar, CMOS and BICMOS IC fabrication technologies, IC Devices and Modeling, Analog ICs including multiple-transistor amplifiers, biasing circuits, active loads, reference circuits, output buffers; their frequency response, stability and feedback consideration. Digital ICs covering inverters, combinational logic gates, high-performance logic gates, sequential logics, memory and array structures. Team design projects. (Taught at IIT as ECE 425) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 329 | INTRODUCTION TO VLSI DESIGN | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Processing, fabrication, and design of Very Large Scale Integration (VLSI) circuits. MOS transistor theory, VLSI processing, circuit layout, layout design rules, layout analysis, and performance estimation. The use of computer-aided design (CAD) tools for layout design, system design in VLSI, and application-specific integrated circuits (ASICs). In the laboratory, students create, analyze, and simulate a number of circuit layouts as design projects, culminating in a term design project. (Taught at IIT as ECE 429) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 330 | ENGINEERING MEASUREMENTS | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to applications of measurement instrumentation and design of engineering experiments. Generalized characteristics of sensors and measurements systems. Signal conditioning and computer-based data acquisition and analysis. Measurement of motion, force, strain, torque, shaft power, pressure, sound, flow, temperature and heat flux. Design of experiments proposals. Team-based projects addressing application of engineering measurements to a variety of engineering problems. Effective communication of experimental results. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 430.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 331 | POWER ELECTRONICS | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Power electronic circuits and switching devices such as power transistors, MOSFET's, SCR's, GTO's, IGBT's and UJT's are studied. Their applications in AC/DC DC/DC, DC/AC and AC/AC converters as well as switching power supplies are explained. Simulation mini-projects and lab experiments emphasize power electronic circuit analysis, design and control. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 411.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 332 | DESIGN OF MECHANICAL SYSTEMS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Small-group design projects drawn from industry. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 432) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 333 | DESIGN OF THERMAL SYSTEM | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Application of principles of fluid mechanics, heat transfer, and thermodynamics to design of components of engineering systems. Examples are drawn from power generation, environmental control, air and ground transportation, and industrial processes, as well as other industries. Groups of students work on projects for integration of these components and design of thermal systems. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 433) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 334 | MATRIX ALGEBRA AND COMPLEX VARIABLES | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Vectors and matrices; matrix operations, transpose, rank, inverse; determinants; solution of linear systems; eigenvalues and eigenvectors. The complex plane; analytic functions; contour integrals; Laurent series expansions; singularities and residues. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MATH 333) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 335 | DESIGN OF MACHINE ELEMENTS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Students will gain an understanding of the basic elements used in machine design. These include the characteristics of gears, bearings, shafts, keys, couplings, fasteners, springs, electric motors, brakes and clutches, and flexible elements. Students will also learn mechanism types, linkage analysis, and kinematic synthesis. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 332.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 336 | DESIGN OF AEROSPACE VEHICLES I | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The focus of this course is on applications ranging from commercial to military and from manpowered to high-speed to long-duration aircraft. Students will examine aircraft design including aerodynamic, structural and powerplant characteristics to achieve performance goals. The quarter project is a collaborative effort in which small design groups complete the preliminary design cycle of an aircraft to achieve specific design requirements. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 436) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 337 | DIGITAL SIGNAL PROCESSING I | 4.5-6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Discrete-time system analysis, discrete convolution and correlation, Ztransforms. Realization and frequency response of discrete-time systems, properties of analog filters, IIR filter design, FIR filter design. Discrete Fourier Transforms. Applications of digital signal processing. (Taught at IIT as ECE 436-with lab, or ECE 437-without lab.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 338 | CONTROL SYSTEMS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Signal-flow graphs and block diagrams. Types of feedback control. Steady-state tracking error. Stability and Routh Hurwitz criterion. Transient response and time domain design via root locus methods. Frequency domain analysis and design using Bode and Nyquist methods. Introduction to state-variable descriptions. Credit will be given for either ECE 438 or ECE 434, but not for both. (Taught at IIT as ECE 438) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 339 | DESIGN OF AEROSPACE VEHICLES II | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Spacecraft systems design including mission analysis and astrodynamics, launch vehicle requirements, attitude determination and control, propulsion, structural design, power systems thermal management, and telecommunications. Semester-long project is focused on the integration of multiple systems into a coherent spacecraft design to achieve specific mission requirements. (Taught at IIT as MMAE 437). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 340 | FUNDAMENTALS OF SEMICONDUCTOR DEVICES | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The goals of this course are to give the student an understanding of the physical and operational principles behind important electronic devices such as transistors and solar cells. Semiconductor electron and hole concentrations, carrier transport, and carrier generation and recombination are discussed. P-N junction operation and its application to diodes, solar cells, and LEDs are developed. The field-effect transistor (FET) and bipolar junction transistor (BJT) are then discussed and their terminal operation developed. Application of transistors to bipolar and CMOS analog and digital circuits is introduced. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 430.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 341 | SPACECRAFT AND AIRCRAFT DYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Kinematics and dynamics of particles, systems of particles, and rigid bodies; translating and rotating reference frames; Euler angles. Aircraft longitudinal and lateral static stability; aircraft equations of motion. Spacecraft orbital dynamics; two-body problem classical orbital elements; orbital maneuvers. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 441) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 342 | SPACECRAFT DYNAMICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Orbital mechanics: two-body problem, Kepler's equation, classical orbital elements, and introduction to orbit perturbations. Spacecraft mission analysis: orbital maneuvers and station keeping, earth orbiting, lunar, and interplanetary missions, introduction to orbit determination. Spacecraft attitude dynamics: three-dimensional kinematics and dynamics of spacecraft, rotating reference frames and orientation angles, and spacecraft equations of motion. Spacecraft attitude stability and control: dual-spin platforms, momentum wheels, control-moment gyros, gravity gradient stabilization, introduction to spacecraft attitude determination and control. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 411) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 343 | SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND CONTROL | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Mathematical modeling of dynamic systems: linearization. Laplace transform; transfer functions; transient and steady-state response. Feedback control of single-input, single-output systems. Routh stability criterion. Root-locus method for control system design. Frequency-response methods; Bode plots; Nyquist stability criterion. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 443) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 344 | MICROCOMPUTERS | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Microprocessors and stored program controllers. Memories. Standard and special interfaces. Hardware design. Software development. Interrupt systems. Hardware and software design tools. System design and troubleshooting. Emphasis on examples (Taught at IIT as ECE 441). (6 quarter hours)

IIT 345 | COMPUTER-AIDED DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Principles of geometric modeling, finite element analysis and design optimization. Curve, surface, and solid modeling. Mesh generation, Galerkin method, and Isoparametric elements. Optimum design concepts. Numerical methods for constrained and unconstrained optimization. Applications of CAD/CAE software for mechanical design problems. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 445.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 346 | ADVANCED LOGIC DESIGN | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Design and implementation of complex digital systems under practical design constraints. Timing and electrical considerations in combinational and sequential logic design. Digital system design using Algorithmic State Machine (ASM) diagrams. Design with modern logic families and programmable logic. Design-oriented laboratory stressing the use of programmable logic devices (Taught at IIT as ECE 446). (6 quarter hours)

IIT 349 | MECHANICAL LABORATORY I | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Basic skills for engineering research are taught, which include: analog electronic circuit analysis; fundamentals of digital data acquisition; measurements of pressure, temperature, flow rate, heat transfer, and static forces and moments; and statistical data analysis. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 319.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 350 | COMPUTATIONAL MECHANICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Explores the use of numerical methods to solve engineering problems in solid mechanics, fluid mechanics and heat transfer. Topics include matrix algebra, nonlinear equations of one variable, systems of linear algebraic equations, nonlinear equations of several variables, classification of partial differential equations in engineering, the finite difference method, and the finite element method. (Taught at IIT as MMAE 350).

IIT 351 | SYSTEMS PROGRAMMING | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examines the components of sophisticated multilayer software systems, including device drivers, systems software, applications interfaces, and user interfaces. Explores the design and development of interrupt-driven and event-driven software. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as CS 351.)

IIT 352 | AEROSPACE PROPULSION | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Analysis and performance of various jet and rocket propulsive devices. Foundations of propulsion theory. Design and analysis of inlets, compressors, combustion chambers, and other elements of propulsive devices. Emphasis is placed on mobile power plants for aerospace applications. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 452) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 354 | AIRCRAFT DESIGN I | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Aircraft design including aerodynamic, structural, and power plant characteristics to achieve performance goals. Focus on applications ranging from commercial to military and from manpowered to high-speed to long-duration aircraft. Semester project is a collaborative effort in which small design groups complete the preliminary design cycle of an aircraft to achieve specific design requirements. (Taught at IIT as MMAE 414).

IIT 355 | CARDIOVASCULAR FLUID MECHANICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Anatomy of the cardiovascular system. Scaling principles. Lumped parameter, one-dimensional linear and nonlinear wave propagation, and three-dimensional modeling techniques applied to simulate blood flow in the cardiovascular system. Steady and pulsatile flow in rigid and elastic tubes. Form and function of blood, blood vessels, and the heart from an engineering perspective. Sensing, feedback, and control of the circulation. Possible project using custom software to run blood flow simulations (Taught at IIT as MMAE 455). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 356 | DIGITAL SIGNAL PROCESSING I WITH LABORATORY | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Discrete-time system analysis, discrete convolution and correlation, Z-transforms. Realization and frequency response of discrete-time systems, properties of analog filters, IIR filter design, FIR filter design. Discrete Fourier Transforms. Applications of digital signal processing. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 436.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 359 | OBJECT-ORIENTED PROGRAMMING AND COMPUTER SIMULATION | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The use of object-oriented programming to develop computer simulations of engineering problems. Programming with the C++ language in a UNIX environment. OOP concepts including classes, inheritance, and polymorphism. Programming with classes, inheritance, and polymorphism. Programming with class libraries. Event-driven simulation techniques in an object-oriented environment. Programming projects will include the development of a simulator for an engineering application. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 449.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 362 | SPACECRAFT DESIGN I | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Launch vehicle design including a system engineering, pay-load mission definition, propulsion and staging, structural design, trajectory analysis and guidance, launch window considerations, navigation and attitude determination, booster re-entry, range safety, and reliability. Semester-long project is focused on the integration of multiple systems into a coherent launch vehicle design to achieve specific mission requirements. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 412.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 363 | SPACECRAFT DESIGN II | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Spacecraft systems design including real world mission analysis and orbit design, launch vehicle requirements, attitude determination and control, propulsion, structural design, power systems thermal management, and telecommunications. Semester-long project is focused on the integration of multiple systems into a coherent spacecraft design to achieve specific mission requirements. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 413.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 364 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS FOR ELECTRICAL AND COMPUTER ENGINEERS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the introductory treatment of probability theory including: axioms of probability, discrete and continuous random variables, random vectors, marginal, joint, conditional and cumulative probability distributions, moment generating functions, expectations, and correlations. Also covered are sums of random variables, central limit theorem, sample means, and parameter estimation. Furthermore, random processes and random signals are covered. Examples and applications are drawn from problems of importance to electrical and computer engineers. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MATH 374.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 365 | AEROSPACE LABORATORY I | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Basic skills for engineering research are taught, which include: analog electronic circuit analysis, fundamentals of digital data acquisition, measurements of pressure, temperature, flow rate, heat transfer, and static forces and moments; statistical data analysis. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 315.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 366 | AEROSPACE LABORATORY II | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Advanced skills for engineering research are taught, which include experiments with digital electronic circuit analysis, dynamic data acquisition techniques, fundamentals of fluid power system design, GPS and inertial guidance systems, air-breathing propulsion, and fly-by-wire control. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 415.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 369 | MECHANICAL LABORATORY II | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Laboratory testing methods including solid mechanics: tension, torsion, hardness, impact, toughness, fatigue and creep; heat and mass transfer: conduction, fins, convection, radiation, diffusion; vibrations and control. Design of experiments. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 419.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 371 | ENGINEERING MATERIALS AND DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Mechanical behavior of metals, polymers, ceramics and composites, laboratory testing methods including tension, torsion, hardness, impact, toughness, fatigue and creep. Evaluation of structural performance in terms of material processing, service conditions and design. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 371) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 372 | HEALTH PHYSICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course covers topics in Radiation Physics, including general aspects of radioactivity, radioactive series decay, alpha particle energies, beta decays, electron capture, gamma ray emission, interaction of radiation with matter, two-particle collisions, elastic scattering, interaction of heavy charged particles with matter, Coulomb force interactions, radiative stopping power, collision stopping power for heavy charged particles, interaction of light charged particles with matter, and bremsstrahlung radiation (Taught at IIT as PHYS 571) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 373 | HEALTH PHYSICS II | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Continuation of the basic health physics sequence, including neutron production and interaction with matter; methods of radiation detection; radiation dosimetry; chemical and biological effects of radiation; radiation protection standards; shielding; dosimetric models; accelerator, reactor and medical health physics. (Taught at IIT as PHYS 572) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 374 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Elementary probability theory including discrete and continuous distributions, sampling, estimation, confidence intervals, hypothesis testing, and linear regression. Credit not granted for both MATH 474 and MATH 475. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MATH 474) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 375 | AEROSPACE MATERIALS LAB | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Taught at IIT as MMAE 372. (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 376 | DIGITAL & DATA COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS | 4.5-6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to Amplitude, Phase, and Frequency modulation systems. Multiplexing and Multi-Access Schemes; Spectral design considerations. Sampling theorem. Channel capacity, entropy; Quantization, wave shaping, and Inter-Symbol Interference (ISI), Matched filters, Digital source encoding, Pulse Modulation systems. Design for spectral efficiency and interference control. Probability of error analysis, Analysis and design of digital modulators and detectors. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 403, without lab, or ECE 405, with laboratory.)

IIT 378 | POWER SYSTEMS ANALYSIS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Transmission systems analysis and design. Large scale network analysis using Newton-Raphson load flow. Unsymmetrical short-circuit studies. Detailed consideration of the swing equation and the equal-area criterion for power system stability studies. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 418.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 379 | POWER SYSTEMS ANALYSIS WITH LABORATORY | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Transmission systems analysis and design. Large scale network analysis using Newton-Raphson load flow. Unsymmetrical short-circuit studies. Detailed consideration of the swing equation and the equal-area criterion for power system stability studies. Use of commercial power system analysis tool to enhance understanding in the laboratory. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 419.) (6 quarter hours)

IIT 380 | ANALYTICAL METHODS IN POWER SYSTEMS | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Fundamentals of power systems operation and planning. Economic operation of power systems with consideration of transmission losses. Design of reliable power systems, power systems security analysis, optimal scheduling of power generation, estimation of power system state. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as ECE 420.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 385 | MANUFACTURING PROCESSES | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Principles of material forming and removal processes and equipment. Force and power requirements, surface integrity, final properties and dimensional accuracy as influenced by material properties and process variables. Design for manufacturing. Factors influencing choice of manufacturing process. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as MMAE 485.) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 386 | COMPUTER ORGANIZATION AND DESIGN | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course covers basic concepts and state-of-the-art developments in computer architecture: computer technology, performance measures, instruction set design, computer arithmetic, controller and datapath design, memory systems, pipelining, array processing, parallel processing, multiprocessing, abstract analysis models, input-output systems, relationship between computer design and application requirements, and cost/performance trade-offs. Students will complete a project implementing a version of multiple-cycle processor. Credit will be given for either ECE 485 or CS 470, but not both (Taught at IIT as ECE 485). (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 387 | IIT ELECTIVE | 4.5-6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Elective courses taken at IIT with permission of advisor. (variable credit)

IIT 391 | IIT CO-OP | 4-18 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The student will participate in on-site or off-site activity (including, but not limited to, production or research activity). The student will be responsible for, e.g., designing, testing and deploying hardware or software, and may be involved in production level issues. Typically, this position will be a coop at some institution designated by IIT. (variable credit)

IIT 397 | INTER-PROFESSIONAL PROJECT | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Interprofessional projects allow students to learn teamwork, leadership and project management skills while working in multidisciplinary teams on projects involving technical, ethical, environmental, economic, public policy and legal issues. IPRO project teams are typically comprised of six to ten students from sophomore through graduate level and from all disciplines, who can broadly contribute to a project effort. While every effort will be made to accommodate students' first choices, it may be necessary to balance students across all projects scheduled for the semester or to consolidate students into fewer projects to meet minimum team requirements. Specific rules about selection of IPRP projects may apply in certain degree programs. Some projects may carry humanities or social sciences credit. Students must consult the lead faculty member for the project and their faculty adviser before registering for a project. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as IPRO 497; formerly IPRO 397) (4.5 quarter hours)

IIT 398 | INTER-PROFESSIONAL PROJECT | 4.5 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Interprofessional projects allow students to learn teamwork, leadership and project management skills while working in multidisciplinary teams on projects involving technical, ethical, environmental, economic, public policy and legal issues. IPRO project teams are typically comprised of six to ten students from sophomore through graduate level and from all disciplines, who can broadly contribute to a project effort. While every effort will be made to accommodate students' first choices, it may be necessary to balance students across all projects scheduled for the semester or to consolidate students into fewer projects to meet minimum team requirements. Specific rules about selection of IPRP projects may apply in certain degree programs. Some projects may carry humanities or social sciences credit. Students must consult the lead faculty member for the project and their faculty adviser before registering for a project. (Taught at Illinois Institute of Technology as IPRO 497) (4.5 quarter hours)

Illustration (ILL)

ILL 200 | ILLUSTRATION FOUNDATIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will focus on improving the basic skills needed for creating concept art and storyboards for animation and games. Areas of focus include practical perspective, technical rendering, observational drawing and color theory. These skills will be applied in basic prototyping projects. GD 105 or ART 105 or ANI 105 or DES 141 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 206 | HISTORY OF COMICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover the history of the art form collectively known as "comics" –mechanically reproduced graphic storytelling–which includes comic strips, comic books, graphic novels, Japanese manga and online comics. Students will be introduced to the evolution of the art form from 18th century precursors, to late 19th century newspaper pages, to the 20th century comic book, through today's sophisticated graphic novels. The course will devote considerable time to comics of other cultures, with special emphasis on Japan and Europe. It will also examine the relationship of comics to culture at large, and the struggle of underground and alternative comic artists to explore adult subjects such as politics and gender.

ILL 210 | DIGITAL ILLUSTRATION I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to illustration development in image, line and photography, combining computer applications and hand-rendered approaches.
GD 105 or ART 105 or ANI 105 or DES 141 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 211 | INTERMEDIATE DIGITAL ILLUSTRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Intermediate practice for illustration development in image, line and photography, combining computer applications and hand-rendered approaches, will be studied.

GD 105 or ART 105 or ANI 105 or DES 141 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 220 | MAKING COMICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the components of graphic narrative, including superhero and alternative comics, comic strips, manga, and graphic novels. Students will learn fundamental materials and techniques, including penciling and inking, digital painting and coloring, and publishing, and create their own graphic narratives. The course will also provide an overview of the history of comics and graphic storytelling, and their relation and importance to the art of animation.

ART 106, ILL 200, or DES 111 is a prerequisite for this course.

ILL 321 | MAKING COMICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of Making Comics, this course explores advanced aspects of writing and drawing one's own narratives in long-form sequential art. The focus is on honing individual approaches to storytelling, media, color, lettering and layout. Students will expand their knowledge of the comics canon by reading and discussing contemporary works. Students will synthesize initial exercises and assignments into a final long-form project. Self publishing and production techniques will also be introduced.

ILL 220 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 330 | CHILDREN'S BOOK ILLUSTRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the art and business of illustrating children's books. It will cover the business of illustration for the child and young adult book markets, and the roles of the agent, publisher, author, and artist. Students will experience the complete production process, from analyzing the manuscript, to choosing what to illustrate from the text, thumbnails, character and setting design, layout, comps, to finished artwork. Students will experiment with the art materials of their choice, and work towards developing an individual artistic style.

ART 106 or ILL 200 or GD 210 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 340 | POSTER ILLUSTRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the art of creating effective illustrated posters. Students will begin with the conceptual process, including identifying the poster's purpose, using visual metaphor to represent ideas, and choosing creative imagery to attract attention. They will then explore the production process from thumbnails, layout, choosing a color scheme, incorporating text, comps, to finished artwork, and color separation. Students will experiment with the art materials of their choice, and work towards developing an individual artistic style.

ART 106 or ILL 200 or GD 210 is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 420 | MAKING COMICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the components of graphic narrative, including superhero and alternative comics, comic strips, manga, and graphic novels. Students will learn fundamental materials and techniques, including penciling and inking, digital painting and coloring, and publishing, and create their own graphic narratives. The course will also provide an overview of the history of comics and graphic storytelling, and their relation and importance to the art of animation.

ANI 446, ANI 425, ANI 105, GD 105, DES 141, or ART 105 (or equivalent 2D design experience) is a prerequisite for this class.

ILL 421 | MAKING COMICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of Making Comics, this course explores advanced aspects of writing and drawing one's own narratives in long-form sequential art. The focus is on honing individual approaches to storytelling, media, color, lettering and layout. Students will expand their knowledge of the comics canon by reading and discussing contemporary works. Students will synthesize initial exercises and assignments into a final long-form project. Self publishing and production techniques will also be introduced.

ILL 420 is a prerequisite for this class.

Information Systems (IS)

IS 201 | INTRODUCTION TO INFORMATION SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course demonstrates how information is used by organizations to conduct business and solve problems. This course presents information systems principles and demonstrates how they form an integral part of modern organizations. Topics include systems concepts; organizational processes; technological aspects of information systems; the Internet; IT security and ethical issues; database management; and systems development life cycle. In addition, students familiarize themselves with the DePaul computing environment and demonstrate competency at navigating that environment. PREREQUISITE(S): none.

IS 208 | INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY, ECONOMY AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to emerging information technologies and their impact on modern society. This course discusses the latest technologies used in the evolving IT environment and how these technologies are changing the modern world. Emphasis is placed on investigating issues using a variety of sources, case studies, and writing. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 215 | ANALYSIS AND DESIGN TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course presents a structured approach to analysis and design of an information system for a business. The systems development life cycle will be defined and described. Process descriptions, user and task analysis for interface development, prototyping, data flow and entity relationship diagramming will be presented. Case studies that promote critical-thinking skills provide the context for these techniques. Formerly IT 215. PREREQUISITE(S): none.

IS 250 | COMPUTING IN DIGITAL COMMERCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to digital commerce and computing technologies behind it. Digital innovations, development methodology, business strategies, and impact of computing are discussed. This course focuses on how computational thinking is applied in digital commerce contexts.

IS 280 | COMMUNICATION FOR THE GLOBAL IT PROFESSIONAL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Development of professional communication and collaboration skills for the global IT workplace. Students cultivate proficiency with traditional in-person and electronic communications, modeling the conflict resolution, personal initiative, and personal presentation behaviors necessary for career advancement. Students become comfortable users of virtual communication and collaboration toolsets such as VoIP, collaborative editors, web presentation software, virtual team portals, and virtual scheduling tools. PREREQUISITE(S): WRD 104. For students required to take LSP 120, it is also a prerequisite.

IS 324 | ENTERPRISE ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the characteristics, selection, implementation and management of enterprise architecture frameworks, focusing primarily on the evaluation and planning of information systems from a top-down perspective. Major topics include enterprise architecture, Web 2.0, Enterprise 2.0, social media and networking, software as a service, content management systems, cloud computing, and portals; each is studied in terms of its characteristics and potential applications within an organization.

IS 215 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 331 | FUNDAMENTALS OF DIGITAL PRODUCT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the creation and management of intangible technology products and services throughout the entire product management lifecycle. The benefits of the product management process along with the role of the Product Manager throughout the digital product lifecycle, main tasks, key reports and relationships, and the relationship between product management and product marketing will be examined. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 335 | INTRODUCTION TO ORGANIZATIONAL MODELING FOR DIGITAL TRANSFORMATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to analysis and modeling of organizational goals, workflows, users and data for digital transformation enabled by information systems. The emphasis is placed on how an organization should respond to its business challenges with a strategy and transformational organizational workflows. Students will learn how to design workflows and metrics using Business Process Model and Notation (BPMN) for different organizational and contextual factors. Process simulation software is used to evaluate workflow designs.

IS 215 is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 344 | IT AUDITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Management and boards continue to recognize the importance of effectively managing information technology (IT) assets - to meet business objectives and to thoughtfully manage IT related business risks. This course examines the key principles related to auditing information technology processes and related controls and is designed to meet the ever increasing needs of IT audit and IT governance professionals. In addition, this course aids in the preparation for the Certified Information Systems Auditor (CISA) exam. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 352 | INTRODUCTION TO BUSINESS INTELLIGENCE AND ANALYTICS SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to systems for business intelligence and analytics applications. The emphasis is placed on understanding end-user needs, technology life cycles, platforms, tools, vendors, and services in the market. Survey of data lake, data warehouse, data discovery, and visualization tools. Methodologies for analysis, design, and implementation of business intelligence and analytics systems. Discussions on data management and alignment between corporate and local-unit needs. Case studies and lab activities to understand the characteristics of tools and their business impact.

IS 356 | SYSTEMS THINKING FOR BUSINESS DYNAMICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to system thinking and system dynamics modeling for the analysis of organizational strategy and decision making. It will teach how to use systems thinking and modeling to visualize and analyze an organization in terms of the structures and policies that create dynamics and regulate performance. This is a conceptual as well as a hands-on course that will draw on system dynamics modeling and simulation concept and tools as well as real-world case studies to explain management of organizational dynamics. Learnings from this course can be applied for analyzing organizations in different industries.

IS 215 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 360 | SYSTEMS FOR CLOUD COMPUTING AND BIG DATA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course surveys the basic system characteristics of cloud-based business applications and large-scale, non-traditional data management technologies such as Hadoop and NoSQL. Key concepts, benefits and challenges, domains of managerial applications are discussed. Students understand firsthand the features of cloud and big data technologies through lab sessions. Students will work within a project team following the principles of project management to analyze the needs of a firm, to propose the functionality of a cloud-based data management application, and to present a detailed implementation plan for the system with its cost-benefit analysis.

IT 240 is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 370 | IT APPLICATIONS IN BUSINESS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of applications of Information Technology within business and non-profit organizations, with emphasis upon the following topics: ways managers, work groups, and organizations acquire and use information; typical business applications and their deployment in organizations; and information flows within common business systems. Additional topics include the role and structure of supply chains, IT support for Web-enabled enterprises, and global considerations for information system design. Coverage also includes standards for software acquisition, including evaluation of commercial software products. An introduction to the major principles of decision support and expert systems, business intelligence, and knowledge management, as well as risk, security, and disaster recovery within an organizational setting are also covered. PREREQUISITE(S): IS 215 or IS 201.

IS 371 | INTRODUCTION TO IT SYSTEM MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on implementation and post-implementation support for information systems. Topics include testing, deployment, user training, help desk, software upgrades, and staffing for support teams. Case studies and team projects.

IS 215 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 372 | SOFTWARE PROJECT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the concept and techniques of project management (PM) for a broad range of systems, including those in the web/mobile application development environment. Topics include PM processes, methodologies, communications, resource management, organizational factors, stakeholder management, project manager responsibilities, team building, and risk management. An emphasis is placed on the agile approach and its comparison with the waterfall approach. Tools and techniques for project estimating and scheduling will be presented. Case study and group projects.

IS 215 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 373 | INTRODUCTION TO ENTERPRISE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A course on technical and management aspects of enterprise systems. It incorporates hands-on experience on enterprise resource planning (ERP) systems. Topics include: characteristics and selection of ERP systems, ERP implementation, customer relationship management (CRM), supply chain management (SCM), ERP systems administration, cloud computing and ERP, and enterprise integration with ERP.

IS 335

IS 375 | OBJECT-ORIENTED ANALYSIS AND DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on object-oriented modeling techniques for analysis and design. Emphasis will be on the creation of well-designed, robust and maintainable software systems. UML (Unified Modeling Language) will be examined for modeling the system. Case studies will promote critical-thinking skills as well as provide the foundation for a student project that incorporates the skills attained throughout the quarter.

IS 215 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 376 | INFORMATION SYSTEMS PROJECT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This senior project course requires students to apply prior learning in project management and systems development lifecycle by developing a complete system from business case, analysis, and design, through implementation strategies. Team project, documentation, presentation, the use of development as well as project management tools will be emphasized.

IS 372 is the prerequisite for this class

IS 379 | VIRTUAL SOFTWARE TEAMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Fundamentals of software development in a virtual environment (if possible with students from different countries). Using an open source development environment; working across time, language, and culture; effective use of collaborative tools. PREREQUISITE(S): IS 215 or program development experience.

IS 380 | ESSENTIALS OF TECHNOLOGY ENTREPRENEURSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the entrepreneurial process within technology intensive ventures. Roles of entrepreneurs and their start-up teams. Suitable business models and strategies. Legal issues and intellectual property. Financial issues and venture resources. Role of the customer and entrepreneurial marketing. Course will include group case studies of technology entrepreneurial ventures. Students will work in teams to develop a marketing plan and a business plan for a technology-intensive entrepreneurial venture of their choice. Course requires a prior foundational understanding of IT as is typically developed by the start of junior year.

IS 381 | INTEGRATION OF BUSINESS PROCESSES USING ERP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This workshop describes business process integration using the SAP S/4HANA. It introduces students to financial and management accounting, enterprise asset management, procurement, manufacturing, sales and distribution, warehouse management, human resources, and project management components of SAP S/4HANA and how they are integrated.

IS 335 and IS 373 are prerequisites for this course.

IS 382 | INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL ISSUES IN INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the legal standards to which people and organizations are held under laws and regulations that concern computing and information technology. Topics include government and laws, business regulations, healthcare regulations, education regulations, data breach reporting and notification, privacy laws, laws of search and seizure, freedom of speech and association, defamation, cyber crimes, contracts, and intellectual property. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 386 | INTRODUCTION TO CYBERSECURITY LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces a range of topics related to the intersection of law and cybersecurity. Topics include federal and state compliance, contracts, legal duties, theories of civil liability, administrative and criminal prosecutions, evidence, and adequacy of legal remedies.

IS 387 | INTRO TO DATA PRIVACY LAW:US & EU | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces both U.S. data privacy law and EU data privacy law. It covers technology concepts/privacy principles relevant to the law. The U.S. portion primarily focuses on a variety of U.S. statutes (e.g., FTC Act, GLBA, HIPAA, FCRA, FERPA, BSA, COPPA, CAN-SPAM, etc.) and some state law. The EU portion particularly focuses on the EU GDPR (General Data Protection Regulation). The course serves as helpful background for CIPP/US and CIPP/E (Certified Information Privacy Professional US and Europe).

IS 396 | TOPICS IN INFORMATION SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and will vary with each quarter. See syllabus.

IS 398 | INTRODUCTION TO IS MANAGEMENT SEMINAR | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

This one-credit seminar examines the concepts of information and technology management and career options in this field. Students will assess their own interests and skill requirements for various careers. They will also analyze the impacts of IS trends and emerging technologies on their career choices. All new IS master's students are required to take this seminar as the first course. PREREQUISITE(S): None (1 quarter hour)

Status as a Graduate student in the Information Systems Prerequisite Phase is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable credit. Prerequisite(s): None.

IS 400 | INTRODUCTION TO IS MANAGEMENT SEMINAR | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This one-credit seminar examines the concepts of information and technology management and career options in this field. Students will assess their own interests and skill requirements for various careers. They will also analyze the impacts of IS trends and emerging technologies on their career choices. All new IS master's students are required to take this seminar as the first course. PREREQUISITE(S): None (1 quarter hour)

IS 411 | INTRODUCTION TO PROGRAMMING FOR BUSINESS APPLICATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to the features and characteristics of programming languages for business application systems. Students will learn the basic concepts of programming such as variables, conditions, loops, functions, classes, and libraries by using a few common programming languages. The emphasis is placed on the business contexts and examples of those programming concepts. Tools for different integrated development environment are examined.

IS 421 | SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course focuses on traditional and contemporary systems analysis and design methodologies, emphasizing developing competency in a wide range of modeling techniques. Specific topics include: overview of the software development environment and project management; determining requirements; process modeling, including data flow diagrams and use cases; logic modeling including decision tables, UML diagrams; introduction to database designs; and low-code application development.

IS 422 | SYSTEM DESIGN, IMPLEMENTATION, AND MAINTENANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Course focus is on both traditional and object oriented systems design. Specific topics include: database design, including logical and physical design; Entity-Relationship diagrams, class diagrams, form and report design; interface and dialogue design; design specifications, including structure charts and prototypes; designing for LANs and distributed systems, as well as the Internet; system implementation, including parallel and phased implementation, testing, documentation, and user training; system maintenance, including types of maintenance, controlling and coordinating maintenance requests, and configuration management. Course ends with a multi-week case study applying the principles from both this course and IS 421, Systems Analysis.

IS 421 and CSC 451 are prerequisites for this class.

IS 424 | ENTERPRISE INFRASTRUCTURE (FORMERLY ECT 424) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to modern infrastructure and the evolving technology environment. Major topics include: computer networks, Internet infrastructure, Web 2.0, Enterprise 2.0, social media and networking, software as a service, content management systems, cloud computing, and portal.

IS 430 | FUNDAMENTALS OF IT PROJECT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course concentrates on monitoring, managing and controlling assets and resources on a single IT project. Topics covered are project methodologies; risk management; procurement and contract management; time and cost estimating; controlling and tracking techniques; quality assurance; testing and audit. Students will use common project management software for resource allocation and balancing. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 431 | DIGITAL PRODUCT DEVELOPMENT AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the central role of the Product Manager in creating and sustaining compelling products and services throughout the product lifecycle. Special emphasis is placed on the creation and management of intangible technology products and services throughout the entire product management lifecycle. Product managers act as the focal point for value creation within their organizations leading cross functional product activities from the conception of an idea to the ultimate product retirement. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 433 | INFORMATION SECURITY MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Managing information assets and the security function. Emphasis on managing security-related risk, as well as the process of developing, implementing, and maintaining organizational policies, standards, procedures, and guidelines as they relate to security. Role of the CISO. Identifying and evaluating information assets, threats, and vulnerabilities. Quantitative and qualitative risk analysis, risk mitigation, residual risk, and risk resolution, as they relate to information security. Incident response. Consideration of the role and implementation of security controls during the process of analysis, design, and development. The application of policy development principles to security risk management. Introduction to compliance, as well as the CISSP domains. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 435 | ORGANIZATION MODELING FOR DIGITAL TRANSFORMATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course explores contemporary approaches to analyzing and modeling organizational problems, processes, workflow, users and data for digital transformation. The emphasis is on the initial stages of analysis where the root causes of problems are identified, formulated and modeled. Students will acquire an array of modeling skills and be able to prescribe the proper modeling approach based on a variety of organizational and contextual factors. Business process modeling, management and metrics will be covered. Object-oriented and user-centered approaches will be introduced.

IS 421 or SE 430 is a prerequisite for this class

IS 436 | SOCIAL MARKETING AND SOCIAL NETWORKING APPLICATIONS (FORMERLY ECT 436) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Online social media and culture, online social marketing concepts, online social networking applications and their design/development. Students develop dynamic web sites and applications on social networking platforms using server-side programming technology to meet strategic marketing goals.

IS 440 | COLLABORATIVE TECHNOLOGIES FOR LEADING PROJECTS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Study of the process of virtual teaming with emphasis on facilitation of different time project activities and facilitation of same time meetings. Students will learn how small group psychology and group communication theories inform specific behaviors in the design and leadership of meetings. Several meeting types including information briefing, focus group, document writing, decision making, requirements gathering, and teaching/training will be explored. In addition, the course surveys current collaboration technologies and discusses how to select among those technologies usability and fit to purpose of a meeting agenda. DL students may be required to schedule same time sessions with the instructor and other DL students; see current quarter syllabus for more information on this point. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 444 | IT AUDITING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Management and boards continue to recognize the importance of effectively managing information technology (IT) assets - to meet business objectives and to thoughtfully manage IT related business risks. This course examines the key principles related to auditing information technology processes and related controls and is designed to meet the ever increasing needs of IT audit and IT governance professionals. In addition, this course aids in the preparation for the Certified Information Systems Auditor (CISA) exam. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 451 | DATABASE DESIGN FOR INFORMATION SYSTEMS (FORMERLY CSC 451) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Requirement analysis, conceptual design, logical design and implementation of relational databases. Emphasis will be on E-R modeling and E-R mapping, along with basic normalization and SQL for database implementation. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 452 | BIG DATA & THE INTERNET OF THINGS (IoT) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course surveys system design concepts, techniques, and algorithms in Machine to Machine (M2M), Internet of Things (IoT), and Internet of Everything (IoE). Topics covered include system architecture for big data, sensors and embedded technologies, IoT architecture, consumer vs. industrial IoT, wearable and mobile systems, tracking systems, IoT and big data analytics, market dynamics and entrepreneurial opportunities. Special emphasis is placed on identifying best practices in using big data and IoT through case studies and hands-on exercises. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 455 | ELECTRONIC BUSINESS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An introduction to electronic business. The topics include business models, technologies, business and social impact of e-business. It explores the tools, skills, business and social implications of emerging electronic business. In addition to acquiring basic skills for identifying electronic business opportunities and creating a presence in the online marketplace, the student reexamines fundamental processes of business as they are performed in cyberspace in contrast to the marketplace. This helps them understand changes as the cyberspace grows increasingly important in the global economy. PREREQUISITE(S): None. For Kellstadt students or students pursuing the MS in Business Information Technology only.

Status as a MS-Business Information Technology student or Kellstadt student is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 456 | SYSTEMS THINKING PERSPECTIVE FOR UNDERSTANDING BUSINESS DYNAMICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces students to systems thinking and system dynamics modeling for the analysis of business strategy and decision making. Students will learn how to use systems thinking and modeling to visualize and analyze organizations and institutions in terms of the structures and policies that create dynamics and regulate performance. The course will draw on system dynamics modeling and simulation concepts and tools as well as real-world case studies to explain the management of business dynamics.

IS 421 is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 460 | ENTERPRISE CLOUD COMPUTING (FORMERLY IS 536) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Cloud concepts, architecture, and service management, with particular emphasis upon identifying and analyzing potential business applications of cloud computing. Students will conduct feasibility studies, detailing the advantages and disadvantages of implementing a cloud computing platform for specific applications, with particular emphasis upon financial considerations, business benefits, and security risks. Students will develop the ability to evaluate alternatives and effectively argue in favor of their choices within the cloud computing knowledge domain. They will be able to define, apply, and defend the need for standards and best practices. Students will work within a project team following the principles of project management to design, build, and implement cloud applications.

IS 468 | ENTERPRISE SYSTEMS (FORMERLY IS 560) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An introduction to enterprise systems for data and process integration, including ERP systems. Topics include the requirements of enterprise systems, application architecture, tools, and functionality of leading enterprise systems, life cycle and methodologies for systems integration, selection, and implementation strategies. Also addressed are emerging trends for enterprise systems and relationship among component systems.

IS 478 | INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY CONSULTING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on how IT consulting works in the industry. The emphasis is on examining the models, techniques, and skill development for providing effective IT consulting services. The course examines the structure of IT consulting markets; leading IT consulting practices; models and approaches for providing internal IT consulting services; sourcing strategies, evaluation of RFPs and response process contract formulation, client relations and project management; knowledge management and collaboration and IT strategies. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 482 | LEGAL RESPONSIBILITIES IN INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the legal standards to which people and organizations are held under laws and regulations that concern computing and information technology. This course is a complement to CNS 477, which focuses on governance policies and business costs. Topics include government and laws, business regulations, healthcare regulations, education regulations, data breach reporting and notification, privacy laws, laws of search and seizure, freedom of speech and association, defamation, cyber crimes, contracts, and intellectual property. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 483 | INFORMATION SERVICES AND OPERATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the operational aspects of information systems in organizations by examining the concepts, tools and techniques available to IS professionals responsible for the delivery of IT services. Topics include the organization of the IT services; the procurement of hardware, software and vendor services; operation of data centers, help desks and user training, the development and use of RFPs (Request for Proposals) and SLAs (Service Level Agreements), the integration of services and operations with application development project needs, and the role of capital and operating budgets. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of five or more SoC MS level courses is required.

Completion of five or more School of Computing MS level courses is required.

IS 485 | REQUIREMENTS ELICITATION, ANALYSIS, AND SPECIFICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the concepts and skills needed to elicit, analyze, specify, and manage requirements for a software or systems level project. Students will learn to identify and work with stakeholders through conducting a variety of requirements gathering techniques including interviewing, surveying, ethnography, and Joint Application Design (JAD) sessions, to identify and analyze requirements conflicts and negotiate solutions, to model requirements and specify them in unambiguous ways, and to manage requirements throughout the software lifecycle using change controls, traceability, and impact analysis techniques. The requirements process will be examined in both traditional and agile environments. Current topics such as requirements for product lines or distributed development teams will also be explored as time permits. A student may not take both SE 482 and IS 485 for credit toward a degree. IS 422 or IS 430 or PM 430 are prerequisites for this class

IS 486 | CYBERSECURITY LAW | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course discusses a range of topics related to the intersection of law and cybersecurity. Topics include federal and state compliance, contracts, legal duties, theories of civil liability, administrative and criminal prosecutions, evidence, and adequacy of legal remedies. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IS 487 | DATA PRIVACY LAW: US & EU | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course surveys both U.S. data privacy law and EU data privacy law. It covers technology concepts/privacy principles relevant to the law. The U.S. portion primarily focuses on a variety of U.S. statutes (e.g., FTC Act, GLBA, HIPAA, FCRA, FERPA, BSA, COPPA, CAN-SPAM, etc.) and some state law. The EU portion particularly focuses on the EU GDPR (General Data Protection Regulation). The course serves as helpful background for CIPP/US and CIPP/E (Certified Information Privacy Professional US and Europe).

IS 500 | INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Managing people ethically and effectively by applying a broad range of creative approaches to individual and team leadership within an Information Technology context. Leadership methods studied include trait-based, skills-based, situational, contingency theory, path-goal theory, leader-member exchange theory, transformational, psychodynamic, and authentic leadership, as well as team leadership and the international, cultural, and ethical dimensions of leadership. Students assess their leadership styles and design individualized development plans to strengthen existing skills and expand IT leadership capabilities by incorporating additional leadership dimensions.

IS 430 or PM 430 or SE 477 is a prerequisite for this class

IS 505 | BUSINESS CONTINUITY/DISASTER RECOVERY THEORIES AND STRATEGIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the knowledge necessary for an organization to prepare for a variety of major disruptions (floods, earthquakes, terrorist attacks, etc.). The goal is survival of the organization and its daily workflow despite major disruption. Students learn to analyze and prioritize risks and determine criticality ratings that are used to determine survival strategies. Students also learn how to organize employees to respond to a major disruption and how to document recovery plans. Course content includes coverage of current industry trends, as well as planning for the survival of Information Technology functions within an organization.

IS 506 | BUSINESS CONTINUITY/DISASTER RECOVERY MANAGEMENT AND TACTICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course prepares students to lead an organization's business continuity and disaster recovery plans. Students learn the methodology needed to organize this function within an organization, evaluate an organization's business continuity and disaster recovery program according to established industry standards, and conduct a variety of quick-recovery drills. Students also focus upon industry-related human resources issues, crisis communications, and policies and procedures for setting up a command center. Course content includes coverage of current industry trends, as well as managing the survival of Information Technology functions within an organization.

IS 505 is the prerequisite for this classIS 511 | SOCIAL ISSUES OF COMPUTING | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course aims to provide a broad survey of the individual, organizational, and cultural impacts of computers and to stimulate reflection upon the social and ethical issues provoked by current and projected uses of computers. Some topics include an in-depth look at computers as they relate to workplaces, communities, public policy, legal issues, education, privacy, and moral values. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

IS 531 | DIGITAL INNOVATION STRATEGIES, PROCESSES AND TOOLS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides students with the core and fundamental concepts of digital innovation strategies, processes, and tools. The course will cover how companies create and execute a digital innovation strategy. Topics include innovation key concepts and how to apply them, innovation strategies and models, analysis of current innovation state and design of future innovation state, key elements of an innovation initiative and programs, the role of design thinking, and product road map.

IS 430IS 535 | INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY INVESTMENT FINANCIAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course focuses on the application of financial analysis and decision-making approaches to aid information technology investment decisions at the operational, project, tactical and strategic levels. Students will learn how to apply a variety of financial methods -- breakeven analysis, present value analysis, profitability index, and return on investment to various IT investment decisions. The course will also address cost benefit analysis, outsourcing, balanced scorecard, and multi-factor scoring, benchmarking, and IT investment portfolio methods. These techniques will prepare students to manage capital budgets, acquisition of system and application software, hardware, personnel, and professional services at project and system levels as well as enterprise investment portfolio.

SE 477 or IS 565 or ACC 500 or IS 430 or PM 430 or ECT 455 is a prerequisite for this class.IS 540 | GLOBAL INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A study of the hardware, software, and techniques for using virtual information technologies to support teams working in a distributed, virtual, or global environments. Topics include software survey and evaluation, software deployment within organizational and trans-organizational contexts, trans-national vendor relationships, trans-border data flow, geographically dispersed software development, and integration of diverse technologies. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of five or more SoC MS level courses is required.

Completion of five or more School of Computing MS level courses is required.IS 549 | DATA WAREHOUSING | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

Introduction to data warehousing and the foundations of understanding the issues involved in building a successful data warehouse. Data warehouse development methodology and issues surrounding the planning of the data warehouse. Data quality and metadata in the data warehouse. Analysis, transformation and loading of data into a data warehouse. Development of the data architecture and physical design. Implementation and administration of the data warehouse. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 451 or CSC 453 or CSC 455.

CSC 451 or CSC 453 or CSC 455 or DSC 450 is a prerequisite for this class.IS 550 | ENTERPRISE DATA MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course focuses on the technical concepts and managerial knowledge needed to define, integrate and govern centralized and distributed data for a wide range of application systems used at large, multinational corporations. Topics include data repository, data life cycle, DAMA-DMBOK, data stewardship, data asset valuation, enterprise data architecture, data modeling with meta-data, data security standards, master data, and data quality management.

CSC 451 or CSC 453 or CSC 455 or DSC 450 is a prerequisite for this class.IS 556 | AGILE ENTERPRISE PROJECT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course covers how an enterprise coordinates and effectively manages all its IT projects and programs through the IT program management office (PMO) in meeting the enterprise business goals. Students will learn the role of the IT PMO in establishing and maintaining the project and program infrastructure and in assisting project managers, program managers, and the executive steering committee. Students will analyze the role of enterprise business goals in coordinating the delivery of expected program and project benefits, in managing stakeholder expectations, and in establishing the agile PMO governance.

IS 430 or PM 430 is a prerequisite for this classIS 565 | SOURCING FOR IT AND INNOVATION | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course covers how organizations can use sourcing for IT services and innovation to achieve cost reduction and leverage external IT talent and expertise to deliver efficient, effective and innovative IT solutions. Topics covered include different types of outsourcing and innovation strategies, innovative sourcing techniques, and innovation and sourcing risk management.

(IS 430 or SE 477) is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 568 | IT GOVERNANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course discusses enterprise governance of IT resources (IT Governance). It focuses on the concepts, structures, processes, and models underlying IT governance toward creating value from IT-enabled business investments. Students will also learn IT governance best practices and how to apply them to real-world cases. This course discusses Control Objectives for Information and related Technology (COBIT), Business/IT alignment, IT-enabled values, and organizational functions and processes in support of IT governance.

IS 570 | MANAGING CHANGE FOR DIGITAL TRANSFORMATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is targeted towards information systems professionals who are involved in the planning and implementation of large scale, cross-functional enterprise systems for digital transformation. Students will examine the characteristics of technology efforts that change and transform the way people perform their tasks and how the new technology structures the flows of information and decision-making using workflow modeling methods. Through case studies and exercises students gain insights into the elements of successful implementations leading to the preparation of a change management plan. Emphasis is placed on developing mechanisms for communicating and training all affected agents.

IS 430 or PM 430 or completion of five or more other SoC MS level courses is a prerequisite for this class; contact instructor or advisor

IS 574 | BUSINESS INTELLIGENCE AND ANALYTICS SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to the systems concept of business intelligence and analytics as components of a portfolio of information systems. How business problems can be solved strategically by implementing a portfolio of business intelligence and analytics systems including data lake, data warehouse, data discovery and visualization tools to gain new insights into organizational operations. Detailed discussions of the analysis, design, and implementation of business intelligence and analytics systems, including infrastructure for data management, portfolio management of technology life cycle, and alignment between corporate and local-unit needs. Case studies of application software, cloud resources, change management, as well as technical and social issues.

IT 403

IS 577 | INFORMATION SYSTEMS POLICIES AND STRATEGIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This capstone course emphasizes the planning and management of information technologies and related resources at the corporate level. Topics covered include assessment of information technologies, tracking emerging technologies and trends, managing portfolio resources and matching them to business needs, technology transfer, end-user computing, outsourcing, theoretical models, strategic applications and strategic IT planning. Students are encouraged to take this course toward the end of their study. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of ten or more SoC MS level courses is required.

IS 579 | VIRTUAL SOFTWARE TEAMS MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Application of project management principles, tools, and techniques to a virtual software development project; management of virtual software teams; planning, executing the plan, monitoring and controlling the development process. Work with project office (PMO) to set templates for reporting and common processes and standards; set milestones and their deliverables; establish communication medium for the virtual team.
IS 430 or PM 430 is a prerequisite for this class

IS 580 | TECHNOLOGY ENTREPRENEURSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In-depth examination of the entrepreneurial process within technology intensive ventures. Roles of entrepreneurs and their start-up teams. Suitable business models and strategies. Legal issues and intellectual property. Financial issues and venture resources. Role of the customer and entrepreneurial marketing. Students will analyze and present case studies of technology entrepreneurial ventures. Students will develop a marketing plan and a business plan for a technology-intensive entrepreneurial venture of their choice. PREREQUISITE(S): Completion of the foundation phase.

IS 581 | INTEGRATION OF BUSINESS PROCESSES USING ERP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with the opportunity to utilize and integrate acquired knowledge in information technology for media to an applied audio and video engineering project. Students will work in teams to design, create, and test a real world media technology solution. Completed projects will be presented and evaluated by the class.

IS 435 and IS 560 are prerequisites for this class.

IS 586 | CUSTOMER RELATIONSHIP MANAGEMENT TECHNOLOGIES
(FORMERLY ECT 586) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to customer relationship management (CRM) systems. This course focuses on managing customer lifecycle across online and offline channels through CRM systems. Topics include application architecture and functionality of leading CRM systems, customer identification, data integration, social integration, personalization, call centers, field service and logistics, customer self-service and customer knowledge management.

CSC 401 or IS 411 or IT 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 590 | INFORMATION SYSTEMS RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction of information systems (IS) research methods and theories. The course is taught as a seminar course. Both quantitative and qualitative methods are discussed.

CSC 424 or DSC 424 is a prerequisite for this class.

IS 596 | TOPICS IN INFORMATION SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and will vary with each quarter. See syllabus.

IS 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable credit. Prerequisite(s): None.

IS 690 | RESEARCH SEMINAR | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Readings and discussion on current research topics. Students may register for this course no more than twice. (PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor). (variable credit)

IS 696 | MASTER'S PROJECT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Four credit hours. Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their project. Independent study form required. (PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor).

IS 698 | MASTER'S THESIS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Two credit hours. Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their thesis. Students must continue to register for this course every quarter after their first registration in it until they complete their project or thesis to the satisfaction of their advisor. They earn two hours of credit for each such registration but only four hours of credit will apply for degree credit. Independent study form required. (PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor). (2 quarter hours)

Information Technology (IT)

IT 123 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTATIONAL REASONING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course enables students to develop computational reasoning skills vital for success across multiple disciplines. Students will apply those skills to analyze and design solutions to problems or to express creative concepts. Students will also use computational tools to manipulate, analyze and visualize data. Topics include the representation of data, the design and understanding of algorithms, programming, and the use of abstraction in designing and analyzing computational solutions.

IT 130 | INTRODUCTORY COMPUTING FOR THE WEB | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the Internet, the World Wide Web, and web development for students with a strong interest in technology. Students will create interactive web pages by writing HTML and CSS and by programming in JavaScript. Topics include the origins of the web, the roles and operations of web browsers and web servers, interacting with web applications through forms, and using style sheets to separate document structure and document formatting. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

IT 200 | PUTTING YOUR MAJOR TO WORK | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This two credit course is designed to complement the student's major field of study. Students will explore connections between their academic course of study and internship and career opportunities. Students will refine their skills in networking, interviewing, developing a personal brand and utilization of social media tools. (2 quarter hours)

IT 202 | CODING FOR AUDIO AND VIDEO | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course serves as an introduction to programming for students interested in studying audio and sound design for the visual image. Students will learn the importance of coding in audio and video applications, how to create and edit scripts, and how to integrate computer programmers into the workflow.

POST 110 and POST 124 are prerequisites for this class.

IT 211 | INTRODUCTION TO APPLIED PROGRAMMING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to application development and problem solving. Basic programming constructs including control structures, I/O functions and object-based programming. Projects include small-scale applications using web-services, file processing, databases and application software. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 130 or IT 202.

IT 130 or IT 202 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 212 | APPLIED OO PROGRAMMING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to Object-Oriented Programming. Students will use object-oriented programming to integrate systems and applications on multiple platforms, developing and understanding basic distributed applications and how they communicate. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 211.

IT 211 is the prerequisite for this class.

IT 223 | DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(FORMERLY CSC 323) Application of statistical concepts and techniques to a variety of problems in IT areas and other disciplines, using a statistical package for simple data analysis. Course topics include descriptive statistics, elementary probability rules, sampling, distributions, confidence intervals, correlation, regression and hypothesis testing.

MAT 120 or MAT 120 or (MAT 130 or above or equivalent or Mathematics Diagnostic test placement into MAT 140

IT 228 | ETHICS IN COMPUTER GAMES AND CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Societies function based on normative ethics utilizing common sense to distinguish between ethical and unethical behavior. Most of us are not aware of the underlying theories when arriving at ethical judgments about right and wrong. However, the fast pace of progress in information technologies and digital entertainment creates an environment in which ethical challenges are particularly complex. In the eyes of many, games and movies are violent, offensive and immoral. This course will concentrate on analyzing the impact of digital entertainment on an individual and society. Implications of certain values embedded in games and movies will be discussed. Elements of the ethical code of conduct for a game or movie creator will be formulated. The issue of balancing individual creativity vs. cultural impact particularly on children will be discussed.

IT 231 | WEB DEVELOPMENT I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to framework-based web development. Students create interactive, dynamic web sites using a common web architecture and object-based database access. Programming for web development includes control structures, objects, functions, and use of composite data types. Prerequisite: IT 130.

IT 130 is a prerequisite for this class

IT 232 | WEB DEVELOPMENT II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Intermediate framework-based web development. Students design and develop web applications supporting social-networking, content-sharing and functionality for business and organizational needs. Web concepts include AJAX, server-side caching, security threats. Application of object-oriented concepts. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 231 and IT 211.

IT 231 and IT 211 are prerequisites for this class.

IT 238 | INTERACTIVE WEB SCRIPTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced scripting with javascript and the Document-Object Model (DOM) for creating web pages. Object-oriented principles applied to user interfaces and event handling. Application of Ajax. Use of libraries such as jQuery. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 130.

IT 130 is a prerequisite for this class

IT 240 | INTRODUCTION TO DATABASES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to the design, implementation and use of desktop databases. Major topics include: modeling using ER diagrams, creating and maintaining a database using a PC-based application, composing and using queries in Structured Query Language, creating and customizing forms and reports, and integrating databases with other sources of data and applications. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

IT 251 | INTRODUCTION TO MOBILE APPS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class will introduce students to the world of mobile application design using an open source cross-platform programming language. HTML5-based web application frameworks, API, functional UI, CSS3, cloud services. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 130.

IT 130 is a prerequisite for this class

IT 263 | APPLIED NETWORKS AND SECURITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces the networking and security technologies required to build and maintain a home or small-office network. Networking topics will include client/server application software configuration, network connectivity (cabling, switch and router configuration), basic IP addressing, network address translation and options for public Internet access services. Security topics will include typical threats and responses, firewalls, host hardening, password management and virtual private network (VPNs). The course has a lab component where students apply wired and wireless technologies to design and administer a small network with various applications. PREREQUISITE(S): none.

IT 278 | COMMUNITY-BASED TECHNOLOGY PROJECTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Project development in cooperation with a community service organization. Students will assess urban community Web needs, develop and implement a Web solution. PREREQUISITE(S): ISM 220 or IS 215 or IT 320.

UXD 220 or IS 215 or IT 320 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 280 | TEAM PROJECT DEVELOPMENT WITH AGILE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Developing a software solution requires more than just knowing how to program. Software development includes analysis, design, documentation, testing, debugging, deployment and maintenance. These parts of the development process are integrated by following a methodology. Additionally, software development is a highly collaborative activity, where soft skills like effective communication, teamwork, and the ability to give and receive feedback, are keys to a successful software project. This class will cover the fundamentals of team development and the agile methodology for software project in lectures and hands-on labs. Students will work in teams on project and team-building simulations during the quarter.

IT 281 | IMAGE SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The image science course will explore basic operations on images, to include image formation, intensity transformations, filtering, color maps, compression and file representation, and special considerations for video processing. The major goal of the course is to enable non-image experts to understand images in sufficient detail to enable an understanding of and facility with the ways that images are used in all areas of technology, with a focus on media technology. Optional topics may include advanced image transformations, generative image technologies, noise mitigation and in-filling after object removal.

IT 300 | RESEARCH EXPERIENCE | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course involves the exploration of a research topic under the supervision of a research advisor. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of dean. (variable credit)

IT 313 | ADVANCED APPLICATION DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Development of complex applications through the use of APIs. Appropriate selection of common data structures (hash tables, trees, stacks, queues, networks) and design patterns for use in API development. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 212.

IT 212 is a prerequisite for this class

IT 320 | CONTENT MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Design and use of Content Management Systems (CMSs) to manage unstructured digital media throughout the enterprise, simplify the publication of Web content, and locate and link content at any level of an organization. Discussion will focus on key users, their roles and responsibilities, collaborative workflow, and versioning. Students will become familiar with available CMSs, design a database-driven Website focusing on separation of the content's semantic layer from its layout, and implement a system using a variety of open-source software. Prerequisite(s): CSC 241 or IT 211 or IT 231 or IT 238 or CSC 243.

CSC 241 or IT 211 or IT 231 or IT 238 or CSC 243 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 330 | USER INTERFACE DEVELOPMENT FOR INTERACTIVE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Graphical user interface development for web and desktop applications. Event-driven user controls. Development involves use of a visual integrated development environment (IDE).

(IT 231 or IT 238) and (IT 313 or CSC 300) are prerequisites for this class.

IT 338 | WEB DEVELOPMENT FRAMEWORKS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Comparison of advanced web application development frameworks emphasizing MVC architectures and the front-end frameworks that support responsive web interfaces. Development of web applications using current frameworks and code libraries. Research into multiple frameworks with the analysis of framework advantages, disadvantages and implementation issues. PREREQUISITE(S): (IT 212 or CSC 242 or CSC 243) and IT 238.

(IT 212 or CSC 242 or CSC 243) and IT 238 are prerequisites for this class.

IT 339 | SERVER-SIDE WEB DEVELOPMENT FRAMEWORKS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced server-side web application servers and services to support MVC architectures and data and resources required in front-end frameworks. Development of server-side application services and APIs using current code libraries and frameworks. Research into application server frameworks and the comparative analysis of strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and problems. PREREQUISITE(S): (IT 212 or CSC 242 or CSC 243) and IT 238.

(IT 212 or CSC 242 or CSC 243) and IT 238 are prerequisites for this class.

IT 372 | INTRODUCTION TO ANDROID DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduction to the Android platform and life cycle, including Activities, Intents, layouts, resource files, and event handlers. Designing, implementing, and testing GUI applications that use widgets displayed in a layout, using images and audio files, displaying information from and storing information to a local database.

(IT 313 or CSC 300) and (IT 240 or CSC 355) are prerequisites for this class.

IT 373 | SYSTEM CONCEPTS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Overview of concurrency, memory management and file system concepts for operating systems, and web servers. Application of concepts to system administration. Case studies of common operating systems. Web server operations. Virtualization. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 313 or CSC 300.

IT 313 or CSC 300 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 390 | TOPICS IN INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Advanced study focusing on a specific area of information technology each quarter. May be repeated for credit. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IT 394 | SOFTWARE PROJECTS FOR COMMUNITY CLIENTS I | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is the first course in a two-quarter sequence (winter/spring) for CDM students that satisfies both the Senior Year Capstone requirement and the Junior Year Experiential Learning requirement. The second quarter will be IT 395. You will earn four quarter hours of credit for each quarter for a total of eight quarter hours of credit. You must complete both quarters to receive any credit. We work with a community service organization, chosen with help of the Steans Center for Community-based Service Learning. As a community-based service learning course, students will have the opportunity to assess urban community needs in technology, and use problem-solving methods and strategies to make a substantial difference in an inner-city community group, usually by developing an application or a web site.

IT 280 and IT 320 are prerequisites for this class.

IT 395 | SOFTWARE PROJECTS FOR COMMUNITY CLIENTS II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is the continuation of IT 394. IT 394 and IT 395 must be taken as a sequence in two consecutive quarters. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 394.

IT 394 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 398 | TOPICS IN GLOBAL INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 2-32 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on current topics in the information and communications technologies that together support the "networked world." Sample topics are global software development and deployment, global data and information management, and cross-cultural project management for information systems. The course may be offered for variable credit hours (2, 4, 8, 16, and 32). (variable credit)

IT 403 | STATISTICS AND DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to univariate data analysis methods. Descriptive statistics and data visualization methods. Overview of sampling techniques for data collection, and introduction to statistical inference methods for decision making including simple linear regression, estimation procedures using confidence intervals and hypothesis testing. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IT 411 | SCRIPTING FOR INTERACTIVE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introductory scripting for developing interactive web pages. Overview of HTML and CSS. Elementary programming concepts using JavaScript for learning control structures, functions, arrays, and object use. User interface development concepts include event handling and use of JavaScript libraries such as jQuery. Review of web clients, servers and architecture. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IT 432 | WEB ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Overview of Web application development for non-programmers. Hands-on exposure to the Model, View, Controller (MVC) framework using a common web framework. Topics include HTML/CSS, data modeling, authentication, AJAX and security issues. Students create and modify dynamic web sites. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 411.

IT 411 or IS 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

IT 590 | TOPICS IN INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

IT 599 | TOPICS IN GLOBAL INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Course Description: This course focuses on current topics in the information and communications technologies that together support the "networked world". Samples topics are global software development and deployment, global data and information management, and cross-cultural project management for information systems. The course may be offered for variable (1 to 4) credit hours. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IT 698 | MASTER'S THESIS | 2-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

(2 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their thesis. Students must continue to register for this course every quarter after their first registration in it until they complete their project or thesis to the satisfaction of their advisor. They earn two hours of credit for each such registration but only four hours of credit will apply for degree credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor. (2 quarter hours)

Institute for Professional Development (IPD)

IPD 231 | IOS DEVELOPER PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A 10-week certificate program covering iOS development for IT professionals and software developers. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 232 | FUNDAMENTALS OF R PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A 6-week certificate program covering R language basics, packages and development environments. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 234 | CYBERSECURITY RISK MANAGEMENT PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

In this 10-week certificate program, participants devise an operational cybersecurity risk management strategy using the NIST Cybersecurity Framework for a cyber-physical system or a technology of their choice. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 235 | INCIDENT RESPONSE AND DIGITAL FORENSICS PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 8-week program covering the incident response life cycle, analysis methodology, and the handling of digital forensic evidence for cybersecurity personnel.

IPD 240 | ADVANCED PYTHON PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A four-week certificate program covering principles of object-oriented design, design patterns, and meta-programming in the Python programming language. The program is designed for intermediate-level Python programmers. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 241 | ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE FOR ENTERPRISE PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program designed for IT professionals and business decision-makers who want to learn the fundamentals of artificial intelligence and be able to apply them to their business. The program covers an introduction to artificial intelligence, cognitive analytics, natural language processing, knowledge engineering, digital voice assistant, image/video recognition, robotics process automation, and augmented reality. The program will also cover different APIs that are used in industry relating to cloud and mobile technologies. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 242 | MACHINE LEARNING AND DEEP LEARNING PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program focusing on machine learning, transfer learning, automated machine learning, and deep learning for data scientists, business analytics and other IT professionals. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 243 | DATA ANALYTICS WITH EXCEL AND TABLEAU PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program covering Tableau and Microsoft Excel for statistical modeling and data analytics. This course will teach you to prepare for data for analysis, use various data analysis techniques, and present data in a visually-compelling way. It is geared towards business professionals who have basic skills in Excel. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 244 | ROBOTIC PROCESS AUTOMATION PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program designed to help business and IT professionals understand how to accelerate efforts at transforming their businesses digitally using Robotic Process Automation (RPA). This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 245 | DATA VISUALIZATION WITH TABLEAU PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A 5-week certificate program geared towards business and data professionals who wish to get an in-depth working knowledge of Tableau. Students will learn Tableau fundamentals and gain competency in working with data in Tableau. The program will also cover core visualizations, dashboard design, and best practices for visualizations. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 246 | WEB SERIES DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This 5-week certificate program explores the process of development and screenwriting of an independent short-form television series, otherwise known as web series. It is taught, in Spanish, in a workshop format based on the operation of a professional writers' room. The focus is pitching ideas, script development, and the revision of the different roles that make the writers' room a creative and dynamic environment. The program is open to college students with a firm grasp of the Spanish language, interested in the world of television. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 337 | ADVANCED DATA SCIENCE WITH PYTHON PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program covering g advanced data science techniques using Python and how to apply them in different domains. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 338 | FUNDAMENTALS OF STATISTICS AND MACHINE LEARNING USING R PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A 10-week certificate program covering how to use R to apply fundamentals of statistical analysis and machine learning. The program is ideally suited for business professionals with basic statistical and computer literacy. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 339 | AUTOMATED SOFTWARE TESTING PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A 10-week certificate program covering software testing strategies and tools and techniques for software test automation. The program is ideally suited for technical professionals with some programming experience. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on enrollment.

IPD 341 | BIG DATA USING SPARK PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An 11-week program covering Apache Spark and how it fits with Big Data. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 342 | MODERN .NET WEB DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A 10-week program for professional developers who wish to learn Web applications development using the latest Microsoft .NET technologies. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 343 | INTRODUCTION TO SQL PROGRAM | 1.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A 2-week program on the fundamentals of Structured Query Language. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 345 | TECHNOLOGY AND INNOVATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A 10-week program designed to be a comprehensive study of the disciplines involved in the practical management of technology and innovation.

IPD 346 | DATA SCIENCE FOR BUSINESS PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A ten-week certificate program covering data science and Big Data principles and techniques to support business decision-making. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 350 | IOS DEVELOPER PROGRAM | 10.00 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, we introduce the core issues associated with development for iOS mobile devices. Students learn a platform's IDE, frameworks, view, menu, controllers, graphics audio and more. Understanding the device's taps, touch, multi-touch, gestures, and accelerometers are just a few of the interactions the class will cover. User data interactions, internet conductivity, persistent storage and iCloud retrieval will be introduced. The course is designed to introduce the basics for business mobile applications..

IPD 351 | BIG DATA AND NOSQL PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program covering popular NoSQL databases and how they fit with Big Data. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 355 | CLOUD COMPUTING TECHNOLOGIES PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An 11-week certificate program in the principles, methods, and technologies of Cloud Computing. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 356 | WEB DEVELOPMENT WITH JAVASCRIPT AND HTML5 PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An eight-week in-depth certificate program focused on user-centered Web development. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 360 | SQL SERVER BUSINESS INTELLIGENCE PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An 11-week in-depth certificate program covering database administration using Microsoft SQL Server. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 363 | SQL SERVER DATABASE ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An 11-week in-depth certificate program covering database administration using Microsoft SQL Server. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll. (6 quarter hours)

IPD 370 | ADVANCED SQL PROGRAM | 1.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A two-week certificate program covering advanced SQL. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll. (1.5 quarter hours)

IPD 440 | CAREER CHANGE PROGRAM | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A 26-week certificate program for career changers in technology. The program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Enrollment is restricted. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for admission information.

IPD 441 | BIG DATA USING SPARK PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An 11-week program covering Apache Spark and how it fits with Big Data. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 451 | BIG DATA AND NOSQL PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A 11-week certificate program covering popular NoSQL databases and how they fit with Big Data. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 460 | SQL SERVER BUSINESS INTELLIGENCE PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An 11-week in-depth certificate program covering Microsoft SQL Server analysis services, integration services, and reporting services. This program requires a separate application for admission and $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 463 | SQL SERVER DATABASE ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An 11-week certificate program covering database administration using Microsoft SQL Server. This program requires a separate application for admission and a $40 application fee. Please visit IPD.CDM.DEPAUL.EDU for information on how to enroll.

IPD 500 | TASTE OF COMPUTING PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT | 4.5 quarter hours (Graduate)

The goals of this course are to: work collaboratively with peers to implement an inquiry-based curriculum in computer science; prepare to teach culturally-relevant foundational computing knowledge with concrete instructional strategies; and, develop a community of practice in the classroom with an interdisciplinary approach to problem-solving. (variable credit)

Integrative Learning (IN)

IN 117 | ART IN CHICAGO | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course centers on two distinctive but very different resources for art studies in Chicago: the Terra Museum of American Art and the Museum of Contemporary Art (MCA). The Terra Museum focuses mainly on 19th and 20th century American art, especially the luminous landscapes of American Impressionists. The MCA concentrates on the last 50 years in art, from surrealism through pop art, earth art, video art, and new developments reaching all the way up to today. Both museums are expanding, presenting students with opportunities to take part in museum tours, talks, publications, and lecture series. (2 quarter hours)

IN 243 | POST-TRAUMATIC SLAVE SYNDROME AND ITS AFFECTS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This FDIS seeks to inform students about the nature of trauma, and the impact of post-traumatic slave syndrome (PTSS) on African-American life and culture. In the context of this course, both of these phenomena are associated with 250 years of U.S. chattel slavery, followed by decades of de jure and de facto racial discrimination. It is a subject that has historical, psychological and sociological implications and thus is a must for students pursuing undergraduate and/or graduate work in these areas. With this primary goal in mind, students will be asked to review one of two texts on the subject, Joy DeGruy-Leary's Post Traumatic Slave Syndrome: America's Legacy of Enduring Inquiry and Healing or Thom Burrell's Brainwashed: Challenging the Myth of Black Inferiority, along with selected readings where appropriate.

IN 249 | NEW YORK: AN HISTORICAL OVERVIEW | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This Faculty Designed Independent Study (FDIS) encourages students to study the history of one of our nation's oldest and most vibrant cities: New York City, including its five boroughs: Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, Staten Island, and Queens. The readings associated with the course provide a skeletal history of the city's nearly four hundred years. Students are then asked to read a series of articles that elaborate on key historical events and/or eras, i.e. the city's role in the American Revolution, the Great Depression, the impact of deindustrialization and suburbanization, and development of art and culture across different epochs, among other areas. Students are finally asked to supplement readings and a major homework assignment with a five-page paper that mirrors the spirit of their competence. The collection of readings and video presentations offer a fascinating, insightful, and fun look at one of the most interesting and intriguing American metropolises.

IN 307 | INTEGRATIVE LEARNING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students explore the value and practice of being an integrating thinker in today's increasingly complex world. Students are guided to draw connections among the categories and disciplines of liberal learning. Students will develop and demonstrate this ability by considering one phenomenon, problem or event through the lenses of at least two different approaches to creating and expressing knowledge. They will ask questions such as, what is knowledge? How is knowledge created? What are its sources? How can it be expressed? How is knowledge accorded value or privilege in a particular culture or society? To meet upper-division expectations, students synthesize complex ideas, assess significant research in the field, and articulate original perspectives. Prerequisite: Research Methods.

LL 300 or LL 301 is a prerequisite for this class.

IN 362 | SOCIAL JUSTICE AND PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Consistent with DePaul University's Vincentian mission, this course seeks to explore social justice in the context of policing, personal growth and professional practice and, to do so, in a multidisciplinary format. Guided by the life of Saint Vincent de Paul, the ultimate goal of this class is to highlight the virtues of social justice and thereby understand in greater depth how to, via the service of policing, improve the lives of the most marginalized and vulnerable in our society. The course will do so by generating discussion and reflective thought around the elements of social justice, experimenting with the application of said elements and sharing and thus learning from one another. Course deliverables, which include short essays and group and individual presentations, will be supplemented by the drafting of a personal philosophy regarding social justice. (4 credit hours)

LL 300 is a prerequisite for this class.

Interactive Media (IM)

IM 208 | VIRTUAL WORLDS AND ONLINE COMMUNITIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Environments such as social networking sites, multiplayer online games and other online communities are becoming an increasingly large part of how we work, play, and learn. This course introduces the fundamentals for the interdisciplinary study of cyberculture and online social behavior. By examining core scholarship in this area, together with analyzing an existing virtual world, game, or online community, students will learn to research and understand new technologically-enabled social forms as they are emerging. PREREQUISITE(S) WRD 104.

IM 210 | INTRODUCTION TO HUMAN-COMPUTER INTERACTION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course familiarizes students with the user interface development process, including user and task analysis, interaction design, prototyping and evaluation. Students study human perception, cognition and motor abilities as they relate to the design of interactive systems. In a series of projects, students design and revise prototypes as they apply a user-centered design process. Emphasized topics include user profiles, information architecture and usability testing. Students provide written analysis of their research and process. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IM 220 | INTERACTIVE MEDIA I | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course applies interactive media principles for a variety of contexts with a goal of exploring relative merits among common interaction paradigms. Based on assessed needs and intended functionality, students create working prototypes that demonstrate a range of design patterns, particularly those with a high level of interactivity such as rich internet applications, games, and visual simulations. Emphasis is given to visual design principles and aesthetics for creating interesting and engaging interactive experiences. PREREQUISITE(S): ANI 105.

IM 222 | INFORMATION VISUALIZATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course discusses the basic problems and techniques of visualizing quantitative and qualitative data. Topics include: perception, types of information, representation of univariate and multivariate data and relational information, analysis of representations, presentation, and dynamic and interactive visualizations. Students will create visualizations using graphical software PREREQUISITES: LSP 120.

IM 230 | SCRIPTING FOR INTERACTIVE MEDIA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to Object-Oriented programming using Flash ActionScript. Subjects covered include variables, loops, conditionals, event handling, and classes, and how they are used to create real-world interactive web applications and animations. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

IM 315 | THEORY AND PERCEPTION OF COLOR | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(Formerly HCI 315) A problem-based course introducing additive and subtractive colors systems and their technology. It explores the perceptual phenomena of color relationships and their applications in digital environments. PREREQUISITE(S): IM 210 and (GPH 211 or GD 105)

IM 320 | INTERACTIVE MEDIA II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will use complex interactive web projects to challenge students to solve real-world problems. Students will build upon the organizational and analytical strategies learned in IM I while expanding their knowledge of Flash subjects such as site integration, utilizing remote data and manipulating video. PREREQUISITE(S): IM 220 Interactive Media I.

IM 330 | ADVANCED SCRIPTING FOR INTERACTIVE MEDIA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on the Flash ActionScript programming skill learned in Scripting for Interactive Media. Students will focus on designing, coding and debugging complex applications. PREREQUISITE(S): IM 230 Scripting for Interactive Media.

IM 332 | USER-CENTERED WEB DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(Formerly HCI 332) Analysis, design, and development of interactive web sites. Advanced application of HTML and style sheets for user-centered design. Survey of client-side technologies for interactive Web use. PREREQUISITES: IT 130.

IM 360 | USER-CENTERED EVALUATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(Formerly HCI 360) Overview of user research and usability evaluation methods. User research includes interviews, profiles and scenarios. Usability evaluation methods include expert inspections and usability testing. PREREQUISITE(S): IM 210.

IM 394 | HUMAN-COMPUTER INTERACTION CAPSTONE COURSE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(Formerly HCI 394) Provides an opportunity for students to apply all of the skills they have learned on one comprehensive project. Multi-disciplinary teams design, evaluate, and implement a user interface intensive project. Students prepare written documents describing their activities and present the final results to the class. (PREREQUISITE(S): Senior standing).

Interdisciplinary Commerce Studies (ICS)

ICS 200 | INTRODUCTION TO BUSINESS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed for non-Commerce majors who want a minor in business. The course will help the student develop an understanding of the role of the major functional areas of business, as well as ethical considerations, the globalization of business and the role of entrepreneurship. Considerations will be given to the possible career opportunities in each of the functional areas studied.

Undergraduate Business students (COMM, UNCOM, GPCOM) are restricted from registering for this class.

ICS 201 | PERSONAL FINANCIAL DECISION MAKING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students will be exposed to a wide variety of money-related topics, with an aim to familiarize the participants with everyday financial issues.

ICS 398 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Special Topics. Content and format of this course is variable. Subject matter will be listed in the university class schedule. These courses will be used for a variety of course content and delivery methods including the Foreign Study Seminar Series.

ICS 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Available to students of demonstrated capability for intensive work in interdisciplinary studies. (variable credit)

Junior standing with at least 88 cumulative units is a prerequisite for this class.

Interdisciplinary Studies (IDS)

IDS 497 | INDEPENDENT STUDY (NON-CAPSTONE) | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Independent study in an area that does not lead directly into the thesis or capstone. Students may also register for this course on a topic indirectly related to their thesis or capstone if they will subsequently take IDS 498, in which the student directly prepares to write the Integrating Project/Thesis. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking independent studies follow a specified format of meeting frequency, activities, and scholarly production. This format is available on the program web site or from the MALS and IDS office. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the instructor of the independent study.

IDS 498 | INDEPENDENT STUDY [CAPSTONE] | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Independent study undertaken as preparation for thesis or practicum capstone options. This course is optional preparation for IDS 499, Capstone. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking this course follow a specified format of meeting frequency, that they produce a review of literature related to their thesis or practicum, an annotated bibliography, and the required Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the thesis or practicum director.

IDS 499 | CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Capstone for students doing a thesis, practicum or enhanced portfolio essay. Students may register for this course after the Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum, or the Enhanced Portfolio Essay Proposal, has been approved. Students are normally expected to complete their capstone projects within the quarter in which they take this course. This course carries four hours of credit. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the student's capstone director.

IDS 501 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to graduate students who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

IDS 502 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

Interdisciplinary Studies Program (ISP)

ISP 100 | THE NATURE OF SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The Nature Of Science (Cross-listed As PHY 100)

ISP 199 | TRANSFORMATIVE HUMANITIES | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to pressing issues and questions related to the histories and cultures of people of color. The course is designed to show how humanities methods can contribute to social transformation and healing for communities historically shaped by, and continuously facing, racism, violence, and dispossession. The course will build community among participants and introduce students to resources that will help ensure their success as undergraduates.

ISP 220 | INTERACTIONS OF SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

INTERACTIONS OF SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY.

ISP 245 | LIFE IN THE UNIVERSE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Life In The Universe.

ISP 300 | SELECTED SEMINAR TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Offered each quarter, the topics of the junior seminar vary. Each offering, however, builds upon concepts introduced in a previous core course and involves a research project. Cross-listed as HON 300. Variable credit.

ISP 330 | PEER EDUCATION SERVICE LEADERS I | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to prepare service immersion trip leaders and to promote their development as socially responsible leaders. The focus is on foundational theory and developing transferable life skills related to reflective theory and practice, Vincentian concepts of service, and peer education. Students must speak with their advisor to learn how this course may be applied to help satisfy their JYEL requirement.

ISP 331 | PEER EDUCATION SERVICE LEADERS II | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students will apply the theories and practices learned in ISP 330 to their service immersion groups. Through experiential, interactive, academic and reflective activities students will continue reflection on Vincentian service and their leadership roles. Students must speak with their advisor to learn how this course may be applied to help satisfy their JYEL requirement.

ISP 390 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 2-4.5 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Variable credit.

ISP 392 | INTERNSHIP | 1-12 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Internship.

ISP 398 | INTERDISCIPLINARY HUMANITIES RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will introduce Social Transformation Research Collaborative Undergraduate Student Fellows to interdisciplinary humanities research methods and provide them with mentored guidance in pursuing an independent research project related to the historical trajectories, legacies and/or cultures of people of color. Fellows will learn to distinguish between secondary and primary sources; learn about key methodological and theoretical approaches in the humanities; build a bibliography; develop a plan of work; write an abstract; and draft a 3-5 page prospectus for a 10-12 page research paper. The course will also introduce Fellows to area humanities and cultural institutions and libraries. The course is followed by mentored research support in which Fellows draft and revise their papers and create a poster presentation for the STRC fall symposium. Final papers will be submitted in December.

ISP 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Variable credit.

International Business (IB)

IB 350 | INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This foreign study course is meant to introduce the student to the world of international life and business as it is today. The course provides students the opportunity to visit and study foreign commercial enterprises on-site. Additional emphasis is placed on understanding overseas cultures, self-reference criteria, and the fact that people around the world can maintain/develop hopes and dreams within their own lifestyle even though it may differ from others'. Most courses in this group will count for liberal studies credit as an experiential learning course. See the Director of the Driehaus Center for International Business or the College of Commerce undergraduate office for additional information. Registration with the Driehaus Center is required. International Business Seminars may not be taken Pass/Fail.

IB 500 | GLOBAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to be an introduction to the economic environment in which businesses operate. With the increasing interdependence of national economies and the growing role of global enterprises, the understanding of international economic issues is vital to decision-makers. The material covered will include both socio-cultural aspects and economic and financial dimensions of global business. Students should obtain a grasp of the basic theory as well as a knowledge of the major current issues in the global economy. (FORMERLY ECO 556)

IB 505 | GEOPOLITICAL AND CULTURAL ISSUES IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Analysis of major geographical and cultural conditions in those countries most involved in U.S. foreign trade. Guest lectures, comprehensive maps and pertinent media presentations supplement weekly class discussion.

IB 520 | INTERNATIONAL TRADE THEORY AND POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Modern theories of international trade: classical theory of comparative advantage, factor proportions theory, factor price equalization, application of welfare economics to international trade, including regional economic integration, commercial policy and tariff problems.

FIN 555 is a prerequisite for this classIB 521 | INTERNATIONAL MACROECONOMICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course analyzes traditional macroeconomic issues in a framework that explicitly allows for international trade and capital flows. Topics covered include exchange rate and balance of payments determination, the impact of international trade and capital mobility on domestic monetary and fiscal policy, fixed vs. floating exchange rate systems, exchange rate overshooting and other topics. Cross-listed as ECO 558. ECO 509 is a prerequisite for this class.

IB 525 | ECONOMICS OF DEVELOPING COUNTRIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course reviews models of economics development and some of the key issues in economic development including agricultural and rural development, population, economic growth, the role of government, health, education, income distribution, trade regime and policy, international capital flows and the environment, international trade and foreign resource flows. The course integrates country studies of selected developing economies and regions, cross-country statistical studies and theoretical tools drawn from the fields of microeconomics, macroeconomics, and international trade.

FIN 555 is a prerequisite for this classIB 526 | COMPARATIVE ECONOMIC SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A study of the contrasting theories of socialism and capitalism.

FIN 555 is a prerequisite for this classIB 530 | INTERNATIONAL FINANCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

International Finance integrates the financial activities, institutions, and multinationals of the global finance arena. In addition to extending the tools of financial analysis to an international setting, the course studies the strategies available to a multinational because of operations in multiple countries. Topics include foreign currency and political risk, capital budgeting in a multinational setting, and cash flow management between countries.

FIN 555 is a prerequisite for this classIB 540 | INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The objective of this course is to develop clear awareness of the international business operations, practices and environment. It provides the concepts, methods and tools necessary to face the global challenges in international management. The objective is met through lectures, classroom discussions, library assignments and research work. Students will learn the effective use of the international business references. By the end of the course, they are expected to have developed a high level of competency in acquiring, understanding, analyzing and synthesizing international management information from international business directories, databases and CD-ROMs.

IB 545 | AREA STUDIES IN INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

In-depth analysis of the economic and cultural aspects of doing business in a particular region, e.g. Western Europe, Middle East, Japan, etc. The course focuses on the region's business relations with the United States, its trade and management practices and the successful conduct of business negotiations. The area under consideration will vary from quarter to quarter in order to cover regions of particular interest to our students and the business community of Chicago.

IB 550 | INTERNATIONAL MARKETING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The differences between markets and distribution systems in various countries are explored. By emphasizing the social and economic factors causing these differences a sound understanding of and empathy with different international marketing problems are developed. Analyses are made of the organization of trade channels in various cultures, of typical government policies towards international trade in countries at different stages of development, and of international marketing research, advertising, and exporting. Offered Variably.

MKT 555 is a prerequisite for this class.

IB 560 | GLOBAL STRATEGIC FINANCIAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course concentrates on each student's own career goals by focusing on cases of well-known financial successes and failures in the global business world. It enables students to become intelligent users (readers) of financial reporting in a global environment. Students will learn to identify key relationships in the statements to strategy of high performance companies and to make critical judgments underlying the elements and valuations in the financial statements. Students will study integrated reporting, corporate governance, and sustainability accounting. The course is a useful elective for MSA, MACC and MBA programs.

ACC 500 or ACC 502 or equivalent, is a prerequisite for this course.

IB 750 | INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS SEMINAR I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Off-campus seminar, usually one to three weeks, providing exposure to international business cultures. IB 755 is a co-requisite for this class.

IB 755 | INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS SEMINAR II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Some of the International Business Seminars are offered for eight rather than four credits. Students are ordinarily required to complete an in-depth research paper in an international business area approved by the director of the seminar. Information gathered during the seminars with business and governmental organizations must be incorporated into the research paper. IB 750 is a co-requisite for this class.

IB 798 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Content and format of the course are variable. An in-depth study of current issues. Subject mater will be indicated in class schedule. Offered Variably.

IB 799 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Available to graduate students of demonstrated capability for intensive independent work in international business.

International Studies (INT)

INT 100 | INTRODUCTION TO INTERNATIONAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to contemporary international politics and the social theory that international studies scholars use to make sense of those politics. As an interdisciplinary field, students learn about international studies approaches that connect with history, geography, anthropology, economics and political science. Students critically engage with a set of global issues -- environmentalism, violence, migration, law, etc. -- that are selected by the course instructor. The course aims to present students with a general understanding of problems, approaches, and solutions to contemporary global issues.

INT 150 | GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES ON SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is intended for non-majors who are looking to add an international perspectives course to their study. It looks at conceptions of and forms of social justice actions in different locations across the globe.

INT 200 | INTRODUCTION TO POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

INT 200 serves as a bridge between economics and political economy. The course acquaints students with the standard theories of international trade and international monetary systems and introduces them to the interdisciplinary approaches that distinguish political economy from economics.

INT 201 | NATION STATES, NATIONALISM, EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The international system of nation states structures political and social life for people everywhere. When and how did this system come about, and why? In this course, students learn the story behind nations and nation states and how nationalism became such a powerful ideology in the modern world of mass warfare, colonialism, and empire. Students learn about nation building processes, from democratic and liberating to exclusionary and oppressive. In gaining a practical understanding of how context and personality interact in the making of national history, students in the course complete two simulation projects in the role of a historical figure participating in an important event of national formation. Sophomore standing or above and status as an International Studies or Applied Diplomacy major or minor is a prerequisite for this class.

INT 202 | THEORIES OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course analyzes the nature of power in the international arena, conflicts that emerge among nations, and processes through which conflict may be resolved. It includes a critical perspective on theories of international relations.

INT 203 | INTERNATIONAL MOVEMENTS AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The international system of nation states structures political and social life for people everywhere. When and how did this system come about, and why? In this course, students learn the story behind nations and nation states and how nationalism became such a powerful ideology in the modern world of mass warfare, colonialism, and empire. Students learn about nation building processes, from democratic and liberating to exclusionary and oppressive. In gaining a practical understanding of how context and personality interact in the making of national history, students in the course complete two simulation projects in the role of a historical figure participating in an important event of national formation.

INT 204 | CULTURAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces the student to the models and logic of cultural analysis. It offers students the opportunity to explore ethnographic accounts of lived experiences. Students will assess the meaning of such experiences by addressing a range of socio-cultural issues, including colonial and post-colonial accounts from a micro-cultural perspective.

INT 205 | INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the relations between economics and politics at international and national levels. The emphasis is on capitalism, the dominant form of organizing political and economic life on a global scale in the post-Cold War era. We will focus on the material histories and key political and economic theories that have shaped the contemporary era (neoclassical, Keynesian, neoliberal, institutionalist, Marxist, anarcho-communist). Topics include the causes and consequences of global inequality, regional and spatial disparities, labor and class relations, privatization, financialization and deregulation of economies, public health, and environmental crises.

INT 200 is a prerequisite for this class.

INT 206 | IDENTITIES AND BOUNDARIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Boundaries - from legal borders to conceptual lines - structure modern life and help to mold human identities. Boundaries have intensified under late globalization, with nationalist identity politics and wall-building proliferating even as the world works to become more interconnected. Students study boundary-making and line-drawing as sources of power and knowledge used by states, economic and cultural actors, and institutions. Final projects in the course allow students to explore the techniques of boundary drawing and identity formation in a case of their choosing, while imagining alternative and beneficial ways of repurposing boundaries and lines in the coming decades.

INT 301 | SENIOR SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course combines formal class work and independent research. Students conduct and present competent original academic research on a relevant and novel question of their choosing. Seminar topics vary, but projects typically require comparative research conducted in the student's target language.

Senior standing and declared International Studies major or minor are prerequisites for this course.

INT 302 | CRITICAL SOCIAL THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

All systems of knowledge are constituted through and in turn help constitute relations of power. This course introduces students to social theory as a reflexive practice that is aware of the power-infused conditions of its own production. Students who take this course should be able to examine the society around them with critical awareness, interrogate the naturalization of social knowledge, and become aware of the conditions through which knowledge, expertise, and transformative social practices are reflexively produced. Cross-listed with INT 401.

INT 304 | MIGRATION AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the integral role that different processes of mobility play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, demographic, economic, and political variables. Students also look at the role of state and non-state actors and organizations. Cross-listed with INT 404.

INT 305 | CULTURE AND INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course interrogates the concept of culture by showing the dynamic ways in which inequalities define and shape it. Students examine theories of culture and different approaches to studying culture to understand the relationship between the construction of cultural difference and social inequalities. Cross-listed with INT 405.

INT 306 | GLOBAL EMPIRES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students gain an acquaintance with theories of imperialism and post-colonial theory through historically situated studies. 'Power' serves as the generative concept for this course, to be understood as emergent at multi-scalar levels. Cross-listed with INT 406.

INT 307 | RACE, SEX, DIFFERENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Power circulates through systems of social hierarchies. Such hierarchies are the material basis through which difference is defined. This course examines theories of class, race, and sex to show how difference operates.

INT 308 | NATURE, SOCIETY AND POWER | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary exploration of environmental issues pertinent to international studies. The reproduction of human societies occurs in a symbiotic relationship with the natural world, yet in the modern era nature has come to be increasingly conceptualized as a resource. This course explores the repercussions of this instrumental separation of nature from culture and society. Our conceptions of nature range from the physical environment to the human body; and the course explores a range of related political, economic, ecological, and socio-cultural issues from theoretical, comparative, and practical perspectives. Issues explored include those of environmental justice and social and political equity, and questions such as who defines what constitutes environmental issues, who is included or excluded from environmental concerns, and who benefits or is harmed by environmental changes occurring as a result of social interventions. Cross-listed with INT 408.

INT 309 | CRITICAL DEVELOPMENT THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The uneven integration of the world economy has been shaped by a succession of policies and theories of development, modernization, and globalization. This course investigates how these theories and policies have contributed to centrally organizing concepts such as poverty, inequality, growth, and progress, which have been instrumental in ordering contemporary societies. Cross-listed with INT 409.

INT 315 | READING GRAMSCI: STUDYING CULTURE, POWER, AND
HEGEMONY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class will read Gramsci's Prison Notebooks and more contemporary research that has deployed Gramscian thought to examine culture, power, and hegemony.

INT 316 | THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL LIFE OF OIL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Since the industrial revolution hydrocarbons have reshaped every aspect of human, social, and planetary life. This course is a critical and interdisciplinary examination of the wide-ranging impact of petroleum and its derivatives on the contemporary social relations of power, as well as on nature-society/human-environment interactions.

INT 317 | READING MARX'S CAPITAL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a close reading of volume 1 of Karl Marx's major work, Capital, a key text in contemporary social and political economic thought. Capital is a highly challenging, but ultimately rewarding text. Students are required to engage the text rigorously, and to work individually and in groups. The class format is a combination of lectures, seminar discussions, and oral presentations by students.

INT 321 | INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the international processes by which scientific knowledge concerning environmental change and degradation is translated into action on the parts of individuals, groups, states, and global institutions. We look at the political, legal, economic and cultural structures that reproduce the global propensity to disrupt or degrade the environment and that likewise prevent amelioration.

INT 322 | INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE AND LAW | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

International Environmental Law (IEL) governs a wide range of vital problems, from addressing climate change to preventing contamination of air, water, land and forests by border-crossing toxins. IEL shapes our relationship to nature and for life with dignity on the planet. The course introduces students to IEL, its history, doctrines and institutions, while foregrounding questions of justice and fairness. It examines how the law allocates the costs and risks of ecological degradation and remediation. The course is designed to be of use to any student interested in environmentalism and how law can serve justice-based approaches to protecting Earth's ecosystems. No prior course work in law is required.

INT 323 | HUMAN RIGHTS AND INTERNATIONAL LAW | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

International Human Rights Law and the system of International Law from which it arises express the hopes of many for moving toward a more peaceful and just world. Are such hopes well placed? Students in the course explore the history, doctrines and institutions of Human Rights Law, learning about both triumphs and unrealized promises, from the promotion of civil and political rights and the founding of the International Criminal Court (in which DePaul played a role) to the problems associated with achieving a more egalitarian and secure material existence for vulnerable populations, such as refugees and those subjected to state violence. For their final project, students research a pressing global injustice or problem of their choosing and map the prospects of a human rights based solution. No prior coursework in law is required.

INT 324 | INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC LAW FROM COLONIALISM TO GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

International Economic Law structures material life everywhere on the planet, and this course provides students the opportunity to study legal frameworks behind international finance, investment, trade, and money. The course examines colonial roots of international economic law and the ongoing efforts by once colonized nations of the Global South to create a new international economic order. Students learn about the legal regimes protecting investors and intellectual property, as well as the unique enforcement powers of World Trade Organization, International Monetary Fund and World Bank. In the final project students research international law in an area of economic interest, while considering prospects for working through law to build a more climate- or human-friendly economy of the future. No previous coursework in law is required.

INT 325 | LAW OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS, NGOS AND GLOBAL GOVERNANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the law of inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), institutions which play a leading role in the formation of the rules-based order of global governance. The course allows students to learn about global governance as a system in which authority flows through organizations that operate both above and below the level of states, from the United Nations to Doctors Without Borders. Cases of organization-led global governance studied include rule of law and democracy promotion projects, humanitarian action, including as undertaken by intergovernmental refugee aid organizations or civil groups such as the White Helmets, pandemic responses by the World Health Organization and philanthropic organizations such as the Gates Foundation, or human rights accountability through the institutions of international criminal law. No previous coursework in law is required.

INT 327 | THE LONG LIFE OF EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to studies of colonialism and postcolonialism that exist within International Relations (IR). The course materials will take a critical approach to concepts often taken for granted in studying international politics. This course introduces students to the main threads of this scholarly challenge and its attendant concepts – Other, alterity, subalternity, subjectivity, knowledge, discourse, and power.

INT 328 | ORIENTALISM: COLONIALISM, MODERNITY, AND HISTORY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The course begins with Edward Said's Orientalism, a landmark text in the sense that it started a critique of the West's gaze on the East and spawned a vigorously contested and highly complex debate to this day. The course incorporates material that engages with Said's text and that builds upon it or that we can read alongside Orientalism. The assigned readings approach the topic of knowledge practices from different angles thereby incorporating concepts like gender, identity, art, primitive, colonization, modernity, and history.

INT 329 | BEYOND IMPERIALISM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This political theory course explores what it might mean to 'unlearn' our social and political education. Starting with Ariella Azoulay's insight that imperial power dynamics are both socially embedded and learned, the course works through a set of questions about what we might want or need to unlearn to in order to learn (or relearn) other modes of being. What do the stories that we tell indicate about how our world is configured? How else might we narrate our societal orientations? How can a focus on potentialities transform what is possible? The questions, coursework, and writing aim to orient us to think about how 'unlearning' might return us to a recognizable social self.

INT 330 | TOPICS IN EAST ASIAN STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within East Asia. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 331 | POLITICS OF IMMIGRATION AND INTEGRATION IN FRANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This study abroad will focus on critical perspectives on immigration, refugees, and the politics of integration in France. The curriculum will analyze the history of immigration in France, the politics of identity and inclusion, and the contemporary refugee crisis in France. Sub-topics include security studies and anti-terrorism efforts, social welfare assistance, and gender politics.

INT 332 | AMERICA AS EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class explores the history, politics, and economics of the US Empire, with a particular focus on the seizure of the North American continent, incursions in Latin America, the extension into the Pacific in the later 19th century, and the contemporary hidden empire of military bases scattered around the world.

INT 333 | THE PSYCHE AND GEOPOLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course adds another layer of analytical complexity to our understanding of the world, namely, the "psychical unconscious" or psyche—the terrain of subjective irrationality. Using analytical tools that plumb the psyche, this course examines how identity formations of gender, sexuality, race, and person, are tied to unconscious anxieties which are also mediated by external demands and conditions. In so doing, we complicate international studies, allowing us to see how our own identity formation is tied to the vicissitudes of the world and how we are called into it.

INT 341 | SEX, GENDER, REPRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores how the global economy, the machine, and 'sex' are linked and how, today, many are seeking means for changing the processes of reproduction through technologies that are biological, surgical, surrogacy-related, and machinic in nature. These interventions are re-fashioning the 'body' in ways that are cyborgic or transhuman, opening up the meaning and reproductive purposes of sexual dimorphism to significant change. The technologies are nevertheless expensive, dividing the world up economically into differently sexed and reproductive parts.

INT 346 | GENDER AND COLONIALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a conceptual analysis of gender and an historical examination of imperial gendered power dynamics that emerged in the context of (mostly British) colonialism. This course focuses on a weaving together of a political economic examination of women and capitalism and a critical analysis of imperialism and gendered power dynamics. The course will use these two analytical frameworks to make sense of black and afro-feminist interventions on questions of how to understand what is at stake and how to challenge the imperial legacy of colonial dynamics.

INT 347 | AFRO-FEMINIST POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on Black and Afro-Feminist interventions in questions of how to understand what is at stake in and how to challenge the imperial legacies of colonial dynamics of power. The course will engage the conceptual complexity of the notions of gender and the political relations they frame. Bringing together authors like Joy James, Sylvia Tamales, Yolande Bouka, bell hooks, and others in the context of a single course will allow seminar participants to broadly investigate feminist inquiry while remaining grounded in the lived experiences that bell hooks describes in Belonging: A culture of place.

INT 348 | BLACK GEOGRAPHIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Black Geographies explores how space and power are racially linked. This linkage is easily seen in the contexts of apartheid, segregation, Jim Crow, red lining, the prison industrial complex, and environmental racism. Racialized space-power connections likewise reside in spatial tropes, like marginalization, fringe elements, sidelining, and outsider. All of these constitute spatial tactics meant to exclude, control, contain, and injure. The death-driven nature and exceptional violence of these tactics makes the extraordinary spatial generativity of Black life even more exceptional, to wit, the Maroon settlements of slavery, the Underground Railroad of Harriet Tubman, the early ballroom culture of Harlem, the Clowning and Krumping circuits of South Central LA, and the virtual spatial innovations of Black Instagram and Twitter. This generativity points to a fundamental contradiction: that those who presume they are the most free (those with the greatest capacity to own) are in fact the most un-free. Tied to a system where 'value' manifests only in possession, the freedom to love becomes impossible, a fact with extraordinary planetary-political implications.

INT 350 | SOCIETY, POLITICS AND CULTURE IN THE MIDDLE EAST | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the formations of the historical and contemporary social relations of power in the Middle East by questioning the prevalent stereotypes of the region. The main focus will be on the critical investigation of relations of gender, the complexities of state formations, and the dynamics of the contemporary social counter-movements. The latter range from cosmopolitan popular uprisings (Green Movement in Iran, the Arab Spring), to ideological Islamist formations (ISIS, Muslim Brotherhood, etc.).

INT 351 | AFRICA, CULTURE, POLITICS: THE FANON CANON | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course investigates the relationship between culture and inequality using 'Africa' as a nodal point. As Ferguson notes, 'the question of cultural difference itself is...tightly bound up with questions of inequality, aspiration, and rank in an imagined "world"' (2006, 19). Using Fanonian texts on culture and politics alongside two classic texts in the area of African Studies, students will examine how the notion of culture gives form to the way we understand world politics.

INT 352 | INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND REGIONAL INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course charts the economic transformation in the Third World / Global South. The first third of the course examines theories of development and underdevelopment before moving on to a critique of the concept of development as a modernist paradigm using a postcolonial framework. The rest of the course examines the restructuring of the agricultural, manufacturing and service sectors, including the financial sector, in non-Western countries. Students are recommended but not required to take INT 349 before this course. Cross-listed with GEO 215.

INT 355 | POLITICAL ECONOMY FROM THE MARGINS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class explores examples of political-economic thought generated from the margins. We read Walter Rodney's How Europe Under Developed Africa along with other challenges to the liberal, Anglo-European political-economic vision of world politics.

INT 360 | TOPICS IN DEVELOPMENT STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the problem of endemic poverty in the Third World and the various forms of public action designed to alleviate poverty. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 362 | LANGUAGE AND THE POLITICS OF TERROR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Politics is, among other things, the arena in which human bodies are broken. This course will concern itself with the breaking of human bodies through torture, genocide, war and poverty. Throughout, a focus will be maintained on the interface between bodies and language, on how bodies placed under extremes of pain and degradation lose their capacity for speech, and how language reaches its intrinsic limits in trying to represent bodies in pain.

INT 366 | TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL LAW | 4-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in international law, human rights, and other legal topics. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 382 | INTERNSHIP RESIDENCY | 2-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Used to register credit hours for both Chicago-based and off-campus residencies to complete internship agreements and approved independent research proposals. 2-8 credit hours.

INT 383 | TOPICS IN AFRICAN STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within Africa.

INT 384 | TOPICS IN MIDDLE EASTERN STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within the Middle East. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 385 | TOPICS IN ASIAN STUDIES (SOUTH, EAST, SOUTHEAST, CENTRAL) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within South Asia. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 386 | TOPICS IN LATIN AMERICAN AND CARIBBEAN STUDIES | 4-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within Latin America and the Caribbean. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 387 | TOPICS IN EUROPEAN STUDIES | 4-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within Europe. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 388 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Courses on topics in international studies not otherwise classifiable. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 389 | INTERNATIONAL SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course provides 20-25 hours of service learning opportunities for students in organizations that are pursuing local activities based on international missions or globally-informed policies. The course meetings focus on student experiences and a discussion of state, sub-state, and non-state organizational structures in the international context.

INT 390 | TOPICS IN FOOD JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

While the need for food is universal, geographies of food production, distribution and consumption are anything but even. This leads to multiple issues of food injustice at a variety of scales. This course critically examines the contemporary global food system with the goal of providing students with skills and knowledge to engage in food justice activism. Students study the development of food systems and how inequalities have emerged in production, distribution and consumption. The course then explores food justice movements including the emergence of alternative food networks in the U.S and internationally. Assignments may engage students in local food projects and or/advocacy campaigns.

INT 392 | TOPICS IN GLOBAL URBANISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in cities and urban life in global, international, or comparative perspectives. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 393 | TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in international trade, international finance, and international macroeconomics with attention to political context. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 394 | TOPICS IN SURVEILLANCE STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Surveillance is a longstanding feature of political life. Historically and today, surveillance is one of the central means of governing. After all, institutionalized political authority "the state" cannot govern without systematized, orderly knowledge. The census, taxation, licenses, passports, and the endless forms and reporting requirements of state bureaucracies are all forms of administrative surveillance. They stand alongside the work operations of military, police, and intelligence agencies as integral legibility practices that make governing possible. In this class, we try to understanding the role of surveillance in political life. We ask the following questions: What is surveillance? Can we trace the cultural and historical roots of surveillance which today underlies the foundation of the modern state? What form does surveillance take in different situations and contexts? How does the emerging imperative of security shape the use of surveillance? How is the practice of surveillance related to scientific and technological developments? How is it changing our social life, our notions of private and public, our conceptions of public spaces, and our very understanding of the self? How can social theory inform our understanding of these developments?.

INT 395 | TOPICS IN GENDER, SEXUALITY, AND REPRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in gender, sexuality, and reproduction taken in its broadest sense. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 396 | TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Topics in organizations such as the United Nations, the Organization of American States, the World Trade Organization, the European Union, and similar organizations or trading blocs and their associated policy issues. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 398 | TOPICS IN WAR AND PEACE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Topics in war, internal and ethnic conflict, terrorism, peace, and the construction of security. (See schedule for current offerings).

INT 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Student-designed course incorporating reading and research conducted under faculty supervision. Variable credit hours.

INT 401 | CRITICAL SOCIAL THEORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

All systems of knowledge are constituted through and in turn help constitute relations of power. This course introduces students to social theory as a reflexive practice that is aware of the power-infused conditions of its own production. Students who take this course should be able to examine the society around them with critical awareness, interrogate the naturalization of social knowledge, and become aware of the conditions through which knowledge, expertise, and transformative social practices are reflexively produced.

Status as a Graduate International Studies student is a prerequisite for this course.

INT 402 | INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the historical development of the contemporary international political economy. The principle channels of interaction between states, economies, and international organizations are examined: trade and investment, diffusion of technology, institutional borrowing and adaptation, the workings of the international financial system, articulations of notions of equality and mobility. In the process, students also become familiar with a range of theoretical perspectives of IPE.

INT 404 | MIGRATION AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the integral role that different processes of mobility play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, demographic, economic, and political variables. Students also look at the role of state and non-state actors and organizations.

INT 405 | CULTURE AND INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course interrogates the concept of culture by showing the dynamic ways in which inequalities define and shape it. Students examine theories of culture and different approaches to studying culture to understand the relationship between the construction of cultural difference and social inequalities.

INT 401 is a prerequisite for this course.

INT 406 | GLOBAL EMPIRES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this course, students gain an acquaintance with theories of imperialism and post-colonial theory through historically situated studies. 'Power' serves as the generative concept for this course, to be understood as emergent at multi-scalar levels.

INT 401 is a prerequisite for this course.

INT 407 | RACE, SEX, DIFFERENCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Power circulates through systems of social hierarchies. Such hierarchies are the material basis through which difference is defined. This course examines theories of class, race, and sex to show how difference operates.

INT 408 | NATURE, SOCIETY, AND POWER | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary exploration of environmental issues pertinent to international studies. The reproduction of human societies occurs in a symbiotic relationship with the natural world, yet in the modern era nature has come to be increasingly conceptualized as a resource. This course explores the repercussions of this instrumental separation of nature from culture and society. Our conceptions of nature range from the physical environment to the human body; and the course explores a range of related political, economic, ecological, and socio-cultural issues from theoretical, comparative, and practical perspectives. Issues explored include those of environmental justice and social and political equity, and questions such as who defines what constitutes environmental issues, who is included or excluded from environmental concerns, and who benefits or is harmed by environmental changes occurring as a result of social interventions.

INT 409 | CRITICAL DEVELOPMENT THEORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The uneven integration of the world economy has been shaped by a succession of policies and theories of development, modernization, and globalization. This course investigates how these theories and policies have contributed to centrally organizing concepts such as poverty, inequality, growth, and progress, which have been instrumental in ordering contemporary societies.

INT 410 | INTERNATIONAL LAW | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course offers students the opportunity to engage in an examination of recent developments in international treaties, legal process and international organization. Topics may include refugees, trade law, criminal law and the establishment of the international criminal court, international labor law, environmental law, theories of international law, human rights and the relationship between international law and local economic development.

INT 416 | READING GRAMSCI: CULTURE POWER AND HEGEMONY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This class will read Gramsci's Prison Notebooks and more contemporary research that has deployed Gramscian thought to examine culture, power, and hegemony.

INT 417 | READING MARX'S CAPITAL | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is a close reading of volume 1 of Karl Marx's major work, Capital, a key text in contemporary social and political economic thought. Capital is a highly challenging, but ultimately rewarding text. Students are required to engage the text rigorously, and to work individually and in groups. The class format is a combination of lectures, seminar discussions, and oral presentations by students.

INT 418 | THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL LIFE OF OIL | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Since the industrial revolution hydrocarbons have reshaped every aspect of human, social, and planetary life. This course is a critical and interdisciplinary examination of the wide-ranging impact of petroleum and its derivatives on the contemporary social relations of power, as well as on nature-society/human-environment interactions.

INT 421 | INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the international processes by which scientific knowledge concerning environmental change and degradation is translated into action on the parts of individuals, groups, states, and global institutions. We look at the political, legal, economic and cultural structures that reproduce the global propensity to disrupt or degrade the environment and that likewise prevent amelioration.

INT 422 | INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL LAW | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course offers students the opportunity to engage in an examination of recent developments in international environmental law. Sub-topics may include refugees, trade law, criminal law and the establishment of the international criminal court, international labor law, theories of international law, human rights and the connection between these and international economic law.

INT 423 | INTERNATIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to public international law, with an emphasis on the law of conflict and human rights. Students learn about the sources and functions of public international law—the law between and among nation states—and how this kind horizontal system of legal regulation deals with enforcement. The course presents the idea of transnational legal processes and authority that operate across levels, scales and institutions to constrain or shape state action and identity.

INT 424 | INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC LAW FROM COLONIALISM TO GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to international economic law. Students study the international legal framework regulating states, international financial institutions and firms in their market, development, investment, trade and public sector economic interactions and functions. This course pays particular attention to the roots of global economic structuring in colonialism and how that history shapes the ways in which formerly colonized countries engage with international economic law.

INT 425 | LAW OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS, NGOS AND GLOBAL GOVERNANCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the law and function of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. We seek to understand global governance as a system by which power and authority may flow through international organizations that exist either above (intergovernmental) or below (nongovernmental) the level of states. Students will study the law and function of international courts and tribunals, including both global and regional bodies, as well as the ways civil society organizations shape global justice outcomes.

INT 427 | THE LONG LIFE OF EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces students to studies of colonialism and postcolonialism that exist within International Relations (IR). The course materials will take a critical approach to concepts often taken for granted in studying international politics. This course introduces students to the main threads of this scholarly challenge and its attendant concepts – Other, alterity, subalternity, subjectivity, knowledge, discourse, and power.

INT 428 | ORIENTALISM: COLONIZATION, MODERNITY, HISTORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course begins with Edward Said's Orientalism, a landmark text in the sense that it started a critique of the West's gaze on the East and spawned a vigorously contested and highly complex debate to this day. The course incorporates material that engages with Said's text and that builds upon it or that we can read alongside Orientalism. The assigned readings approach the topic of knowledge practices from different angles thereby incorporating concepts like gender, identity, art, primitive, colonization, modernity, and history.

INT 429 | BEYOND IMPERIALISM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This political theory course explores what it might mean to 'unlearn' our social and political education. Starting with Ariella Azoulay's insight that imperial power dynamics are both socially embedded and learned, the course works through a set of questions about what we might want or need to unlearn to in order to learn (or relearn) other modes of being. What do the stories that we tell indicate about how our world is configured? How else might we narrate our societal orientations? How can a focus on potentialities transform what is possible? The questions, coursework, and writing aim to orient us to think about how 'unlearning' might return us to a recognizable social self.

INT 431 | POLITICS OF IMMIGRATION AND INTEGRATION IN FRANCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This study abroad course will focus on critical perspectives on immigration, refugees, and the politics of integration in France. The curriculum will analyze the history of immigration in France, the politics of identity and inclusion, and the contemporary refugee crisis in France. Sub-topics include security studies and anti-terrorism efforts, social welfare assistance, and gender politics.

INT 432 | AMERICA AS EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This class explores the history, politics, and economics of the US Empire, with a particular focus on the seizure of the North American continent, incursions in Latin America, the extension into the Pacific in the later 19th century, and the contemporary hidden empire of military bases scattered around the world.

INT 440 | GEOPOLITICAL ECONOMY AND THE 'UNCONSCIOUS' | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course adds another layer of analytical complexity to our understanding of the world, namely, the "psychical unconscious" or psyche—the terrain of subjective irrationality. Using analytical tools that plumb the psyche, this course examines how identity formations of gender, sexuality, race, and person, are tied to unconscious anxieties which are also mediated by external demands and conditions. In so doing, we complicate international studies, allowing us to see how our own identity formation is tied to the vicissitudes of the world and how we are called into it. Cross-listed with INT 333.

INT 441 | SEX, GENDER, REPRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores how the global economy, the machine, and 'sex' are linked and how, today, many are seeking means for changing the processes of reproduction through technologies that are biological, surgical, surrogacy-related, and machinic in nature. These interventions are re-fashioning the 'body' in ways that are cyborgic or transhuman, opening up the meaning and reproductive purposes of sexual dimorphism to significant change. The technologies are nevertheless expensive, dividing the world up economically into differently sexed and reproductive parts.

INT 446 | GENDER AND COLONIALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course traces shifts in a feminist imaginary from its second wave to its contemporary complex iteration that encompasses ideas that students bring to class with them. Students will develop a literacy in the critique and evaluation of older sets of feminist questions and in a highly current engagement with similar questions.

INT 447 | AFRO-FEMINIST POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on Black and Afro-Feminist interventions in questions of how to understand what is at stake in and how to challenge the imperial legacies of colonial dynamics of power. The course will engage the conceptual complexity of the notions of gender and the political relations they frame. Bringing together authors like Joy James, Sylvia Tamales, Yolande Bouka, bell hooks, and others in the context of a single course will allow seminar participants to broadly investigate feminist inquiry while remaining grounded in the lived experiences that bell hooks describes in Belonging: A culture of place.

INT 448 | BLACK GEOGRAPHIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Black Geographies explores how space and power are racially linked. This linkage is easily seen in the contexts of apartheid, segregation, Jim Crow, red lining, the prison industrial complex, and environmental racism. Racialized space-power connections likewise reside in spatial tropes, like marginalization, fringe elements, sidelining, and outsider. All of these constitute spatial tactics meant to exclude, control, contain, and injure. The death-driven nature and exceptional violence of these tactics makes the extraordinary spatial generativity of Black life even more exceptional, to wit, the Maroon settlements of slavery, the Underground Railroad of Harriet Tubman, the early ballroom culture of Harlem, the Clowning and Krumping circuits of South Central LA, and the virtual spatial innovations of Black Instagram and Twitter. This generativity points to a fundamental contradiction: that those who presume they are the most free (those with the greatest capacity to own) are in fact the most un-free. Tied to a system where 'value' manifests only in possession, the freedom to love becomes impossible, a fact with extraordinary planetary-political implications.

INT 450 | SOCIETY, POLITICS AND CULTURE IN THE MIDDLE EAST | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine the formations of the historical and contemporary social relations of power in the Middle East. The main focus will be on the critical investigation of relations of gender, the complexities of state formations, and the dynamics of the contemporary social counter-movements.

INT 451 | AFRICA, CULTURE, POLITICS: THE FANON CANON | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course investigates the relationship between culture and inequality using 'Africa' as a nodal point. As Ferguson notes, 'the question of cultural difference itself is...tightly bound up with questions of inequality, aspiration, and rank in an imagined "world"' (2006, 19). Using Fanonian texts on culture and politics alongside two classic texts in the area of African Studies, students will examine how the notion of culture gives form to the way we understand world politics.

INT 455 | POLITICAL ECONOMY FROM THE MARGINS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This class explores examples of political-economic thought generated from the margins. We read Walter Rodney's How Europe Under Developed Africa along with other challenges to the liberal, Anglo-European political-economic vision of world politics.

INT 482 | INTERNSHIP RESIDENCY | 2-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Used to register credit hours for both Chicago-based and off-campus residencies to complete internship agreements and approved independent research proposals. 2-8 credit hours.

INT 483 | TOPICS IN AFRICAN STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics in the social, political, and economic institutions, and the cultural history of selected regions within Africa.

INT 488 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Special courses will be offered as students and faculty identify selected topics of common interest. This number is also used for students taking 300-level courses in the undergraduate International Studies program. In this case, students must have the approval of their thesis advisor and the director of the International Studies program before registering for the course.

INT 489 | INTERNATIONAL SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course provides 20-25 hours of service learning opportunities for students in organizations that are pursuing local activities based on international missions or globally-informed policies. The course meetings focus on student experiences and a discussion of state, sub-state, and non-state organizational structures in the international context.

INT 493 | TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Provides students writing theses in the area of international political economy with opportunities to read contemporary works in the field, including growth theories, capital and labor flows, and transformation of regimes. Students develop analytical skills that can be applied to their projects. The seminar is offered in the Spring of the first year; the course focuses on different topics under different instructors.

INT 402 is a prerequisite for this course.

INT 494 | TOPICS IN SURVEILLANCE STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the role of surveillance in social and political life. Historically and today, surveillance is one of the central means of governing. Students will examine the cultural and historical roots of surveillance, the relationship between surveillance and security, and how different forms of surveillance are practiced in specific political and cultural contexts.

INT 495 | TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Course offers students the opportunity to engage in an examination of recent developments in international treaties, legal process and international organization. Topics have included refugees, trade law, criminal law and the establishment of the international criminal court, international labor law, environmental law, theories of international law, human rights and the relationship between international law and local economic development. Students work on the international law and institutional aspects of their theses.

INT 529 | GEOGRAPHY, FOOD AND JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

While the need for food is universal, geographies of food production, distribution and consumption are anything but even. This leads to multiple issues of food injustice at a variety of scales. This course critically examines the contemporary global food system with the goal of providing students with skills and knowledge to engage in food justice activism. Students study the development of food systems and how inequalities have emerged in production, distribution and consumption. The course then explores food justice movements including the emergence of alternative food networks in the U.S and internationally. Assignments may engage students in local food projects and or/advocacy campaigns.

INT 570 | FIELD RESEARCH IN INTERNATIONAL STUDIES | 4-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Supervised independent research aimed at acquiring primary data for the thesis.

INT 590 | DIRECTED RESEARCH SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will take this course with an already approved proposal in hand. Students will be directed to further examine the approach they plan to use in order to undertake their projects and to complete a preliminary draft of their project.

INT 401 is a prerequisite for this course.

INT 591 | MASTERS RESEARCH I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will take this course as an independent study with their advisor, during which they will work on their project in line with their approved proposal.

INT 590 is a prerequisite for this class.

INT 592 | MASTERS RESEARCH II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will take this course as an independent study with their advisor during which they will complete their project.

INT 591 is a prerequisite for this class.

INT 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Student-designed course incorporating reading and research conducted under faculty supervision. Variable credit hours.

INT 601 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

INT 699 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to graduate students who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

Irish Studies (IRE)

IRE 100 | IRELAND AND THE IRISH EXPERIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores a diverse range of topics related to Ireland and the global Irish community, including the history, geography, culture and politics of Ireland and Northern Ireland; the role of religion, historically and in the present day; Irish mythology; Irish literature; the Irish Diaspora; and contemporary Ireland's role in the global political economy. The range of topics covers also serves as an introduction to the interdisciplinary field of Irish Studies and helps prepare students for further study and/or participation in Study Abroad programs in Ireland.

IRE 101 | IRELAND, 1450 - 1800, CONQUEST, COLONIZATION & REBELLION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers a survey of Irish history from the end of the middle ages to the union of Ireland and Great Britain in 1800. It traces the ways in which Ireland was brought under great English (later British) control through processes of agreement, conquest and colonization; and the ways in which various groups within Ireland sought to resist such developments. Cross-listed as HST 266 & CTH 288.

IRE 102 | HISTORY OF IRELAND FROM 1800 TO THE PRESENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of Irish history from 1800 to 2000. Examines the course of Irish history from the Act of Union (creating the United Kingdom), through the struggles and reforms of the 19th century (Catholic Emancipation, the Famine and Irish diaspora, Fenianism, Land Reform and Home Rule), to the creation of the modern nation-state of the 20th century (the Easter Rising, partition and civil war, the role of Eamon deValera, the Republic, and the Troubles). Topics include the contributions of Irish culture and its influence in Europe and the world. Cross-listed as HST 268 and CTH 289.

IRE 103 | IRELAND: RELIGION AND THE CONTEMPORARY "TROUBLES" | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of the role of two Christian denominations (Protestant and Roman Catholic) in the more recent "Troubles" in the north of Ireland. Attempts to discover the contributions of religious differences in fueling and resolving the animosities between the Unionist and Nationalist sides; studies the social-historical dimension of the troubles and the Protestant and Catholic religious activities and official responses to them. Cross-listed as CTH 274.

IRE 104 | THE EARTH'S CULTURAL LANDSCAPE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A survey of the global patterns and processes which create our world's cultures. Several cultural realms such as language, religion, folk and popular culture, ethnicity, and the built environment serve as foci for a deepened understanding of the world and its people. Cross-listed as GEO 170.

IRE 105 | GEOPOLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A survey of theories of geopolitics and international relations, the course explores issues of international security and organization, regional integration, and nationalism, state formation and conflict. Historic geopolitical cases from Europe (Northern Ireland, EU, Balkans), the Middle East and North Africa, and the Russian realm, provide opportunities to assess theoretical approaches and profile the security and foreign policy concerns of the U.S. in the new millennium.

IRE 106 | THE EUROPEAN UNION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An interdisciplinary study of European integration following WWII, with special emphases on the political philosophy, the geopolitical basis for the block's formation, the institutional structure, the evolution of policies, and the future development of the European Union. The course nurtures research and presentation skills through simulations of the European Commission and Council. Cross-listed as GEO 316 and PSC 340.

IRE 107 | RELIGIOUS GEOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Religion and geography are fundamentally intertwined. From the establishment of theocratic states that control territory, to the sprawl of US suburbia that has led to megachurches, the role of religion in shaping the earth's cultural landscape is undeniable. Religious beliefs shape geographies - there are places that, through faith, become sacred; elsewhere religious individuals and groups struggle to claim places in the name of their beliefs. This course will examine case studies from around the world to explore the intersection of geography and religion. Cross-listed as GEO 204.

IRE 201 | TOPICS IN IRISH STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

See schedule for current offerings Cross-listed as ENG 357.

IRE 202 | MODERN IRISH LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides an introduction to Irish literature, including some poems in the Irish language with English translations on facing pages, written from the Literary Revival to the late twentieth century. It emphasizes the transitions from a colonized to a postcolonial society and the slow validation of the voices of Irish women writers. Cross-listed as ENG 355.

IRE 203 | CONTEMPORARY IRISH LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the vibrancy of contemporary Irish literature. It explores the ways in which literature addresses issues such as new patterns of living, communal tension, and women's experience.

IRE 204 | IRISH LITERATURE AND FILM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students seek to examine the thematic structure of recent works of the Irish cinema in light of a selection of writings from major authors. Our study will begin with the writings of the Irish Revival and move on to contemporary fiction so as to establish an artistic base from which to investigate recent interpretations and adaptations of these materials. Then, after addressing the fundamental question "what is an Irish Film (The Quiet Man);" we will go on to a topical analysis of works dealing with central issues in the Irish cinema: politics (Michael Collins, The Wind That Shakes The Barley, The Crying Game, In the Name of the Father); urban life (The Commitments, Intermession); dystopia (Adam & Paul, The Butcher Boy), alienation, and other topics as appropriate.

IRE 249 | GENDER AND POLITICS IN IRELAND | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the often paradoxical impact of political change and social relations on women in Ireland. Political change has at times afforded women leadership opportunities; social relations have been, especially during periods of colonial rule and the ascendancy of the Church, intensely patriarchal. The course pays particular attention to the way in which, historically and today, categories of gender have been constructed and intersect with or otherwise affect politics and social relations in the Republic of Ireland or the six counties that remain part of the United Kingdom. Cross-listed with WGS 249.

IRE 301 | NINETEENTH CENTURY IRISH LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on some of the important works of nineteenth-century Irish literature. It sees them as engaging with the often traumatic political and social changes of their time. Cross-listed as ENG 346.

A literature course is a prerequisite for this course.

IRE 302 | THE IRISH REVIVAL | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The course invites a study of the cultural ferment of the decades from the 1890's to the 1920's in Ireland. Particular attention will be given to an introduction to the work of canonical writers such as Yeats and Joyce who emerged from it. Cross-listed as ENG 354.

IRE 303 | REVOLUTION AND NATIONALISM IN IRELAND | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

From the eighteenth to the twenty-first century Irish history has been defined by the emergence of national consciousness. This emerging consciousness has been expressed through violent rebellion against British rule and participation in British politics. This course traces the course of revolution and nationalism in Ireland from 1798 to 1923. This course traces the evolution of Irish nationalism and examines the historical literature of this subject. Key themes include: agrarian unrest, parliamentary politics, ideological revolution and the interaction of these forces to achieve independence.

IRE 379 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Intensive study of a topic of special interest which is relevant to Irish Studies, normally in one of the curricular areas in which Irish Studies is taught in the minor, and usually with a faculty member who teaches in the Irish Studies program. An independent study typically involves private conferences with an instructor and supervised reading, research and writing. Written permission of the supervising faculty member and of the program director is necessary before registration.

IRE 398 | INTERNSHIP | 1-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course combines academic study with practical experience obtained through work in an extramural internship setting or on campus that relates to Ireland or Irish-America. The internship course requires academic output in the form of a research journal, paper, or other project.

Islamic World Studies (IWS)

IWS 116 | INTRODUCTION TO ISLAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to the religion of Islam through its sources, practices, and presence in the contemporary world. In this introduction we will briefly explore the Qur'an, the Prophet Muhammad, hadith, law, ritual and practices, and sectarian movements as well as some of the modern reform movements. This course will take primarily an historical approach to the study of Islam.

IWS 141 | THE MUSLIM WORLD, 600 - 1100 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Foundation of First Global Civilization (600-1100). A study of the emergence of Islam and the growth of the Islamic community from the time of the Prophet Muhammad until the end of the eleventh century. Cross-listed with HST 141.

IWS 142 | THE MUSLIM WORLD, 1000-1500 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sultans, Khans and Shaykhs: Medieval Islamic History (1000-1500). A survey of Muslim history from the decline of the Arab caliphate to the rise of the great gunpowder empires, addressing themes of political expansion, military slavery, devastation brought about by the twin plagues of the Mongols and the Black Death, and the growth of Islamic mysticism.

IWS 143 | THE MUSLIM WORLD, 1400-1920 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Great Empires (1400-1920). Examines the social, cultural and economic histories of the Ottoman-Turkish, Safavid Iranian and Mughal-Indian empires which dominated the Muslim world in the crucial centuries between the end of the Mongol empire and the advent of European dominance.

IWS 171 | INTRODUCTION TO THE QUR'AN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of the origin, transmission, and interpretation of the Qur'an.

IWS 190 | SACRED TEXTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A survey of the formation, use and interpretation of sacred texts by religious and secular communities.

IWS 192 | ISLAMIC WORLD STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the Islamic world, a world impacted by the religion of Islam, but not solely defined by it. The study of fundamental religious texts such as the Qur'an and the Hadith provide an understanding of the basic parameters that characterize this world. The course then explores how these basic parameters impact the history, geography, politics, philosophy, culture, and social life of Muslim majority and minority communities, while simultaneously underlining their diverse and pluralistic character.

IWS 201 | GEOPOLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A survey of theories of geopolitics and international relations, the course explores issues of international security and organization, regional integration, and nationalism, state formation and conflict. Historic geopolitical cases from Europe (Northern Ireland, EU, Balkans), the Middle East and North Africa, and the Russian realm, provide opportunities to assess theoretical approaches and profile the security and foreign policy concerns of the U.S. in the new millennium.

IWS 203 | RELIGIOUS GEOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Religion and geography are fundamentally intertwined. From the establishment of theocratic states that control territory, to the sprawl of US suburbia that has led to megachurches, the role of religion in shaping the earth's cultural landscape is undeniable. Religious beliefs shape geographies - there are places that, through faith, become sacred; elsewhere religious individuals and groups struggle to claim places in the name of their beliefs. This course will examine case studies from around the world to explore the intersection of geography and religion.

IWS 204 | CULTURAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course asks students to examine economic and cultural practices together so as to see the complicated ways in which such practices intersect and/or give rise to one another. Drawing on a variety of materialist perspectives, students study the economic and cultural instrumentality that different family structures and constructions of sexuality, gender, and race have held across time and place and how and why such structures have changed. Students also analyze the cultural logic of disposability in capitalism, both in terms of garbage-generation and the generation of surplus populations.

IWS 215 | MUSLIMS IN AMERICAN FICTION AND FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will analyze the portrayal of Islam and Muslims by American fiction writers, documentary and screenwriters. Students will use normal analytical categories as they read popular mystery thrillers, romance novels, watch documentaries and review major movies.

IWS 217 | ISLAMIC CULTURES AND SOCIETIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of Islam's developments in various global contexts, including Arabian beginnings, the Middle East, Central, Eastern and Western Europe, China, the former Soviet States and South Africa, with a focus on the impacts that these cultures and Islam have had on each other.

IWS 230 | ISLAMIC FINANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a comprehensive introduction to Islamic finance, from its religious and legal origins and principles to its most advanced forms. This course focuses on the underlying principles of Islamic finance through a study of its scriptural and jurisprudential origins and reviews most of its products such as Mud'raba, Mush'raka, Mur'baha, Project finance, Suk'k, Tak'ful, Ij'ra and equity mutual funds etc. The course also examines today's Islamic finance industry with a closer look at the structure and governance of contemporary Islamic financial institutions and international regulatory bodies.

IWS 231 | INDIA FROM 900-1750 - SULTANS, MUGHALS, AND ISLAMIC EMPIRES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course begins with the transformation of society from the 'ancient' to the 'medieval', and compares this to developments in Europe in the feudal age. It then incorporates specific political, social, and cultural developments in South Asia that came about with the establishment of powerful Islamic states in a region where Muslims were a minority. These issues will inform the analysis of the Ghaznavid and Ghurid invasions, the Delhi Sultanate, the Vijayanagara empire and the Mughal empire. The course will end with the Marathas and the decline of the Mughal empire, and the rising influence of the British. The central themes concern how the state, economy, culture, and society developed in the period when Islam became firmly embedded in South Asia.

IWS 232 | INDIA FROM 1700-1950 - RISE AND FALL OF THE BRITISH RAJ | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course begins with the decline of the Mughal Empire, and then moves to examine the British empire, the nationalist movement and finally to independence and partition in 1947. The central questions of this course continue to be relevant in the post-colonial period: how we understand the distinctive form of modernity that has developed in South Asia. Taking a comparative approach as often as possible, the course examines the fundamental ways that Britain was as transformed by the development of its empire as was colonial India. The course constantly deconstructs easy binaries of self and others/ East and West by examining the differences within Indian and British society.

IWS 233 | THE ART OF CRUSADING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the Crusades. More specifically, it focuses on the world within which the Crusades were born and the Levantine kingdom built as a result of their initial success. Our study will depend on primary artistic, literary, and archaeological materials, as well as the secondary scholarship that has identified and interpreted these materials. Our understanding of this historical moment will be nuanced by the questions we ask of both. The payoff will be an appreciation for the religious, social, political, and artistic forces that defined the twelfth and thirteen centuries in Europe and in the Mediterranean basin, leading as they did to such fascinating phenomena as pilgrimage, the cult of relics, chivalry, holy war, the rise of military orders, and the establishment of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem itself.

IWS 234 | COMPARATIVE URBANISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of non-U.S. urban and planning traditions, through the urban morphological and comparative study of the foundation, and social-political forces that shaped cities such as Paris, St. Petersburg, Istanbul, Bombay-Mumbai, Hong Kong, and Mexico City.

IWS 240 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN ISLAMIC WORLD STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics vary each term. (May be taken more than once).

IWS 242 | AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of the forces that shape the broad outlines of United States foreign policy, including historical background, and the effects of social forces and governmental structures. The challenges, opportunities and constraints presented by the international environment are also considered.

IWS 251 | ISLAMIC ART | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of the origins of Islamic culture in Arabia and the spread of Islamic art and religion across the Middle East, North Africa, Spain, Sicily, Iran, India, and Central Asia; emphasizes the meaning of religious imagery.

IWS 255 | MIDDLE EAST POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores contemporary political issues in the Middle East. It includes country profiles, a review of the Arab-Israeli conflict, analysis of opposing viewpoints about the revival of Islam and about Islamic fundamentalism, and the region's position in the emerging new world order.

IWS 261 | RELIGION AND CONFLICT IN SOUTH ASIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Religion has become central to conflict in contemporary South Asia. This course examines the relationship between religion and conflict both within and between nations in South Asia. It will examine how religion fuels conflict as well as how religion is used to find a nonviolent resolution to conflict. It will also analyze how religion is used to challenge and resist victimization, marginalization, silencing, and indeed violence during conflict. Finally, the course will examine how the cultural politics of class, gender, ethnicity, and sexuality constitute and are constituted by religion.

IWS 263 | RELIGION AND POLITICS IN THE MIDDLE EAST | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of Judaism, Christianity and Islam as they develop and interact in the Middle East, historically and in terms of contemporary religious and political issues. Includes a study of personal narratives of people from Jewish, Christian and Muslim communities.

IWS 265 | ISLAMIST POLITICAL MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce the student to Islamic political movements around the globe. The course will look at their history as well as their intellectual and theological underpinnings.

IWS 266 | ISLAM IN THE UNITED STATES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore Muslim cultures in Canada and the U. S. While the course may also investigate histories, ethnicities and religious ideologies, the organizing focus will be on struggle, contestation, maturity and change. Although Canadian provinces and U.S. states claim that religion should present no bar to full participation in the public square and religious discrimination is illegal, Muslims, in fact, are challenged as citizens. Living in religious Diasporas as minorities, communities north and south of the Canadian border, Muslims have found themselves contesting notions of integration, pluralism and acculturation. Often labeled "as the enemies within," Muslims have laid their claims as productive citizens, determined to contribute to the security, welfare and advancement of their home.

IWS 272 | GENDER AND SEXUALITY IN MUSLIM CULTURES | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Explores historical and contemporary trends in writing on Muslim women along modern and contemporary narratives on gender and sexuality in Muslim majority and minority cultures.

IWS 278 | HADITH: TRADITIONS OF THE PROPHET MUHAMMAD | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to the hadith (the tradition of the Prophet Muhammad). The course will look at the historical development of the collection, study, and criticism of the hadith. Students will learn the utilization of the hadith in the establishment of Muslim religious practices, law, political and cultural norms. Students will become familiar with the technical terms that are utilized by the scholars of hadith. Students will also come to understand the modern debates about hadith study and hadith utility (or lack thereof) in the modern world.

IWS 294 | MEDIEVAL PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of selected thinkers and issues from the Medieval period.
(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

IWS 295 | SHI'ITE ISLAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will look at the history and the various divisions of Shi'i Islam.

IWS 301 | ARAB BROADCAST MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course improves students' competence in listening, reading comprehension, writing, and presentation skills in the content of Arab media. The main language of instruction will be Modern Standard Arabic (MSA), the language of Arab news. Both instructor and students will be using MSA as the main language for communication. Classroom instruction will assist students in acquiring and using Arabic vocabulary needed for understanding and analyzing authentic Arabic media material. The course will focus on five main topics: (1) Meetings and Conferences, (2) Demonstrations, (3) Elections, (4) Courts and Trials, and (5) Finance and Business. In addition to topics and vocabulary covered in the required textbooks, students will listen to and discuss authentic news items. They will also be exposed to Egyptian dialect. ARB 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

IWS 302 | AFRICAN ISLAM: ISLAMIC ART & ARCHITECTURE IN SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Focused study of the impact of Islam on the artistic traditions of sub-Saharan Africa. Rather than necessarily replacing previous art forms, this course investigates in what circumstances preexisting visual culture might be integrated with the requirements and needs of Islam. This approach necessitates an understanding that neither Islam nor African art are monolithic entities, but rather their interactions represent a wide variety of negotiations across the continent. Likewise, this course will consider specific historical circumstances to which Islamic art in sub-Saharan Africa has responded in terms of form and content.

IWS 303 | ARABIC PRINT MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course consists of intensive exposure to vocabulary and expressions characteristic of language used in Arab media. The course will rely on newspaper articles and authentic material in addition to the Media Arabic textbook. The focus of the course will be on enforcing vocabulary learned in ARB 301 that will assist students in understanding the content of Arab print Media and translating texts into English. Presentations and discussions will be used to enforce meaning and increase vocabulary retention and proper use. ARB 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

IWS 306 | GLOBAL EMPIRES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students gain an acquaintance with theories of imperialism and post-colonial theory through historically situated studies. 'Power' serves as the generative concept for this course, to be understood as emergent at multi-scalar levels.

IWS 307 | WOMEN IN THE MIDDLE EAST: BEYOND THE VEIL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores how Middle Eastern Women have been represented in the media outside of the Middle East, by Arab women scholars, and "Third World" feminists and challenges these representations by focusing on issues such as veiling, the everyday lives of Middle Eastern Women, political activism, literary works, economics and social class, and media representations.

IWS 308 | NATURE AS RESOURCE: MINING & EXTRACTION'S IMPACT ON ENVIRONMENT & SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Environmental crises such as climate change, pollution, loss of habitats and species etc. are directly linked to human activity and the treatment of the natural world as a mere resource. This course investigates the impact and consequences of mining and extractive industries on societies and the environment. The extraction and consumption of minerals and fossil fuels have increased so dramatically since the end of the Cold War and the advent of neoliberal globalization that a consensus has emerged that we now live in a 'mineral age' defined by this new extractivism. We will analyze the dynamics behind this new extractivism and its environmental and social consequences. Various critical theories of the relationship between nature and society will be studied. Case studies will explore mining and fossil fuel extractions in Asia, Africa, Middle East, Latin and North Americas. We will investigate the role of multinational corporations, lobbyists, technical and scientific experts, and state actors in extractive industries, and how they affect local populations, labor relations, and social and natural habitats.

IWS 311 | ARABIC SHORT STORIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A survey of the history and development of short stories in Arabic literature from various Arab countries with focus on language, content analysis, forms, and cultural content relevant to major elements of Arab culture. ARB 106 or the equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

IWS 313 | ARABIC FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of the development of Arabic films in the Arab world with examination of sample works from various periods that allow reflection on Arab culture and the social, political, and religious issues that define that culture. ARB 106 or the equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

IWS 316 | RELIGION, NATIONALISM AND POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

IWS 350 | ARABIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces the students to Modern Arabic Literature in form, language, and content. It will focus on various genres, including poetry, drama, the novel, and short stories. Works by major Arab writers and poets representing various regions and content will be examined and analyzed to develop an appreciation for Arab literature and a deeper understanding of their portrayal of Arab culture. ARB 106 or the equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

IWS 372 | CAIRO: MOTHER OF THE WORLD (WORLD CITIES) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the urban development and architectural heritage of Greater Cairo, Egypt since the reconstruction of the fortress of Babylon in the Roman period, through the establishment of Cairo itself in 969, and until the present. Cairo has always been a crossroads of cultures, set between Africa, Europe, and the Middle East. It has been home to significant Jewish, Christian and Muslim populations who have been impacted by the various ruling dynasties who have held sway there, including the Byzantines, early Islamic rulers, Tulunids, Shi'i Fatimids, and later Sunni Ayyubids, Mamluks, and Ottomans. In the 20th century, rapid expansion has produced extreme pressures on transportation networks and housing. The solution to such problems of intense urbanization has been to build satellite cities including a projected new capital to the east that will connect the Nile to the Red Sea shipping industry, following in the footsteps of the past.

IWS 390 | THEORIES AND METHODS IN ISLAMIC STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the methodologies and theories that have shaped the field of Islamic Studies from its foundation in Europe through the present day. Students will become familiar with the different theories with regards to Islamic origins and the methodological approaches that are at the foundation of these theories. Students will also learn about the interplay between power and scholarship and its effects on the production of knowledge. Doing the above students will learn the mechanics of research in the field.

IWS 191 and IWS 192 are prerequisites for this courseIWS 395 | SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a seminar for Islamic World Studies majors. It is both an opportunity to reflect on what has been gained from studies and experiences in Islamic studies and an opportunity to strengthen that learning and expand those experiences with direct contact with Muslim communities in Chicago and overseas through the Soliya Program. Students will meet with leaders and members of Chicago's Muslim communities and through Soliya meet with their peers in universities here and abroad. Soliya, through a partnership with the United Nations Alliance of civilizations aims to reduce tensions across cultural divides. This aspect of the course will be integrated throughout with the assistance of Jennifer Von Diehle, Assistant director for International Collaborations at DePaul.

ITA 260E | EAT ITALY: THE HISTORY, CULTURE AND POLITICS OF ITALIAN FOOD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH. In this course students will look at the modern and contemporary history of Italian food in Italy and the United States to explore and reflect on the material, symbolic, personal, and political implications of this global commodity. Through a variety of primary sources both textual and visual and multidisciplinary critical sources, students will discuss the symbolic and material forces that shaped food choices; the production, marketing, preparation, and consumption of meals; and the access to food from Italy's Unification to the present. Weekly topics will span from cinema's most memorable Italian meals to ethnographic studies of everyday meals in twenty-first century Italian families; from the success of Pellegrino Artusi's cookbook to the star system of Italian-American celebrity chefs to Italian-American culinary literature. The course will conclude with a small-group practicum in which students will document and reflect upon their own process in preparing and eating an Italian meal.

ITA 262E | STYLE MATTERS: ITALIAN FASHION THROUGH LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH. This course is an introduction to Italian fashion from the early-modern period to the present, with an emphasis on understanding fashion through literature in which dress is centrally featured. The word 'style' is derived from the Latin 'stilus' or writing tool, an etymology that invites us to investigate the shared language of the discourse on the arts. We will thus learn to appreciate the formal qualities of dress (the lines, shapes, proportions, fabrics, colors, patterns and decorations) that identify the style of a period or designer, and the linguistic choices, tropes and figures of writers of the period who incorporated fashion in their writing. Costume books and literary sources, from Baldassarre Castiglione's Book of the Courtier to Elena Ferrante's Troubling Love, will be complemented by reproductions of paintings, prints, sketches, drawings, photographs, and film. Critical texts will help us unveil the complex aesthetic, political, and social functions that dressmakers, writers, and society as a whole attributed to fashion as they pursued beauty or another aesthetic experience, but also exerted power, challenged definitions of gender, expressed sexuality, or displayed wealth. Some of the questions we will ask are: what is a style? Is fashion art or a language? How does the literary representation of fashion change through the centuries? When and how does satire operate? What can we learn about a period's aesthetics through descriptions of gendered clothing in literature? How does a color or fabric function as a tool for identity building or disguise, as a symbol of emancipation and revolution or conformism? Do ethics have a role in the production and consumption of fashion as a commodity?.

ITA 301 | ORIGINS OF ITALIAN LITERATURE: THE MIDDLE AGES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to the major developments in Italian literature from its origins to Dante's Vita nuova. Topics will include: the origins of Italian poetry in the courtly tradition; medieval popular song and verse; the Sicilian school and the court of Frederick II; northern Italian didactic and spiritual literature; Tuscan lyric and the "dolce stil novo." As students familiarize themselves with the historical, philosophical and religious context of medieval writers, they will also learn about poetic verse forms and techniques of close literary analysis. ITA 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

ITA 302 | MASTERPIECES OF THE ITALIAN RENAISSANCE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

During the Renaissance the questions raised by human experience in the world came to the forefront of intellectual and artistic inquiry. Starting in the fifteenth and more prominently in the sixteenth centuries, Italian writers and artists developed new concepts of subjectivity and agency and looked at human identity as something made rather than found. This course explores how sixteenth century Italian intellectuals and artists experimented and reflected on fashioning their selves through speaking, writing, self-portraiture, clothing and other practices. Readings include selections of comedies, love and epic poems, letters, autobiographies, how-to manuals, political treatises and memoirs by Niccolò Machiavelli, Baldassarre Castiglione, Gaspara Stampa, Moderata Fonte, Lodovico Ariosto, Torquato Tasso, and others. ITA 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

ITA 303 | LITERATURE AND SCIENCE IN ITALY: 1600-1800 | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Should literature primarily educate or entertain? Should it follow the model of ancient masters or explore experimentation and novelty? Should scientific prose be simple or adorned? What is the role of human reason, imagination, and divine Providence in shaping history? Does each language have a specific genius? Should an autobiography be simply accurate or imaginative? These are just a few of the compelling questions raised by Italian poets, writers, historians, politicians, philosophers, and scientists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Readings from this course will include works from these disciplines, and selections from literary masterpieces such as Emanuele Tesauro's treatise Il cannocchiale aristotelico, Galileo Galilei's Dialogo sopra i due massimi sistemi del mondo, Giovan Battista Marino's poem Adone, Giambattista Vico's Principi di scienza nuova, Carlo Goldoni's comedy La locandiera, Giuseppe Parini's poem Il giorno and Vittorio Alfieri's autobiographical Vita. ITA 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

ITA 304 | ITALIAN CIVILIZATION I: THE MIDDLE AGES AND RENAISSANCE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to medieval and Renaissance Italy, from about the year 1000 through 1600. Students will discover the social and political history and the art and literature of this critical period of Western civilization. They will follow the emergence of the vernacular; the development of the medieval court and city, the era of Dante and Giotto, the rise of Humanism and the Renaissance with towering figures such as Machiavelli, Leonardo, and Michelangelo, and study the figures of the courtier, historian, politician, artist, and letterato in the High Renaissance. By reading medieval and Renaissance texts in the original, students will expand their understanding of language as a process in constant change. ITA 106 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

ITA 305 | TOWARDS UNIFICATION: ROMANTICS, REVOLUTIONARIES, AND REALISTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

ITA 420 | ITALIAN FOR BUSINESS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Italian for business presupposes good knowledge of Italian grammatical structures upon which to build. The course focuses on acquiring business vocabulary, skills for dealing with Italian business partners, and comprehending specialized business journals and reports. An overview of Italy's role of the European Union and the Eurozone are integral to the course.

ITA 421 | TRANSLATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The main objective of this course is to introduce students to some fundamental principles of translation and to allow them to acquire techniques for translating a variety of texts from Italian to English and, to a more limited extent, from English to Italian. Through intensive work in the two languages, students will improve their overall Italian language skills, learn about the challenges and rewards involved in translation, and begin to prepare themselves for advanced or professional translation work. Students will learn to take responsibility for their final work product on both individual and group projects. Students will also review Italian verb forms, study the history and theory of translation, and work with online and computer translation tools. There will be a wide variety of texts at different levels of difficulty and diverse content: academic and philosophical prose, journalism, advertising, commercial Italian, recipes and cooking shows, literary and poetic texts, opera libretti and pop music. This course will also provide students ample opportunity to practice their spoken Italian and conversation skills.

ITA 429 | ITALIAN FILM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course presents an overview of Italian film, highlighting the most important directors and films. Students shall not only examine the works as films, that is particular semiotic systems, but also as particular cultural products.

ITA 432 | ITALIAN CIVILIZATION II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course presents an overview of Baroque, Enlightenment and Pre-Risorgimento civilization and culture. Students will explore literature, but also art, architecture, science, politics and other areas of civilization as they relate to the artistic world. Primary sources may include Tommaso Campanella's utopia The City of the Sun; the scientific treatises of Galilei, Torricelli, and Redi; the sculptures of Bernini and Canova; Metastasio's libretti; Cesare Beccaria's treatise On Crimes and Punishments, Goldoni and Alfieri's autobiographies. By the end of the quarter, students will have a firm understanding of this period, know the major figures of these centuries, and will be able to discuss the texts and images in class as cultural "artifacts" of a particular period of Italian history.

ITA 440 | ITALIAN CIVILIZATION III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course presents an overview of the artistic, social, economic and political developments of Modern Italy from industrialization and unification through the fascist era to contemporary society. Students should gain an understanding of Italian culture during this exciting period. They will also improve their Italian language skills, particularly reading academic texts and writing shorter papers. This course will introduce students to Italy in the twentieth century. By the end of the quarter, students should understand how Italy developed as a nation in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries, how it became an industrial power, how and why fascism became a force, and how Italy developed as a modern nation after World War II. Students shall study these developments in art, in society, in the business world, and through media.

ITA 451 | HISTORY OF THE ITALIAN LANGUAGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

When was the origin of Italian language? Why did Dante, Machiavelli, and Galileo turn to the emergent vernacular when most writers, historians and philosophers still used Latin? Why did Goldoni and Alfieri write in French in the 18th century? How did the language of Italian cuisine, opera, sport, and fashion contribute to shape an Italian identity? Why are written and spoken Italian so different? Is there anything such as an Italian language or should one rather talk about Italian languages (italiani regionali, italiano popolare, italiano standard, dialetti)? In this course students will respond to these and other compelling questions on Italian language. After a general overview of the history of Italian language from the ninth to the twenty-first century, students will focus on its changes in some crucial areas of Italian culture and society.

ITA 452 | ITALIAN LANGUAGE IN THE SOCIETY OF COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course addresses the changes in Italian language usage since the 1980s in a variety of contexts. Students will discuss the impact of the internet, mobile phones, videogames, and social media on Italian language and style in a variety of communicative contexts and become familiar with the linguistic usage in recent politics, commercials, comics, fiction, and TV shows. A variety of critical and theoretical readings will help students reflect on the relation between language, culture, and technology.

ITA 453 | ITALIAN PHONOLOGY AND PHONETICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to Italian phonetics and phonology. After studying the basic principles of general linguistics students will learn the terminology of articulatory phonetics through a systematic analysis of Italian vowels and consonants. They will learn how Italian sounds are produced, described, and transcribed using the characters of the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). They will also develop an understanding of the distinction between phonemes and allophones as applied to contemporary spoken Italian, and learn about some regional variants of spoken Italian and the evolution of Italian from Latin. Along with the theoretical component of the course, students will also have ample opportunity in class and working online to practice their spoken Italian and improve their pronunciation by reducing or eliminating their accent.

ITA 495 | FOREIGN LANGUAGES ACROSS THE CURRICULUM | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The two credit FLAC course allows students to enrich their experience in the co-required course through added reading, writing, listening and speaking activities in Italian. Students must have the equivalent of 106 or higher ability in Italian to take this two credit component. Please contact the Department of Modern Languages if you have questions about this course or about language placement.

ITA 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

ITA 496 | PRACTICUM IN ITALIAN INSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Supervised practice in language instruction, paired with a mentor instructor in a beginning or intermediate language course. Students observe a class, teach a lesson or lessons, assist in assessment and lesson planning, and complete individualized assignments to develop their skills as classroom language instructors. Repeatable.

JPN 240E | MODERN JAPANESE LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH (i.e. NOT counted as an Advanced Japanese Language course.) This course is an introduction to the major authors and works of Japan's modern period, from the 18th century through the 21st century. We will examine writers, works, and literary institutions in historical context to explore how Japanese writers engaged the modern era. This was the period when modern literature, more specifically the novel (shosetsu), was emerging internationally as a new technology of state-building. Modern Japan was highly literate with a flourishing popular culture that included diverse literary forms (high and low) that would be refashioned, contested and sometimes abandoned as the institution of literature was established by the turn of the 20th century, although not without ongoing contestation. Themes may include: the West, Orientalism and Counter-Orientalism; protest literature by women, workers and ethnic minorities; and modernism and modernity. Authors may include: Higuchi Ichiyo, Natsume Soseki, Yosano Akiko, Akutagawa Ryunosuke, Kobayashi Takiji, Murakami Haruki, and others.

JPN 241E | JAPANESE WOMEN'S LITERARY MASTERPIECES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH (i.e. NOT counted as an Advanced Japanese Language course.) The course begins over 1000 years ago with masterpieces of world literature including The Tale of Genii and classical poetry, traverses through the modern period of New Women Bluestocking and arrive in the 21st century to reflect on the richness of Japanese women's writings across time and space. * No prior knowledge of Japanese language, history or culture necessary.

JPN 242E | JAPANESE POP CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH (i.e. NOT counted as an Advanced Japanese Language course.) Globally celebrated for its creativity, world-building, and complexity, Japanese pop culture - including anime, manga, J-pop, drama, collectible figurines, cosplay, TV drama, film, and video games - continues to push the boundaries of what it means to be human in the 21st century. Students will strengthen skills to analyze screen arts and other cultural products with specialized attention to how the content is conveyed in historical context. Themes include cyber-physical blending, gender-bending and performance, historical memory, national identity, and what it means for individuals to grow up in an era of recession and to be connected in an increasingly digitized world.

JPN 243E | CONTEMPORARY JAPANESE LITERATURE: FROM POSTWAR TO TODAY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to major and emerging literature of Japan's contemporary period from the postwar period through today. The past eight decades include Japan's rebuilding and reckoning with total defeat, ascent to economic world power followed by nagging recession, and a diversification of literary voices and themes. Writers include postwar canonical writers such as Dazai Osamu, Mishima Yukio, and Oe Kenzaburo; Okinawan writers Yamanokuchi Baku and Shima Tsuyoshi; Korean-Japanese writers Yi Yang-ji and Noguchi Kakuchu; German-Japanese Tawada Yoko; Murakami Haruki; and a diverse, exciting array of recent Akutagawa-prize winning writers such Ogawa Yoko, Murata Sayaka, Li Kotomi, and Oyamada Hiroko. Students will learn strategies to analyze literature as a narrative, as well as learn how to ask questions about the importance of extra-textual material including historical context and the author's biography. There are no prerequisites for this course and all the readings will be in English translation.

JOUR 351 | SOCIAL JUSTICE REPORTING 1 | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Too often conventional journalism covers communities of color and other marginalized groups with bias, infrequency, and little connection with those communities. New directions in journalism recognize the importance of connecting and engaging with diverse communities to listen, build trust and develop stories that include their voices and perspectives. These initiatives reach into communities to better address social, racial, cultural and environmental issues impacting them with stories that are more authentic and less extractive. This course provides hands-on experience working with community-based organizations (CBOs) and communities of color to develop and produce media addressing grassroots actions for social change, equity, and community empowerment. Students will be assigned or select a CBO representative to collaborate with as a primary source to gain deeper understanding of the issue(s), context and perspectives of those engaged in and impacted by the actions undertaken. Previous CBO collaborators have included Asian Americans Advancing Justice Chicago, Brighton Park Neighborhood Council, Chi Fresh Kitchen, Grow Greater Englewood, North Lawndale Parent & Community Coalition, and Restaurant Opportunities Center Chicago. Course requirements include attending site visits, community events and other opportunities to become familiar with the community and its residents or service constituents. Final stories will be submitted for distribution in Chicago-area independent print and digital media. Publications have included the podcast series Change Agents, Southside Weekly, Gazette Chicago, Windy City Times, Sixty Inches from Center, and 14 East magazine. Stories are also shared in community engagement events with the community partners. Instructor strongly recommends that students enroll in both courses sequentially. Instructor permission required, email jmccray1@depaul.edu.

Students must already be familiar with DSLR cameras and basic techniques of lighting and composition.

JOUR 276 or JOUR 280 is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 360 | POLITICAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the political communication process, including the press, public opinion, civic life, elections, public policy, civic institutions, and other elements of democratic decision-making. Students study how journalists, politicians, citizens, and political strategists construct, transmit, and understand political messages at all levels of government, including how news, advertising, and entertainment media contribute to the shaping of political perceptions, emotions, and behaviors in a variety of circumstances domestically and internationally. Topics covered include how the political communication is affected by different forms of government and press systems; ownership and regulation economics of journalism; the sociological processes of the news industry; the psychological and sociological effects of news; and technological forces and shifting news consumption patterns.

JOUR 361 | JOURNALISM LAW AND ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines legal and ethical issues in journalism with a focus on the First Amendment and the rights and responsibilities of the news media. Students will learn the constitutional rights of all citizens regarding censorship, defamation, privacy, intellectual property, and commercial speech, and will study how technological developments are challenging the courts with how to apply the law to digital media. Those legal aspects are considered in relation to case studies that chronicle journalists' ethical responsibilities, including protecting sources, balancing professional duties and personal values, sharing and using social media content, and avoiding deceptive reporting practices.

JOUR 362 | THE PRESS AND THE PRESIDENCY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This seminar describes the current and historic relationship between the mass media and the American presidency, focusing on the connections between press coverage to agenda-setting and public opinion in presidential campaigns. Students will analyze conditions in which press-presidential relations are cooperative or adversarial, including the market forces that have shaped that relationship and the news values that have reinforced it.

JOUR 364 | INVESTIGATIVE REPORTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course will include discussions and reporting projects that will analyze how investigative story ideas are developed; how decisions are made in the selection and development of investigative stories; how public records and other sources of information are obtained and used in investigative reporting; ethical dilemmas; and the impact of investigative journalism on public opinion and policy, with a particular focus on issues of race, diversity, and urban affairs.

JOUR 275 and 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 365 | TELEVISION NEWS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a course in electronic newsgathering. Student teams will shoot and edit stand up news packages. To do this, students will learn the basic elements in developing a broadcast news story—from originating the story idea, researching it, illustrating it, doing interviews, and then packaging the story for air.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 330 are a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 366 | MAGAZINE REPORTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The digital world of reporting and editing has created unparalleled opportunities to reach specific readers with targeted stories. This course introduces students to the opportunities of magazine writing and the strategies used by magazine writers. Writing assignments will strengthen a student's grasp of the resources available to modern magazine writers and the techniques of research and interviewing that are the basis of skilled storytelling.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 are a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 367 | INTERNATIONAL REPORTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed as a workshop to introduce students to the practice of international reporting. It provides students with the background, knowledge and techniques needed to cover world affairs. Discussion topics include reporting strategies, challenges and opportunities for foreign correspondence in the light of globalization and technological change. Students are expected to develop cross-cultural sensitivity and critical thinking about international news. As much as possible, the course links global issues to the local community.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 368 | SPORTS REPORTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sports reporting is a go-to destination for online, print, and broadcast consumers of sports information. This course gives students an understanding of the social and cultural significance of sports. It trains them to look for themes and details that go beyond the simple score of a contest to the symbolic importance of athletics in the post-modern experience. Students will complete the course with a new appreciation for what makes for strong sports reporting and what accounts for its unique hold on the popular imagination.

JOUR 370 | MULTIMEDIA NEWS PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course builds on what students learned in Introduction to Online Reporting and Production. The emphasis is on developing a story package that utilizes interactivity and multimedia features to engage the online audience. The class is designed to simulate the workflow in digital newsrooms. Students are expected to develop and manage content for a class project, thereby gaining hands-on learning of the process of multimedia news production.

JOUR 280 is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 371 | ADVANCED REPORTING I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced Reporting I combines classroom instruction with hands-on field experience producing professional-quality broadcast reporting. Students select a single topic for the class and participate in the initial research, production, scripting and editing. Some stories may take longer than one quarter to complete, therefore a two-quarter commitment is required. In addition students must have a working knowledge of government at the local, state and federal level. Students will be required to file Freedom of Information Act requests and track campaign contributions. The class is open to a limited number of underclass and graduate students who will need to make application for the class at the Center for Journalism, Integrity and Excellence.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 and instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 372 | ADVANCED REPORTING II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced Reporting II is a continuation of the project work started in JOUR 371 and combines classroom instruction with hands-on field experience broadcast reporting. Students continue reporting work on their topics including research, production, scripting and editing. Projects reach completion in the second of the two-course sequence. As in JOUR 371, students must have a working knowledge of government at the local, state and federal level. Students will be required to file Freedom of Information Act requests and track campaign contributions. The class is open to a limited number of underclass and graduate students who will need to make application for the class at the Center for Journalism, Integrity and Excellence.

JOUR 275, JOUR 278, JOUR 371 and instructor consent are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 374 | COMMUNITY JOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course guides students to examine and develop reporting practices that respond to community interests and create journalism that is "for" rather than "about" Chicago residents. Students will analyze issues of framing, language and subject matter to help reduce bias in their coverage. The course will emphasize conversations with professional journalists who are committed to accurate and inclusive reporting for all residents.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 375 | LONG FORM JOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a project-based television reporting class that emphasizes longer form magazine and documentary journalism. Students will examine and apply story telling methods used in television news magazine programs and documentaries. The course will cover story arcs, character development, timelines, and other form techniques. Students will be in the field producing TV news magazine and mini-documentary reports.

JOUR 365 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 376 | TOPICS IN JOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours

JOUR 380 | REPORTING FOR GOOD DAY DEPAUL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will give students extensive experience doing on-air reporting for the DePaul student television news program, "Good Day DePaul." Reporters will cover breaking news stories, features, and serious enterprise stories. Students must have experience shooting in the field and editing in Final Cut Pro, either through previous television news courses at DePaul, or from other work. Students will be permitted to take this course in two different quarters.

JOUR 365 and 278 are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 382 | ADVANCED PHOTOJOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course builds on the introductory lessons of Photojournalism training by helping students gain experience with professional photo equipment and building skills in publishing images professionally. Students will learn about shooting, editing and sharing their work via digital media platforms while developing an understanding of the ethical obligations of photographers in news organizations.

JOUR 276 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this course.

JOUR 385 | TELEVISION NEWS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Television News II builds on the knowledge students have gained in our introductory Television News class in producing news packages for broadcast. Students will develop longer format feature pieces that combine skills in writing, reporting, shooting, narration, editing, and producing. The best of this work should serve as portfolio pieces for students considering careers in broadcasting and related industries. TV News I and Writing for Broadcast are prerequisites for taking this course.

JOUR 365 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 389 | LIFESTYLE REPORTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course gives students the tools to write Lifestyle stories and to think creatively. Assignments will include human-interest stories, health, fitness, design, fashion, food, leisure and social issues. The class concentrates on the tools reporters need to create this kind of work, from good quotes to relevant sourcing.

JOUR 275 and 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 390 | WRITING FOR THE DEPAULIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for the serious journalism student who wants on-deadline experience writing for The DePaulia newspaper and web site. Students will cover beats of interest to the DePaul community throughout the quarter and also will receive assignments from DePaulia editors.

Stories and beats can be as varied as campus news, sports, the arts or news in the Lincoln Park and South Loop communities. Students may repeat the course once for credit. Not available for DePaulia editors.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 396 | JOURNALISM CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students connect their journalism skills and knowledge with their learning in liberal studies to contemplate journalism's societal responsibilities and construct a multimedia reporting project that informs the public about an important issue. Students report for 10 weeks on a subject of societal significance and assemble a digital portfolio of their work from classes, internships, and student media. They analyze, synthesize, and reflect on material that draws interdisciplinary connections to deepen their understanding of journalism's democratic function, probe professional ethical issues, and improve their ability to articulate complex ideas when reporting the news.

Senior standing and status as either a Journalism, Communication and Media major or Sports Journalism Concentration are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 398 | JOURNALISM STUDY AWAY/ABROAD | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course exposes students to experiential learning and immersive educational experiences in newsrooms and professional journalism worksites at locations around the nation and world. Sites may vary based on topic but include key locations in the journalism world such as New York City. Students apply concepts from their journalism course work to their experience during the study away/abroad, articulate the impact of the experience on their understanding of how professional news operates, and reflect on how the experience helps them add depth to their understanding of professional journalism ethics and its application to their career goals.

JOUR 275 and JOUR 278 are prerequisites for this course.

JOUR 501 | THE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF JOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces students to social responsibility theory in the context of the legal and ethical obligations, rights, and responsibilities of a free press in the context of a commercial media system. Topics covered include the philosophy behind First Amendment press protections; how economics affect digital journalism; diversity, equity, and inclusion in newsrooms and reporting; civic engagement; and other ethical dilemmas facing individual reporters, newsrooms, and journalism as an industry. Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

(Graduate)

This course explores the role of the media in American politics and the impact it has on government, policymaking, campaigning, and most importantly, the general public. The course has three major sections: an analysis of the news media as a political and economic institution; an examination of the ways in which political actors try to shape the messages transmitted through the media; and an investigation of the effects media have on citizens. (Cross-listed with PSC 321 Mass Media and American Politics)

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 542 | SOCIAL MEDIA AND THE NEWS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Journalists use mobile devices and social media in newsgathering, distributing content and engagement with active audiences. This course blends the theory and practice of social media to provide you with a hands-on introduction to, and practice on, a digital-first approach to journalism. We will analyze and apply a range of social and mobile media tools. This course has a dual purpose: on a skills level, you'll be able to hone your professional social media practice and to build your technical skills with social media apps and platforms. By the end of the quarter you'll have an online professional portfolio and should have developed a "voice" on social platforms for your professional self. We will put a critical lens to social journalism and the application of journalistic ethics to mobile and social media. The course covers emerging concepts on social media, including: networked gatekeeping, social listening as applied to journalism, audience engagement and analytics, citizen journalism, visual storytelling, best practices for content curation and covering breaking news events with social tools, as well as verification of social content and ethics. You will develop and implement a professional social media strategy, practice with a variety of mobile journalism and social media tools.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

Students get hands-on experience with social media monitoring software, web analytics, and other tools for engaging audiences.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 545 | NEWS DOCUMENTARY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students learn how to conceive, research, report, and tell news documentary video and film stories in this hands-on course that requires no formal documentary experience. Use state-of-the-art video and audio editing tools to create news video projects.

Status as a graduate student in Journalism or Digital Communication and Media Arts is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 546 | PHOTOJOURNALISM FOR STUDENT MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will build photography portfolios by covering regular assignments for student media, including The DePaulia, La DePaulia and 14 East Magazine. Students will learn to work on deadline as part of an editorial team including reporters, editors, photo editors, and other photographers. Professional cameras will be provided. Students must already be familiar with DSLR cameras and basic techniques of lighting and composition.

JOUR 548 | ADVANCED GRADUATE REPORTING FOR GOOD DAY DePAUL
| 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will allow graduate students to take a second quarter of Reporting for Good Day DePaul. It will provide enhanced work in reporting, writing and video production. It will also provide additional instruction in interview lighting, graphics, and high-end sound techniques. On the research side, it will include a paper on issues in television journalism.

JOUR 528 and status as a Graduate Journalism student are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 551 | ADVANCED REPORTING I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced Reporting I combines classroom instruction with hands-on field experience producing professional-quality broadcast reporting. Students select a single topic for the class and participate in the initial research, production, scripting and editing. Some stories may take longer than one quarter to complete, therefore a two-quarter commitment is required. Graduate students will function as senior producers and editors helping oversee the initial research, production, scripting and editing of a story selected by the class. In addition students must have a working knowledge of government at the local, state and federal level. Students will be required to file Freedom of Information Act requests and track campaign contributions. The class is open to a limited number of underclass and graduate students who will need to make application for the class at the Center for Journalism, Integrity and Excellence.

Status as a JOUR graduate student and instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 552 | ADVANCED REPORTING II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced Reporting II is a continuation of the project work started in JOUR 551 and combines classroom instruction with hands-on field experience producing broadcast reporting. Graduate students function as senior producers and editors helping oversee the initial research, production, scripting and editing of a story selected by the class. Students continue reporting work on their topics including research, production, scripting and editing. Projects reach completion in the second of the two-course sequence. As in JOUR 551, students must have a working knowledge of government at the local, state and federal level. Students will be required to file Freedom of Information Act requests and track campaign contributions. The class is open to a limited number of underclass and graduate students who will need to make application for the class at the Center for Journalism, Integrity and Excellence.

JOUR 551 and status as a Graduate Journalism student are prerequisites for this class.

JOUR 553 | SOCIAL JUSTICE REPORTING I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Too often conventional journalism covers communities of color and other marginalized groups with bias, infrequency, and little connection with those communities. New directions in journalism recognize the importance of connecting and engaging with diverse communities to listen, build trust and develop stories that include their voices and perspectives. These initiatives reach into communities to better address social, racial, cultural and environmental issues impacting them with stories that are more authentic and less extractive. This course provides hands-on experience working with community-based organizations (CBOs) and communities of color to develop and produce media addressing grassroots actions for social change, equity, and community empowerment. Students will be assigned or select a CBO representative to collaborate with as a primary source to gain deeper understanding of the issue(s), context and perspectives of those engaged in and impacted by the actions undertaken. Previous CBO collaborators have included Asian Americans Advancing Justice Chicago, Brighton Park Neighborhood Council, Chi Fresh Kitchen, Grow Greater Englewood, North Lawndale Parent & Community Coalition, and Restaurant Opportunities Center Chicago. Course requirements include attending site visits, community events and other opportunities to become familiar with the community and its residents or service constituents. Final stories will be submitted for distribution in Chicago-area independent print and digital media. Publications have included the podcast series Change Agents, Southside Weekly, Gazette Chicago, Windy City Times, Sixty Inches from Center, and 14 East magazine. Stories are also shared in community engagement events with the community partners. Instructor strongly recommends that students enroll in both courses sequentially. Instructor permission required, email jmccray1@depaul.edu.

JOUR 587 | SOUND AND VISION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the unique ways that photography and audio documentary can blend together. The course will combine documentary and experimental production to help students learn to create audio documentary and visual projects and to work in mixed-media contexts.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 588 | REPORTING FOR 14 EAST MAGAZINE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students gain hands-on experience reporting, writing and producing multimedia stories and other storytelling elements for the College of Communication's 14 East Magazine (<http://fourteeneastmag.com>)

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

JOUR 590 | JOURNALISM WORKSHOP | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course allows students to sample variable topics that build skills in digital media and software and/or provide extra emphasis on particular topics of interest such as photography, video, social media, audience engagement, freelancing, issues affecting journalists from minority populations, and reporting on topics such as religion and environment.

Status as a Graduate Communication student is a prerequisite for this class

JOUR 598 | JOURNALISM STUDY AWAY/ABROAD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Students expand their learning opportunities in domestic study away or study abroad contexts that introduce them to different professional journalism contexts and prepare them to be successful, innovative leaders and community members in a diverse global society.

JOUR 602 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is a 0-credit hour course that requires permission from the graduate director. Students can enroll in this course if they are finishing a course in which they received an incomplete (IN) and are not registered for any other regular credit-bearing courses in the quarter they plan to finish the incomplete. Enrollment in this course is limited to the two quarters following the quarter of the original incomplete (IN) grade. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry any enrollment status. Students enrolled in this course are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Journalism student is a prerequisite for this class.

Kinesiology

KNES 121 | SWIMMING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide the student with skill instruction and analysis of the most widely used swimming strokes and basic dives. Principles of hydrodynamics and basic water safety will also be emphasized. Various individual skill levels will be considered to provide a safe and inclusive experience. Additionally, this course introduces the student to the concepts and procedures for teaching basic swimming in a school setting. (2 credit hours)

KNES 122 | LIFESAVING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Provides entry-level participants the knowledge and skills to prevent, recognize and respond to aquatic emergencies and to provide care for breathing and cardiac emergencies, injuries and sudden illnesses until EMS personnel take over. Prerequisites: PE 121 or the ability to swim 300 yards continuously; Tread water for 2 minutes using only the legs; Participants who successfully complete the Lifeguarding course receive an American Red Cross certificate for Lifeguarding.

PE 121 is a prerequisite for this class.

KNES 160 | AEROBIC CONDITIONING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides instruction and requires participation in the dynamics of exercises that train the cardiorespiratory system. These exercises include but are not limited to low-impact aerobics, high impact aerobics, step-aerobics, use of cardio equipment, spin, slide, and circuit training. (2 credit hours)

KNES 166 | BEGINNING WEIGHT TRAINING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to strength training principles and activities: free weights, resistance machines, and functional exercises. Emphasis is placed on the development of strength and flexibility of the major muscle groups. Health-related fitness guidelines are presented to assist the student in developing overall fitness. (2 credit hours)

KNES 171 | FITNESS AND CONDITIONING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(2 credits) The main components of health-related fitness: cardiovascular endurance, muscular strength, muscular endurance, flexibility, and body composition are integrated into the fitness sessions, topic presentations, and health/fitness assessments. Emphasis is placed on improving overall wellness through exercise and healthy lifestyle choices. (2 credit hours)

KNES 172 | YOGA | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will introduce the philosophy, techniques, and benefits of Hatha Yoga to the beginning students and allow the experienced students to expand upon their knowledge. Participants will develop skills to deepen conscious awareness and focus through asana practice (physical practice of yoga), body alignment, breathing techniques, and relaxation. The emphasis of the class will be on how to properly practice yoga, how to incorporate it into daily life, and how to safely teach asana. Course modules will include physical practice, handouts, support materials, and a quiz. Students will be required to attend and participate in class. The development of an independent home practice of yoga outside of DePaul will be necessary for success in the course. (2 credit hours)

KNES 174 | MINDFULNESS AND MEDITATION TO REDUCE STRESS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Mindfulness and Meditation to Reduce Stress (MMRS) 30-hour class will introduce the students to dealing with stress and anxiety in their daily lives. By participating in the meditations and classroom activities, students will develop increased focus, find empowerment and stillness, and learn strategies for stress reduction. (2 credit hours)

KNES 176 | ADVANCED WEIGHT TRAINING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Advanced instruction and participation in the use of free weights and various machines for body building and weight training. (2 credit hours)

PE 066 or PE 166 is a prerequisite for this class.

KNES 180 | RAPE AGGRESSION DEFENSE SYSTEMS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This 30-hour self-defense course is open to all female students and teaches awareness, prevention, risk reduction and avoidance techniques. In addition, students will learn the importance of physical fitness and perform exercises designed to improve their speed, physical strength and flexibility to aid them in self-defense. At the end of the course, students will be given the opportunity to test their knowledge and skills in various attack scenarios, under the supervision of at least one certified R.A.D. Basic Physical Defense instructor, in a safe and supportive environment. (2 credit hours)

KNES 182 | VOLLEYBALL | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Fundamental skills, drills, strategy, team play, rules interpretation, and officiating will be covered. Physical education majors will focus on teaching, officiating and assessment. (2 credit hours)

KNES 511 | MOTOR DEVELOPMENT THROUGH THE LIFESPAN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Through lecture, film analysis, direct observation and instruction of children, and class discussion, students will gain a greater understanding of the maturational and environmental factors that affect human growth and motor development. Theories for motor development will be the focus. Since this development is a process that continues throughout our life span, prenatal through adult characteristics will be examined. Graduate students will be required to post authentic videos of examples of motor development theories seen in their classrooms with detailed explanations.

KNES 517 | CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT AND INSTRUCTION FOR ELEMENTARY PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course is designed to promote an understanding of the contribution that physical education makes to the elementary school curriculum and the development of the whole child. Lesson planning, instructional delivery, assessment of learning and classroom management will be focused as students engage in 15-20 hours of field experience teaching whole classes of children in schools. Reflective teaching will allow teacher candidates to develop skills and dispositions needed to be effective teachers in the physical education classroom.

KNES 525 | LANGUAGE AND LITERACY IN THE PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the roles of language and literacy in the physical education setting and the teacher's responsibility for fostering them in all students. Through guided examination of prevailing theories of language acquisition and development that currently influence classroom practices across the K-12 continuum, this course enables future teachers of physical education to grow in their understanding of the varied literacy-learning contexts that students bring to their physical education experiences. Issues that emerge in planning and conducting literacy instruction in programs with diverse student demographics are discussed and deliberated through University classroom sessions as well as required field experiences. This course is designed to assist future physical education teachers in supporting literacy development in all students. Graduate students will be required to present as unit plan of instruction and how literacy was integrated throughout.

KNES 541 | INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first in a sequence of theory and practice courses that serves to familiarize teacher candidates with the world of schools and specifically physical education in schools. Through observation and participation in schools, self-reflection, independently created assignments, cooperative learning assignments and classroom discussion, candidates will acquire familiarity with the physical education classroom including social/cultural context, classroom climate, classroom management, curricular coherence, standards-based instruction, and teacher professional beliefs and practices. Written critical reflections serve as an initial foundation for the development of a teaching philosophy. Graduate students will be required to monitor weekly group discussions in D2L, complete an additional school culture assignment, and present a case study to the class.

KNES 566 | EDUCATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY AND MEASUREMENT OF LEARNING IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course presents those principles of educational psychology specifically related to the psychomotor learning domain. Selection of tests to measure learning of physical skills for all populations, administration of tests, data collection, and the statistical analysis needed to evaluate the learning process will be included. Specifically, measures of central tendency, variability, and correlation statistics; and standard tests of health and skill related components of fitness, motor performance, anthropometry, and specific sport analysis will be presented and practiced in this course. Graduate students will be required to present to the class the assessment plan for two of their classes and discuss the anticipated challenges.

KNES 572 | CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION FOR SECONDARY PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to provide an understanding of physical education curriculum planning, teaching methods, classroom management, unit and lesson plans used in a secondary school physical education setting. Specifically, how the uniqueness of the high school student, their development, culture, diversity, and social issues affect instruction and assessment. Students will engage in field work to observe and participate in whole class instruction, to integrate theoretical classroom content with on-site experiences. Graduate students will be required to present the written curriculum, lesson planning requirements, and integration of technology within physical education in their school.

KNES 574 | ADAPTIVE PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces students to teaching exceptional students with mild, moderate, and severe disabilities by presenting a diversified program of developmental activities, games, sports, and rhythms suited to the interests, capacities, and limitations of students who may not be able to participate in the general physical education program. This will include state learning standards, curriculum, assessment, planning, and instruction in physical education. Accommodations, grouping, and technology for diverse students with disabilities in physical activity settings will also be introduced to students. Candidates will develop the knowledge and confidence to plan and implement differentiated instruction in teaching physical education to student with disabilities K-12. Graduate students will be required to present three case studies of special needs students they have worked with and the accommodations that were developed, used, and their effectiveness.

KNES 577 | ELEMENTARY & SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

Five school days a week of supervised teaching in a cooperating elementary & secondary school for the academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Requires application and approval as well as passing score on content test.

KNES 587 | STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is taken concurrently with KNES 577, Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers.

Latin (LAT)

LAT 101 | BASIC LATIN I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic Latin is the first Latin reading course. It introduces students to the basics of the language of the Romans, which includes the Latin alphabet, pronunciation and the beginnings of Latin grammar. Students will begin to develop reading and writing skills as they encounter small passages of Latin text, the standard method for learning this ancient tongue being partly memorization and partly language immersion. Students will be expected to read through small passages of Latin, but not without assistance. This course focuses primarily on syntax, grammar and memorization of paradigms, yet students also translate Latin as they proceed, learning rudiments of the language as well as cultural aspects of the Romans at varying epochs.

LAT 102 | BASIC LATIN II | 4 quarter hours

LAT 113 | LATIN FOR READING IV: INTRODUCTION TO LATIN POETRY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Latin 113 is an introduction to Latin poetry. This course will give students a review of grammar and forms along with reading exercises. Students concentrate on reading large sections of text in an effort to derive meaning and historical significance from the meter and the meaning of Golden age Latin. Continued drill on forms and reading for comprehension are the tools used by students. Students will be expected to read through passages of Latin with relative dexterity, and they will begin to parse through the texts in class in order to inculcate the skills of navigating entire narratives. Students begin to develop an affinity for specific authors from the poetic tradition of the Romans. LAT 113 emphasizes the completion of poems, or the completion of a larger work in order that the student becomes more comfortable with the ancient language. This course is a must for students of history, especially that of the western tradition, and it is imperative for the student interested in remaining capable of translating even the simplest Latin passages. Latin 103 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

LAT 114 | LATIN FOR READING V: INTRODUCTION TO LATIN PROSE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Latin 114 is an introduction to Latin prose. This course will give students a review of grammar and forms along with reading exercises. Students concentrate on reading large sections of text in an effort to derive meaning and historical significance. Continued drill on forms and reading for comprehension are the tools used by students. Students will be expected to read through passages of Latin with relative dexterity, and they will begin to parse through the texts in class in order to inculcate the skills of navigating entire narratives. Latin 103 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

LAT 115 | LATIN FOR READING VI: LATIN PROSE COMPOSITION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Latin 115 is the continuation of Latin prose with some Latin composition. Students concentrate on reading large sections of text in an effort to derive meaning and historical significance. Continued drill on forms and reading for comprehension are the tools used by students. Students will be expected to read through passages of Latin with relative dexterity, and they will begin to parse through the texts in class in order to inculcate the skills of navigating entire narratives. Students begin to develop an affinity for specific authors from the poetic tradition of the Romans. The active skill of composition doubly reinforces translating abilities. Latin 103 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

LAT 197 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN LATIN | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

LAT 199 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)
Variable credit.

LAT 204 | THE ARTISTRY OF LATIN LITERATURE: OVID | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Latin 116/204 adds to the skills students gained in 113-115 by incorporating methodologies of close reading and literary analysis rather than simple translation of texts. The textbook, Ovid: A Legamus Reader will give the student a review of grammar and forms along with reading exercises. In addition to refining our knowledge of Latin poetry through translation, we will seek to understand the text within its historical, cultural and literary/artistic context. Our methodology will be close reading of authentic Roman texts supplemented by readings in English to provide context and background. Students will be expected to demonstrate their understanding of the text by synthesizing the primary text and supplemental readings in papers written in English and by completing analyses of Ovid's use of meter and literary devices in a given passage in addition to participation in class discussion and translation.

LST 113 | LATINO RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE IN THE UNITED STATES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of the diverse nature of Latino religion, from its indigenous roots to its institutional forms, within the social and political context of American culture. Cross-listed with REL 113. Formerly LST 290.

LST 121 | LATIN AMERICA TO 1765: LIFE BEFORE AND AFTER COLUMBUS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A survey of Latin American history that offers a continental approach to the colonial period. Special attention is given to Native American societies before 1492, to the Spanish conquest of Mexico and Peru, to the trade in African slaves (Spanish and Portuguese colonies), and to issues of race, class, and gender during the colonial period. Cross-listed with HST 121.

LST 122 | LATIN AMERICA, 1765-1914: THE LONG 19TH CENTURY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

One of the main goals of this course is for students to determine whether the long 19th century was an era of revolution and social change or a continuation of colonial institutions and policies. To address this broad question, the course focuses on the Bourbon Reforms, the Wars of Independence, the problems associated with nation building, and the neo-colonial order. Through the analysis of some individual countries (for example Mexico, Argentina, and Brazil) students will study key issues like slavery, the "India question," race relations, class formation, social inequalities, authoritarianism, Church-State relations, liberalism, subaltern resistance, and North-South relations. Cross-listed with HST 122.

LST 123 | LATIN AMERICA, 1914-2010 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is an introductory course designed to provide students with a basic and general knowledge of Latin American history from the 1910s to the present. The course highlights the challenges and failures the new republics faced. Due to the diverse historical experiences, cultures, and economic and political systems, the course will focus on the main social, political, and economic issues that shaped Latin America during the 20th century (democracy, social revolution, social justice, political violence, and repression). Cross-listed with HST 123.

LST 145 | ARTS OF THE AMERICAS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is an introduction to major developments in art from the ancient indigenous cultures of the Americas (especially those of Meso- and South America), through the period of European colonialism (especially Spanish and English), to the modern art movements across the newly sovereign nations, including the United States and Canada. The broad chronology and geography necessitates a sampling of artistic forms across times, with issue-oriented lectures and occasional discussion. Cross-listed as HAA 145.

LST 200 | FOUNDING MYTHS AND CULTURAL CONQUEST IN LATIN AMERICA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course challenges students to connect the cataclysmic formation of the Latin Americas from the cultures of Europe, Africa, and the Native (indigenous) peoples with the processes that inform our modern world. Colonialism, social stratification and forms of conflict and rebellion all played pivotal roles in the formation of Latin America from origins to the 18th century. The history and culture of the region is presented from many perspectives and across many disciplines.

LST 201 | STRUGGLE AND RESISTANCE IN LATIN AMERICA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Latin America is more than a geographical reality. This interdisciplinary course asks how Latin America has been forged through local and global struggles for economic sovereignty, political self-determination, social and cultural identities in the 19th, 20th, and 21st centuries. Students will be introduced to the histories of economic dependence after the dawn of political independence, the intertwined dynamics of U.S. interventionism and Latin American resistance, the making of indigenous movements, as well as the interrelated issues of gender, race, and sexuality.

LST 202 | CONSTRUCTING LATINO COMMUNITIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary introduction to Latino Studies. It explores the socio-historical background of the major Latino groups in the United States, and the economic, political, and cultural factors that converge to shape Latino group identity. This course examines contemporary issues affecting Latinos including the evolution of Latino ethnicity, immigration, transnationalism and the formation of Latino communities, activism, and media representations of Latinos.

LST 203 | MEDIA AND CULTURAL STUDIES ACROSS THE AMERICAS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

LST 203 is an introduction to media and cultural studies with a specific focus on cultural transactions in the American hemisphere, particularly as they reflect the relationship of the U.S. to Latin America, Central America, Mexico, and the Caribbean. This course studies the history of national and cultural identities and social struggle, especially with regard to a north/south relationship, imperialism, revolution and social change, tourism, globalization, postcolonialism and the construction of gender, sexuality, race, and ethnicity. Students examine how relationships across the Americas have been depicted in popular culture and the social and political meanings of these representations.

LST 204 | FILM AND LATIN AMERICAN HISTORY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An inquiry into the way film portrays historical events in Latin America. Cross-listed with HST 204.

LST 205 | MEXICO AFTER INDEPENDENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This survey covers the history of Mexico from 1821 to the present. It will examine the difficulties of nation-building during the 19th Century, the Mexican Revolution (1910-1940), and the success and failure of the "Mexican Miracle." Cross-listed with HST 200.

LST 206 | MEXICO: FROM THE OLMECS TO INDEPENDENCE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course surveys the history of Mexico from the rise of the Olmec Civilization to Mexican Independence in 1821. It will examine the rise, fall, and continuities of Mesoamerican civilizations, the Spanish conquest, and the creation of the colonial order. Cross-listed with HST 206.

LST 207 | AFRO-CARIBBEAN AND AFRO-LATIN AMERICA: PEOPLES, CULTURES, IDEAS AND MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the study of peoples of African descent in the Caribbean and Latin America through lenses of history, politics, and culture. Students will learn how racial identities are constructed and interpreted in the Americas and the ways these identities have shaped Latin American and Caribbean cultures, politics, and societies. This course will explore broad patterns, changes, and continuities in the history of the African Diaspora in the hemisphere through an analysis of various topics such as conquest, colonization, slavery, independence struggles, nation-building, imperialism, neo-colonialism, revolution, violence, social movements, and inter-American relations. Cross-listed with ABD 206.

LST 208 | JEWISH EXPERIENCES IN THE AMERICAS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is about Jewish History in the Americas since 1492 until the late 1800s. It combines colonial/national periods and covers different regions, including North America, Central America, South America, and the Caribbean. Cross-listed with HST 202.

LST 209 | LATINOS/AS AND THE CRIMINAL LEGAL SYSTEM | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The objective of this course is to examine the relationship between Latinos/as and the criminal legal system. Throughout the course, we will ask (1) what distinguishes Latinos/as from other racial and ethnic groups in the criminal legal system (2) and what Sociological/Criminological theories can help us understand the causes of these differences and inequalities. The course will examine key variables such as historical context, ethnic and race relations, and current criminal justice policy regarding Latinos/as in the United States. Cross-listed with CRIM 208.

LST 211 | CONTEMPORARY LATINA LITERATURE OF THE U.S. | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will look at the ways in which racism, xenophobia, gender inequality, and generational trauma have permeated the American psyche, and it will consider the social implications of groundbreaking works that are challenging the traditional literary canon. Texts include The Lost Children Archive by Valeria Luiselli, Her Body and Other Parties by Carmen Maria Machado, Ordinary Girls by Jaquira Diaz and Sabrina and Corina by Kali-Fajardo-Anstine.

LST 217 | WORK IN A GLOBALIZED WORLD | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The purpose of this course is to make a direct connection between the needs and strategies of individuals, companies, industries, and nations regarding work, and how they interact to create specific work environments and work outcomes for individuals in a globalized world. The course emphasizes how globalization, by creating an international labor market and an environment of competition between nations to attract jobs, has deeply transformed the work experience of individuals and the quantity and quality of jobs available in the United States, Latin America, Asia, and the rest of the world. Cross-listed with SOC 217.

LST 218 | SPAIN AND PORTUGAL | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A geographical exploration of Spain and Portugal's history, culture, politics and society. This course focuses on critical periods, events, and socio-political forces that substantially influenced these countries and demonstrate their role as one of Europe's key links to Latin America and Africa. Cross listed with GEO 218.

LST 243 | MAYA ART AND ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The "Classic Period" Maya (circa 0-900CE) are the source of modern interest for their graceful naturalism in a wide range of art forms and for their impressive architecture whose ruins today are found scattered across Southern Mexico, the Yucatan Peninsula, Guatemala, Belize, and Honduras. This class will explore the political, social, economic and religious imperatives behind the soaring temples, intriguing ballcourts, stately public sculptures, delicately painted vases, complex manuscripts and much more. We will situate the art of the Maya relative to other Mesoamerican cultures, particularly those of the Olmec, Teotihuacan and Aztec, and with respect to the Spanish colonial invasion. Other themes include aesthetics, materiality, gender, interpretive methodologies, and the impact of hieroglyphics and calendrics on the study of Maya art. Cross listed with HAA 243.

LST 244 | ART OF MESOAMERICA | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This survey of art of the ancient Mesoamerica (circa 1000BC-1520AD) focuses on the most artistically significant civilizations of Middle America and some of the difficulties encountered in studying them. Lectures explore visual traditions as diverse as the people they reflect; cultures to be covered include the Olmec, Maya, Teotihuacan, and Aztec. We consider the relationship between form and content, and the relationship between art and its social context, as much as we can understand it; however, especially because of the scarcity of primary source texts for the material, the class will also regularly raise questions of methodology in what is often identified as "pre-Columbian" scholarship. Cross-listed with HAA 244.

LST 245 | ART OF THE ANDES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This survey of art of the ancient Andes (circa 1000BC-1530AD) focuses on the most artistically significant civilizations of South America and some of the difficulties encountered in studying them. Lectures explore visual traditions as diverse as the people they reflect; cultures to be covered include the Nazca, Moche, Tiahuanaco, Wari and Inca of Peru. We consider the relationship between form and content, and the relationship between art and its social context, as we much as we can understand it; however, especially because of the scarcity of primary source texts for the material, the class will also regularly raise questions of methodology in what is often identified as "pre-Columbian" scholarship. Cross-listed with HAA 245.

LST 246 | ART IN THE SPANISH AMERICAN EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course offers a critical survey of the art of colonial Latin America (circa 1520s-1820s), from the Caribbean to Mexico, Central America, and South America. Framed by the Spanish Conquest of the 16th century and Independence in the early 19th century, lectures will survey state-sanctioned arts of the Iberian colonizers, including the foundations of the Catholic Church across the "New World" landscape. Race will be a frequent issue of discussion as we consider both indigenous American and African participation in social realities and artistic practice in this colonial context.. Cross-listed with HAA 246 and CTH 250. Formerly LST 248.

LST 247 | ART OF THE ANCIENT AMERICAS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class surveys the art of the ancient Americas (circa 1000 BCE-1520 AD), with a focus on the most artistically significant civilizations of Mesoamerica and South America, and some of the difficulties encountered in studying them. Lectures will explore visual traditions as diverse as the people they reflect; cultures to be covered include the Olmec, Maya and Aztec of Mesoamerica, and the Moche and Inca of Peru. Since most of these cultures did not use the written word, the class will also regularly raise questions of methodology in pre-Columbian scholarship.

LST 249 | MODERN LATIN AMERICAN ART | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This lecture class is a survey of Latin American art created since the Wars of Independence which helped to create the modern nations in the 19th century (i.e. 1820s through the present). Lectures consider the struggle of artists to articulate newly sovereign identities through visual production, even as complicated relationships with Europe and increasingly, the United States, continue. Topics covered include Latin American modernism, surrealism, radical arts, and social realism, with a special consideration of post-revolutionary Mexican mural painting. Cross-listed with HAA 247.

LST 252 | LATIN AMERICAN POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of the history of Latin America and the major institutions, social sectors, and actors that shape the political life of the region. The course focuses on the development of revolutionary regimes and movements as well as military regimes and their demise during the transition to democracy. Cross-listed with PSC 252.

LST 268 | MEXICAN ART | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This survey situates the art of Greater Mexico in its rich historical context, from the territory on the eve of the Spanish Conquest to the early decades of the 21st century. From Aztec imperial art to colonial works, to efforts at nation-building through visual forms, the story of Mexican art is characterized by political and social change. Readings, lectures and discussion will touch on critical issues of race, class and gender, and take up themes such as miscegenation, indigenism, nationalism, and Mexico's place in the global art world. We will study famous works, such as the Aztec Calendar Stone, the Catholic image of the Virgin of Guadalupe, the post-revolutionary murals of Diego Rivera and the more intimate paintings of Frida Kahlo, but we will also consider less familiar art that has been equally important in the construction of Mexico and its identities. Cross-listed with HAA 248.

LST 285 | AFRO-HISPANIC LITERATURE IN TRANSLATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this 200-level course in literature (for credit in the Arts and Literature learning domain of the Liberal Studies Program), we will seek to determine what distinguishes the Afro-Hispanic novel, short story, drama or poetry from other works in these genres. We will read works that have been translated into English from their original Spanish versions and analyze how the use of language, imagery and narrative voice reflect the experience of people of African descent in the Spanish-speaking world as seen (or heard) in the text and context of these works. In addition, we will explore how race, class, politics and culture interact and find expression in Afro-Hispanic literature. Cross-listed with ABD 285.

LST 290 | LATINO/A LIBERATION TRADITIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

What does liberation mean in the context of the Americas today? How have people of Latin American descent – both in Latin America and the United States – connected conceptions of liberation to related ideas of liberty and freedom, as well as to notions of political revolution, cultural identity, and prophetic forms of religious faith? This course examines how these questions have been theorized across the Latino/a Americas, especially as they relate to questions of religion. Topics include liberation philosophy, critical pedagogy, prophetic religion, cultural praxis, Latina feminism, and decolonial thought. Cross-listed with REL 290.

LST 291 | LOOKING FOR GOD IN LATIN AMERICA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of religious traditions such as Catholicism, indigenous religions, and Protestantism in Latin America, with special focus on how these traditions have been transplanted and reshaped upon entry into varied Latino communities in the United States. Historical analyses of the Latin American roots of these traditions will provide contextualization for the ongoing examination of transnational religious cultures in the U.S. Cross-listed with REL 291.

LST 297 | IMPERIAL SPAIN, 1469-1808 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Analysis of Spain and Spanish empire between 1468-1808. During this period, Spain united and became a leading global power with enormous consequences for Western and world history. Emphasis on the political, economic, socio-cultural history of Iberian society. Cross-listed with HST 297.

In this course the construction of sexuality as experienced by Latina/ as will be examined through the analysis of recent interdisciplinary scholarship, literary selections and other popular cultural forms. We consider how gender and sexuality are constructed, enacted, represented, and communicated in a range of Latino/a communities and subcultures. Our analysis of readings/films/music will allow us to understand the changing and contested meanings of gender and sexuality within Latino/ a culture.

LST 321 | GLOBALIZATION IN THE AMERICAS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, we examine the processes of globalization in the Americas. The world seems to be a smaller place--accessible through the internet and global markets--and national borders seem to be more porous than ever before. Various agents--corporations, people, political organizers and organizations--are able to work on a global scale. Many critics argue that globalization has created a larger division between the wealthy and the poor. How has globalization affected the way we live our lives? In this course, we discuss the many debates around globalization and the political situation in Latin America, North America, and the Caribbean as well as the global justice movements that address inequity and injustice. You will become familiar with these debates and their histories, particularly with the growing anti-globalization position taken by many political leaders in Latin America. In this course, you will take a position regarding this contemporary political arena and become well-acquainted with various trends, policies, and activist movements around globalization. You will analyze your place in this political arena and determine how you will negotiate your position. We discuss the impact of various international organizations and trade agreements, from IMF, the World Trade Organization, the UN, the Organization of American States, NAFTA, and the Free Trade Area of the Americas. We will analyze the protest movements in Cancun and Seattle. We look at the increasing tourist apartheid in different parts of the Americas, particularly in the Caribbean. We discuss the impact and organization of international activism from anti-globalization movements to global justice movements. We will discuss and debate strategies for resistance. We access many of these issues through cultural productions (film, tv, advertisements, etc) that address the difficult dilemmas of neo-liberalism (rule of the market).

LST 322 | MEXICAN CINEMA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course we analyze the history and practice of a national cinema in relation to government film policy, filmmaking practices and programs, intellectual and cultural context, and national and popular concerns. We study various facets of Mexican cinema from conceptions of race/ gender/sexuality, major figures of cinema, and the current conditions of Mexican Cinema. We will explore Mexican Cinema in relation to other film industries of the Americas, especially in relation to the United States and Hollywood and to the oppositional political practices of the New Latin American cinema of the sixties and seventies.

LST 323 | URBAN LATIN AMERICA: LABOR, HOUSING, ENVIRONMENT AND GENDER | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines global, national, and local economic, political, and social structures and processes impacting urban individuals in Latin American societies. For example, it examines economic globalization and the opening of borders to foreign goods and its impact on industries and employment of individuals. It also examines the influence of global and local real estate market on the ability of urban individuals to obtain affordable housing. The resulting segregation leads to an unequal urban society with certain neighborhoods gaining access to adequate public services. This course will not however only look at urban problems and their structural causes but also on how individuals and groups of individuals are working to solve these problems caused by both local and global political and economic institutions. The solutions sought may differ from country to country due to different cultural understandings, local structures, historical legacies, and actors involved. This course will explore case studies of urban communities in a variety of Latin American countries including, but not limited to, Brazil, Argentina, Mexico, and Ecuador.

LST 330 | LATINOS IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines historical and current issues related to the education of Latinos in the US that range from PK-12 to higher education. The course explores the sociolinguistic, historical, sociocultural, legal and political contexts that shape the educational experiences of Latinos in the US, paying particular attention to policy and the current state of affairs in the education of Latinos. The Latino Diaspora will also be explored.

LST 375 | MEXICO CITY (WORLD CITIES) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

From its origins as Tenochtitlan, the preordained capital of the Aztec Empire, through its identification as a "new Rome" dominated by the Spanish Crown in the Viceregal period, to its status as the largest metropolitan area in the Western Hemisphere (and the second largest in the world), Mexico City was born to impress the imagination. This class explores the development of the great city of Mexico in light of major historical events and cultural expressions. Discussions will focus especially on urban planning, key architecture, outdoor sculpture, and public spectacles over the centuries. Cross-listed with HAA 375.

LST 389 | LATIN AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

What does it mean to speak of Latin American philosophy? What is the difference between merely doing philosophy in Latin America and doing Latin American philosophy? These are issues that some thinkers in Latin America grapple with. This course will explore the history and nature of Latin American philosophy. Moreover, we shall examine some of the reasons why, in sharp contrast to the European and Anglo-American philosophical traditions, questions of the very existence of an autochthonous Latin American philosophical tradition are heatedly debated both in Latin America and beyond. Cross-listed with PHL 389.

LST 390 | SENIOR SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A capstone course that integrates the student's prior course work and experiences by allowing the student to define a final culminating project. The seminar functions as a coordinated independent study course with extensive participation of Latin American and Latino Studies Program faculty.

LAW 642 | LAW PRACTICE TECHNOLOGY | 1 semester hour
(Professional Service)

In this course, students will simulate the experience of attorneys by using the types of software they can expect to find in the legal work environment. Not only will students learn how to use unfamiliar programs, they will also learn new tricks that will unlock the potential of familiar ones. While students develop these hands-on skills, they will also learn about hot topics in legal technology and the ethical dimensions of using this software.

LAW 702 | ELDER LAW | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

Cross-listed course for Public Services program. Deals with the new specialty of elder law. Considering today's demographics, many attorneys will require a knowledge of the unique problems of the aging population. Through statutes, cases and research, students will understand the lawyer's role in counseling the elderly, assess the legal needs of an elderly client and provide counsel as to the available options. (3 semester hours)

LAW 706 | HEALTH POLICY AND THE LAW | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course is designed to introduce students to a broad variety of policy issues affecting health care and briefly touch on economics, sociology, antitrust, tort law, administrative law and important questions of national health policy. (3 semester hours)

LAW 707 | RISK MANAGEMENT AND PATIENT SAFETY | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course offers an overview of basic concepts and principles in risk management and patient safety. Students are introduced to the theories, strategies and tactics of risk management and the roles and responsibilities of professionals working in these disciplines. Topics covered include claims management and disclosure, risk financing, medical and criminal liability in health care management, informed consent, and advances in patient safety. (2 semester hours)

LAW 709 | HEALTH EQUITY AND THE LAW | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course is designed to provide students an overview of the history, policy, and legal decisions that have led to modern-day health disparities, as well as current practices that allow these disparities to continue. The topics covered include: social and political determinants of health; health-harming legal doctrines; structural racism and implicit bias in health care; poverty and environmental justice as social determinants of health; and reproductive healthcare. The methods of instruction are class discussion of assigned readings, hands-on exercises designed to explore and utilize health equity data, and guest lecturers who will share practical applications of legal tools for advancing health equity. (3 semester hours)

LAW 712 | THE PRACTICE OF HEALTH CARE LAW | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This simulation course provides students with substantial experience representing and advising hypothetical clients in various health care settings. Students will gain a concrete understanding of the different types of modern health care entities and providers, the legal issues that they face on a frequent basis, and the relevant governing laws. Students will practice providing advice to hypothetical health care clients and will develop skills in conflict resolution. Students will learn how to draft relevant legal documents, policies, and other deliverables that are common in the health law field. (3 semester hours)

LAW 713 | HEALTH PRIVACY, CYBERSECURITY, AND IT LAW | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course will cover the health care privacy laws as they exist and the Federal Government will be implementing and enforcing HIPAA regulations beginning in October 2002. This area of the law is cutting-edge and affects every aspect of the health care industry and of legal practice in health law and other areas.

LAW 714 | BIOETHICS & THE LAW | 3 semester hours

LAW 760 | TOPICS IN THE LAW AT UIC LAW SCHOOL | 2-3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

These are courses being offered on the campus of UIC Law School through the DePaul-UIC Exchange Consortium. Please refer to the UIC webpage for course descriptions. (variable credit)

LAW 850 | TOPICS IN THE LAW AT LOYOLA | 1-4 semester hours
(Professional Service)

These are courses being offered on the campus of Loyola University School of Law through the DePaul-Kent-Loyola Exchange Consortium. Please refer to the Loyola webpage for course descriptions. (variable credit)

LAW 920 | INFORMATION SECURITY MANAGEMENT | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This is a cross-listed course with CDM (CNS440). Course will be governed by course policies for CDM classes. This course is a survey of information security considerations as they apply to information systems analysis, design, and operations. Topics include information security vulnerabilities, threats, and risk management; security policies and standards; security audits; access controls; network perimeter protection, data protection; physical security; legal requirements and considerations; privacy. (2 semester hours)

LAW 921 | DISASTER RECOVERY THEORY STRATEGIES | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This is a cross-listed course with CDM (IS505). Students will be subject to course policies of CDM. This course will give you a broad understanding of how a company should prepare for all types of disruptions (floods, tornadoes, chemical spills, equipment malfunctions, earthquakes, terrorist attacks, etc.) so it will survive. You will be given a basic methodology for how to analyze and prioritize critical functions within an organization to determine when these functions need to be restored. This information, along with how the organization will be impacted both financially and non-financially, will enable you to determine strategies for survival. Using case studies, you will be provided "real world" situations where you will learn how to apply one of the best practice methodologies in use today and yet adheres to the principles endorsed by the Disaster Recovery Institute International (DRI). (2 semester hours)

LAW 922 | INTRODUCTION TO PROGRAMMING | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This is a CDM course. Students must follow the registration guidelines and policies for CDM. An introduction to programming with a focus on problem solving, structured programming, and algorithm design with a gentle introduction to efficiency. Concepts covered include data types, expressions, variables, assignments, conditional and iterative structures, functions, file input/output, exceptions, namespaces, and recursion. Permission required. (2 semester hours)

LAW 923 | LEGAL RESPONSIBILITIES IN INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This is a cross-listed course with CDM (IS482). Students will be subject to course policies of CDM. This course examines the legal standards to which people and organizations are held under laws and regulations that concern computing and information technology. This course is a complement to CNS 477, which focuses on governance policies and business costs. Topics include government and laws, business regulations, healthcare regulations, education regulations, data breach reporting and notification, privacy laws, laws of search and seizure, freedom of speech and association, defamation, cyber crimes, contracts, and intellectual property. (2 semester hours)

LAW 924 | DATA PRIVACY LAW: US & EU | 2-3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course surveys both U.S. data privacy law and EU data privacy law. It covers technology concepts/privacy principles relevant to the law. The U.S. portion primarily focuses on a variety of U.S. statutes (e.g., FTC Act, GLBA, HIPAA, FCRA, FERPA, BSA, COPPA, CAN-SPAM, etc.) and some state law. The EU portion particularly focuses on the EU GDPR (General Data Protection Regulation). The course serves as helpful background for CIPP/US and CIPP/E (Certified Information Privacy Professional US and Europe). Course may be entirely online. (2-3 semester hours)

LAW 925 | CYBERSECURITY LAW: LITIGATION AND NEGOTIATION | 2-3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course examines cybersecurity risk through a review of administrative enforcement, civil, and criminal actions. Topics include civil actions for data breaches; administrative agencies, actions, and rules (including administrative law fundamentals); cyberattacks and forensic investigations; discovery and introduction of digital forensic evidence; risk mitigation and transfer, including cybersecurity insurance and insurance law fundamentals; criminal actions, including working with law enforcement; and theories of recovery, adequacy of legal remedies, and stifling of innovation. Students will learn not only the law, but also the relevant technology concepts with some level of depth. The course is a companion course to Data Privacy Law: US & EU, but neither of these courses is a prerequisite for the other. (2 semester hours)

LAW 926 | APPLIED CYBERSECURITY MANAGEMENT | 3 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This capstone course emphasizes skills in diagnosing problems and devising creative solutions in the cybersecurity and data privacy fields. Students will learn effective techniques for communicating with law and technology personnel to manage, prevent, and deter cybersecurity risks in the workplace. Students will have the opportunity to put what they have learned about technology and law into practice through table-top exercises and the completion of a privacy and security impact assessment. Prerequisites: completion of LAW 924 and LAW 925. (3 semester hours)

LAW 927 | IT AUDITING | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

Management and boards continue to recognize the importance of effectively managing information technology (IT) assets, to meet business objectives and to thoughtfully manage IT related business risks. This course examines the key principles related to auditing information technology processes and related controls and is designed to meet the ever increasing needs of IT audit and IT governance professionals. In addition, this course aids in the preparation for the Certified Information Systems Auditor (CISA) exam. 2 semester hours.

LAW 928 | HUMAN-CENTERED CYBERSECURITY | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

Application of behavioral theories in cybersecurity context. Topics include economic theories of decision making, heuristics, biases, and bounded rationality, signal detection theory, mental models, social engineering, game theory, information search, and cognitive engineering. Students work on an individual project applying one of these theories to a practical cybersecurity scenario of their choice. OPEN ONLY TO MLS STUDENTS. 2 semester hours.

LAW 929 | GOVERNANCE POLICIES IN INFORMATION ASSURANCE | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course focuses on assessment of business risks arising from information security and privacy issues, as well as the creation and implementation of policies that ensure compliance with laws and industry standards. It is a complement to IS 482, which focuses on the legal standards to which people and organizations are held under laws and regulations that concern computing and information technology. Legal issues arising under information security and control frameworks, such as COBIT and ISO17799, are considered. Topics include privacy laws, payment card industry standards, information security measures mandated by select federal statutes (e.g., HIPAA, Gramm-Leach-Bliley and Sarbanes-Oxley), data breach notification, governance and policy development, e-discovery, contracts, intellectual property, and security risk assessments. OPEN ONLY TO MLS STUDENTS. 2 semester hours.

LAW 930 | NETWORK FUNDAMENTALS | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course provides an introduction to data networking technologies, including Ethernet and Internet data technologies, network security, business applications and network management. OPEN TO MLS STUDENTS ONLY. 2 semester hours.

LAW 950 | TOPICS IN THE LAW AT KENT | 2-4 semester hours
(Professional Service)

These are courses offered on the campus of Chicago-Kent College of Law through the DePaul-Kent-Loyola Exchange Consortium. (variable credit)

LAW 960 | 3YP SEMINAR | 2 semester hours
(Professional Service)

The 3YP (Third Year in Practice) seminar is a complement to the 3YP participants' intensive externship. In the seminar students will reflect on, discuss, and further develop the knowledge and skills obtained at their respective externships; learn about different law practices; and develop strategies for maintaining and expanding their legal knowledge and skills after law school. (2 semester hours)

LAW 961 is a corequisite for this class.

LAW 961 | INTENSIVE FIELD PLACEMENT | 5-9 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course is designed to give upper level students intensive practical experience in an externship with a public agency, non-profit organization, member of the judiciary, or for-profit organization, such as a private law firm or in-house counsel for a corporation. This course is only open to students admitted to the Third Year in Practice (3YP) program. Externships are unpaid. Placements in the Intensive Field Placement program range from a minimum of five credits to a maximum of nine credits. For each credit hour, students are expected to complete 60 hours of work per semester. This course must be taken concurrently with the 3YP Seminar [LAW 960]. (variable credit)

LAW 960 is a corequisite for this class.

LAW 962 | ADVANCED INTENSIVE FIELD PLACEMENT | 5-9 semester hours
(Professional Service)

This course is designed to give upper level students intensive practical experience in an externship with a public agency, non-profit organization, member of the judiciary, or for-profit organization, such as a private law firm or in-house counsel for a corporation. This course is only open to students admitted to the Third Year in Practice (3YP) program who have completed one Intensive Field Placement. Externships are unpaid. Placements in the Advanced Intensive Field Placement program range from a minimum of five credits to a maximum of nine credits. For each credit hour, students are expected to complete 60 hours of work per semester. This course must be taken concurrently with the Advanced Intensive Field Placement Tutorial Course [LAW 963]. (variable credit)

LAW 963 is a corequisite for this class.

LAW 963 | ADVANCED INTENSIVE FIELD PLACEMENT TUTORIAL | 1 semester hour
(Professional Service)

This course provides students in advanced intensive field placements with the opportunity for reflection on their field placement experiences, through regular meetings with a faculty supervisor. The course is only open to students admitted to the Third Year in Practice (3YP) program who are enrolled in the Advanced Intensive Field Placement [LAW 962]. (1 semester hour)

LAW 962 is a corequisite for this class.

Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer Studies (LGQ)

LGQ 150 | INTRODUCTION TO LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL, TRANSGENDER, QUEER STUDIES [SSMW] | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will focus on defining this emerging field while giving students some perspective on the history and diversity of LGBTQ communities. It will also help prepare students for study in the various fields covered by the electives required for the minor. The course will be taught by faculty from a variety of disciplines and thus undoubtedly shift emphases somewhat with every offering. Topics will include: introduction to and definition of LGBTQ Studies as a field; historical roots of LGBTQ communities in the US and elsewhere; theoretical models of sexuality and gender; contemporary issues in LGBTQ politics and culture.

LGQ 213 | INTRODUCTION TO LGBT PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The purpose of this course is to introduce you to psychological and social issues relevant to lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) individuals and communities. You will be exposed to a variety of key psychological concepts including: heterosexism/homophobia, identity development, "coming out," relationships, families, youth, religion/spirituality, reparative/conversion therapy, diversity, and advocacy. Learning goals for this course include increasing one's understanding of the LGBT community and some of the unique experiences and issues that are experienced by many, but not all, members of the LGBT community. Identify and analyze pertinent psychological concepts relevant to LGBT communities. In addition, this course will provide you with learning experiences that you can use to evaluate your own limitations and strengths in terms of cultural sensitivity in regards to working with LGBT communities, thus improving your competence in working effectively with the LGBT community if you choose to at a later point in life. Cross-listed with PSY 213.

LGQ 236 | GAY MEN'S HEALTH MATTERS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to health issues relevant to gay men. We will explore effects of minority status, heterosexism and homophobia on gay men's health, including but not limited to STD/HIV/AIDS, substance use and mental health. Students will review epidemiological data, theoretical frameworks, and community-based health promotion approaches in order to gain a broad perspective on risk and resilience factors, health indicators, and strategies for self-care applicable to gay men's health.

LGQ 250 | LGQ FRENCH HISTORY: OLD REGIME TO THE PRESENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course studies male and female same-sex affection in France roughly from the Enlightenment through the early twenty-first century. It examines the representations of homosexuality over more than two centuries taking into account a variety of often contradictory images that have been current in French society, representations that range, among males, from the diabolical criminal of the nineteenth century Romantics to today's trend-setting (and all too domesticated) gay male, and, among females, from elegant salon figures to contemporary feminist militants. Special attention is focused on the history of homosexuality since WWII because the French gay and lesbian community's progress since that time is impressive and particularly rich in its implications for the American civil rights struggle. Additional readings from French writers on homosexual themes compliment most of the readings from the textbooks.

LGQ 262 | INTRODUCTION TO TRANSGENDER STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the growing body of scholarship in transgender studies, a field built from three decades of thinking gleaned from the disciplines of gender studies, queer theory, sociology, law, feminist science studies, literary studies, history, trans art, trans activism, and LGBTQ studies. We will investigate the historical, political, social, and cultural contexts that have enabled the category transgender, explore readings in transgender history, queer theory, and the history of sexuality, analyze the ways transgender subjects have narrated their own lives and experience, and link these themes to trans lives today. Students will be introduced to discussions and debates key to the development of gender studies, queer studies, and transgender studies, will center intersectional approaches to field, and will read a short contemporary memoir-manifesto that speaks to course themes.

LGQ 277 | LGBTQ+ HISTORY IN THE UNITED STATES, WORLD WAR II TO THE PRESENT | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is a historical survey of LGBTQ+ -identified people's lives in the United States from World War II (1941) to the Present. We will focus in particular on the way in which LGBTQ+ identities have developed within cultural, social, and political contexts, such as World War II, the civil rights movements of the 1950s-1970s (including the Stonewall Uprising), consumer culture and mass media, the AIDS crisis, the rise of the Religious Right, the advent of gay academic scholarship and queer/transgender identities, the political diversification of the LGBTQ+ community, gay/lesbian marriage, and the growth of LGBTQ+ internet/social media communities and practices. We will examine both the larger national narrative of LGBTQ+ history and focus on the experience of particular groups, such as gay/lesbian activists in 1970s Chicago and transgender/gay ballroom performers. The term 'LGBTQ+' in the title of the course acknowledges how the words 'gay' and 'lesbian' themselves are historically specific, and that LGBTQ+ lives are multiple, complex, and ever-shifting. Although our emphasis here is on sexual and gendered aspects of identity, we will always view subjects as intersectional and multiply-identified according to, for example, class, race, ethnicity, religion, nationality, citizenship, indigenous status, and ability. In tracing the struggle for LGBTQ+ rights and expression and the social impact of LGBTQ+ people on American political institutions, culture and citizenry, we will draw on key historical documents, oral testimonies, academic criticism and theory, journalism, advertising, and popular culture.

LGQ 280 | LGBTQ LITERATURE FROM THE ANCIENT WORLD TO THE RENAISSANCE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course looks at constructions of queer desire in texts of the Western tradition from ancient Judea, Greece, and Rome through the European Middle Ages and into the English Renaissance. We will also learn to perform "queer readings" on texts that may not at first glance seem all that queer. The course will range across many linguistic and cultural traditions. We will read non-English texts in translation, but we may consult the originals in class and certainly knowledge of an ancient tongue or modern Romance language will be useful (but not required—don't worry!). As the title implies, the course will proceed historically, but we will be returning throughout to some basic questions: In what sorts of contexts do we find queer resistance to heteronormative assumptions? Do some literary genres seem more hospitable than others to representations of queer desire? How do representations of sexuality relate to larger notions of gender and social class? How do the constructions of queer desire we find here differ from modern lesbian and gay identities? This is a great opportunity to think about queer identity while reading and discussing some amazing texts.

LGQ 282 | INTRODUCTION TO LGBTQ LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to LGBTQ literature. It can count as an elective for the LGBTQ Studies minor at DePaul and is approved in the Arts and Literature domain of the Liberal Studies Program. We will use the word "queer" as it has been deployed in recent academic and activist discourse to talk about people whose sexual and/or gender identity does not conform to mainstream definitions. Most of the texts we will read this quarter are interested in various forms of same-sex desire, female-female and male-male, but at the same time we will consider the ways in which sexual identity always implicates gender identity. We will be interested in a number of closely inter-related questions: How can we define "queer literature" and is there a tradition, or history, of queer letters? What are its main characteristics and shared themes? Does a writer who identifies as queer automatically produce a queer text? Can a straight woman or man write a queer book? How do our primary concerns (sexual/gender identity) intersect with other modes of personal identity such as race and social class?.

LGQ 297 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN LGBTQ STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

See course schedule for current offerings.

LGQ 319 | QUEER PIONEERS: CULTURE, GENDER, AND POLITICAL ACTIVISM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines some of the historical roots and contemporary realities of lesbian and gay politics in the United States through the biographies of pioneering individuals whose lives and work shaped an ongoing struggle for civil rights and social justice. Conventional wisdom holds that the modern lesbian and gay movement was born in 1969 with the Stonewall riots in New York City, although recent scholarship traces the movement's roots to the mid-nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. More than thirty years after what began at Stonewall as an angry and disorganized appeal for basic human dignity, lesbians and gays have today begun to enter the mainstream of U.S. politics. Within this context, the biographies of individuals who, as activists and artists, rose to challenge the conventions of culture, gender, and political exclusion will be studied in-depth to both illuminate the politics of social movement and suggest how these diverse individuals and experiences may influence present and future efforts for cultural and political change. This course fulfills an elective in the WMS, AMS, or PSC majors, an elective in the LGQ minor.

LGQ 332 | LGBTQ POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will explore the historical roots and contemporary realities of gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) politics, nationally and internationally. Such issues as hate crimes, marriage, AIDS, and ballot initiatives over non-discrimination law and policy have entered the political mainstream since the 1970s. This course examines the LGBTQ movement, its political and social strategies, conflicts and issues, and the political roles played by its members as participants in political culture.

LGQ 338 | SEXUAL JUSTICE: LESBIANS, GAYS AND THE LAW | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course examines the historical and contemporary relationships between lesbians, gays, and the law in the U.S., focusing on the intersections of power, sexuality, and identity with issues of sexuality-based discrimination. It focuses on case law, along with social science and legal literature, seeking out a diversity of voices and experiences. Primary emphasis will be on cases that have come before the U.S. Supreme Court since the mid-1950's, with particular attention paid to how groups and individuals have reached out to the court system for redress of injustice and how these groups and individuals have exercised or failed to exercise power within the legal process. The U.S. legal system has reflected a complex set of social and institutional arrangements with regard to sexuality. This course explores the evolution and current construction of these arrangements, how power is allocated and adjudicated, and how law may be used to resist and dismantle pervasive discrimination. Cross-listed with WGS 338.

LGQ 362 | ADVANCED TRANSGENDER STUDIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an advanced study of the growing body of scholarship in transgender studies, a field built from three decades of thinking gleaned from the disciplines of gender studies, queer theory, sociology, law, feminist science studies, literary studies, history, trans art, trans activism, and LGBTQ studies. We will deepen our investigation into the historical, political, social, and cultural contexts that have enabled the category transgender, analyze readings in transgender history, queer theory, and the history of sexuality, expand our understanding of the ways transgender subjects have narrated their own lives and experience, and link these themes to trans lives today. Students will delve into discussions and debates key to the development of gender studies, queer studies, and transgender studies, and will center intersectional approaches to the field.

LGQ 388 | QUEER THEORY: AN INTRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will look at some of the central texts of queer theory, tracing its ambivalent relationship to the "normal" ideals of mainstream culture. We will begin by discussing current issues of normativity as it relates to gay and lesbian assimilation. We will then look at theories of embodiment, sexual identity, and power, consider the relationship of gender to sexuality, and finally, look at surgical sex reassignment and debates around the politics of intersex and transgender identity. Requirements: class presentation, several short response papers, longer final paper. The authors we will be reading include Michel Foucault, Judith Butler, Eve Sedgwick, Audre Lorde, Sigmund Freud, Anne Fausto-Sterling, and Michael Warner. Topics will include historicizing queerness, butch/femme, the politics of camp, and the transgender and intersex movements. Cross-listed with WGS 388.

LGQ 397 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN LGBTQ STUDIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

See course schedule for current offerings.

LGQ 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Variable credit.

Liberal Learning Seminars (LLS)

LLS 410C | VOICES AND IDENTITY IN WRITING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course will examine the power of the written word and the ways in which modern writers from various outlets (including mass-media) from diverse communities and fields represent their cultures, styles and passions for writing through their works. Students will explore these modern writers and examine some of their favorites as well as lesser-known authors while being challenged to understand and apply their own voice, identity and writing in multiple styles - with conventions and boundaries of academic style and without those boundaries. Students will analyze and identify and apply various styles, processes and motivation which keeps a writer going. This course will challenge students to use the learning and framework to build their own diverse writing portfolio.

LLS 410D | WRITING FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides students with the strategies they need to successfully meet the expectations of graduate-level academic writing. With a focus on genre, conventions, style, and mechanics, students will advance beyond undergraduate-level research writing to deepen their understanding of scholarly writing and strengthen the critical reading, research, writing, and revision skills necessary to meet the rigors of graduate level writing. Students will learn how to effectively contribute to the conversation in their discipline. To demonstrate their learning, students will design a research plan for a topic of their choice and write a scholarly article complete with literature review and abstract.

LLS 410G | ADVANCED LEADERSHIP THEORY & PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

In this course students will be strengthen their knowledge and skills in leadership theories and examine successful applications in public, private, and non-governmental organizations. Students will examine classic and current scholarship to bridge between theory and practice. Emphasis is placed on understanding the efficacy of the theories in the context of implementation in a global business environment.

LLS 410H | EFFECTIVE LEADERSHIP IN A CHANGING PROFESSIONAL ENVIRONMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

In this leadership course, students will use readings, behavior/trait surveys, and case studies to understand leadership theories and models. Participants will learn to create, establish, and reinforce cultural rules of engagement designed to increase communication effectiveness and get the most out of the current human dynamic in their respective environments. Understanding these various leadership models allows students to reflect on their own style in today's culturally changing environments. (4 credit hours)

LLS 420D | APPLYING ETHICS IN THE PROFESSIONS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Moving from theory to applied practice, students will be invited to turn their new knowledge towards the field of engagement which is close to their own industry. Classic and contemporary case studies in business leadership, community organizing, nonprofit management, organizational development, education, healthcare, technology, and sports will all be made available.

LLS 420E | LEADERSHIP, CHANGE AND POSITIVE ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines leadership and change theories, with a particular emphasis on strength-based leadership and positive psychology. Students will examine a variety of leadership theories and discover how to craft meaningful change in our organizations. They will use appreciative inquiry, job crafting, storytelling and strength based leadership to enhance themselves and others. Students will learn about the theories and concepts and apply them to self and others in practical, real-world assignments that include development plans, training programs and papers. Students will share these projects with each other virtually. Students and the instructor will also meet synchronously online for 2-3 short sessions.

LLS 420F | LEADERSHIP MODELS FOR STRONG ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to explore the research, practices, purposes and scope of leadership as a tool to develop leadership skills that will influence and inspire others. Both individual and organizational aspects will be presented and will include such areas as behaviors, ethics, communications, cultures and current practices. Emphasis will be on application of leadership theories and skill building through self-assessment exercises and cases. (4 quarter hours)

LLS 420G | EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE AT WORK | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

One's IQ (intelligence quotient) alone does not predict success in the workplace or in life. Emotional intelligence (EI) plays a vital role as well. This course provides an introduction to the field of emotional intelligence, evidence of its impact on individuals and organizations, and strategies for applying it in multiple settings. Participants will deepen their understanding of EI by exploring the research literature and completing an assessment of EI provided by 6 Seconds (<http://www.6seconds.org>). Strategies for applying EI to increase one's success and satisfaction at work and in other social contexts will also be explored. There are several models of emotional intelligence, each with a measure used by individuals to create a profile of EI abilities, used as the basis for learning and development. Some focus more directly on the workplace or on therapeutic settings. The Six Seconds' model of EI is designed to have broad application and enable individuals to draw on EI across the various dimensions of their lives. (4 credit hours)

LLS 420H | LEADING FOR SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

As the call to take action for social change across spheres of professional and personal life becomes ever stronger, those who seek to engage in the work of social change are compelled to think and plan critically and creatively about what social change means, what leadership for change means, and how it can be enacted effectively. In this course we will examine theories and models for social change in relation to social action-oriented modes of leadership. Through case studies, we will explore past and present social change movements that have been enacted in community, educational, organizational, and business settings, and consider the strengths and weaknesses of those movements and how approaches to change have been implemented. Using Chicago as a field site, students will deepen their understanding of real-world applications of social change leadership theories by studying current social change processes and interviewing leaders. Students will also chronicle the development of their identities as social change leaders and design an action plan that responds to an issue relevant to their professional or personal practice.

LLS 420I | PROJECT MANAGEMENT: DESIGN AND ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Project Management is an important discipline that can benefit students in their careers as well as personal life. This course will explore project management methodologies, their common steps and tools. The course translates Project Management theory into a practical and effective methodology, starting with working definitions of Project and Project Management, the course examines project initiation, evaluation and organization using analytic techniques such as discounted cash flow and PERT/CPM. In addition, the course examines project execution and control, along with the documentation and communications skills needed to keep a project on track. The course concludes with an overview of project management applied to computer information systems development.

LLS 440A | UNDERSTANDING AND FLEXING MINDSETS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A mindset is a set of mind - a mental aggregate - that fixes thinking into a narrowed range of perceiving and behaving. Our expectations then conform and we indulge behaviors that align with those expectations. The mindset then sets the mind. Through this seminar we will explore both how mindsets (e.g. a fixed mindset vs a growth mindset) form and their benefits and liabilities. We will also consider dynamics and strategies involved in shifting/managing mindsets in order to develop/engage new approaches to learning, decision making, problem-solving and optimizing positive influence in various spheres of impact (personal, interpersonal, organizational and societal).

LLS 450A | FINDING & ASSESSING INFORMATION | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This domain includes methods and processes of systematic inquiry regardless of domain. Adults must be able to engage in self-directed inquiry in order to understand and act effectively in their personal, professional, social, and civic lives. In this domain, students learn methods for systematically and strategically exploring questions, problems, ideas, and experiences. Central questions include: How do I formulate viable questions? What information do I need to understand a problem and what is the best way to obtain it? What are different ways to analyze an idea? How can I make sense of what I have experienced? Seminar sections in this domain might address topics such as strategies and methods for generating and utilizing primary research, gathering and managing information, analyzing and presenting data, pursuing targeted methods of inquiry, etc. (2 quarter hours)

LLS 450B | APPLYING SYSTEMATIC INQUIRY (IN PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The two required sections in this domain, LLS-450a & LLS-450b, aim to explore various dimensions/dynamics associated with investigating sources of information and conducting primary research. Central questions include: How do I formulate incisive questions? How do I find and gather relevant and credible information? How do I assess/analyze information and its sources, including my own experience as a source? How do I make sense of confirming and disconfirming information? How do I differentiate knowledge from opinion from reasoned judgment? Embedded in these questions are core concepts regarding the authority of systematic observation/inquiry and evaluated experience.

Liberal Studies in Education (LSE)

LSE 201 | DIVERSE VALUES AND VOICES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the interaction of societies and their education efforts/designs within a multicultural context. Case studies are used to examine various cultural groups within their own environment, the interactions of people from different cultures, and various cultural phenomena. Educational experiences leading persons from a monocultural perspective to a more multicultural perspective are explored. Students are asked to consider culture as learned behavior/perspective. They will explore their own cultural experiences/development and those of others. The goal is a realization of culture as a respected framework within the context of education. This course satisfies the self, society, & modern world requirement.

LSE 210 | MULTICULTURALISM AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will engage students in an examination of issues of diversity and multiculturalism within educational contexts in the United States. It includes an investigation of the historical and experiential perspectives of different cultural groups as well as an analysis of issues of access, inequality, power, and the distribution of resources. Students should gain an understanding of individual, group, inter-group, and intra-group perspectives, behaviors, and socialization practices regarding identity, relationships, values, ways of knowing, and world views. The central objective of the course is the development of a critical perspective regarding the meaning of multiculturalism and the significance of its role in educational settings.

LSE 300 | EDUCATION AND LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to engage students in critical reflection, commentary, and evaluation of literature, informed by theoretical as well as aesthetic considerations. Literary works will be interpreted and analyzed regarding interactions between form and content, as well as effects of authors' treatment of material upon the construction of meaning. Primary goals are the enhancement of understanding, appreciation and enjoyment of literature. Social and cultural dimensions of literature will also be addressed within the context of examining educational issues such as: what it means to become educated in culturally diverse contexts; construction of identity; the development of values and world views; the individual in relationship to community and/or society; and relationships among artistic works, human experiences and education. This course satisfies the arts and literature requirement.

LSE 310 | CONTEMPORARY ISSUES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is a variable topics course which examines the way current, significant issues affect, and are affected by education. Each quarter the course will focus on a contemporary problem or question with broad social, political, or cultural implications and will examine it from a multicultural perspective. Examples of topics are: homelessness, immigration and public education, privatization and corporate involvement in schools, youth culture and education, or the use and misuse of measures of achievement and ability. The course will explore the topic from multiple perspectives and draw on multiple disciplines. This course satisfies the Social, Cultural, and Behavioral Inquiry requirement.

LSE 353 | THE POLITICS OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines school and other educational sites as political institutions. It explores the ways in which the goals, the content taught, and the organization of educational institutions are shaped by relations of power and by political trends in society. It also explores schools and classrooms as political terrains in their own right in which issues of power are contested along lines of race, class, ethnicity, gender, language, sexual orientation, and other forms of difference. The course considers ways in which schools may reproduce or contest the existing social order. The dynamic interplay of political context and the internal politics of schools will be studied theoretically and through specific issues such as language and immigration policy, affirmative action, educational vouchers, textbook selection, and educational reform movements. This course satisfies the self, society, & modern world requirement.

LSE 354 | CULTURE, CONTEXT AND LEARNING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is based on the premise that learning is situated in the context of dynamic interpersonal relationships through which critical thinking may be fostered and ideas challenged. Students will examine the intellectual, emotional, and intrapsychic processes by which knowledge is constructed and shaped by cultural meanings which validate particular forms of thought and structures of knowledge. Various theories of learning will be discussed as they inform educational practices and their underlying assumptions will be examined. In addition, this course will engage the cultural nature of all human activity, cognitive processes, and bodies of knowledge. Attention will be given to their historical role of race and class as they determine what bodies of knowledge and processes of learning are validated within the dominant culture. Students will engage in self-reflective experiences, theoretical analyses, and community based activities to examine the various meanings constructed as people learn within social and cultural contexts. This course satisfies the self, society, & modern world requirement.

LSE 355 | INTERNATIONAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on a variety of key educational issues in countries or regions outside of the United States. Through a comparative approach, possible issues that will be examined include: aims and purposes of education and schooling; economic, political, social and cultural contexts of educational policies and practices; similarities and differences in organization and structure of educational systems; equity and social justice; relationships between home, community and educational institutions; education, development, and issues of social change; and dynamics at the global level that affect education in local environments. This course satisfies the self, society, & modern world requirement.

LSE 358 | EDUCATION AND SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to examine education within a philosophical framework which focuses upon the relatively great potential of education as an agent for social justice and change. Through the examination of current issues and concerns, students are expected to engage in critical analysis, reflect upon theoretical frameworks, examine public policies and values, and consider ways in which schools and educators can promote the development of social justice. The course will focus on one or several of the following topics: gender, ethnicity, language and culture, and social class and economic opportunity. Attention will be given to the issues of institutional responses to differences, equity, access and outcomes. This course satisfies the Self, Society, & Modern World requirement.

LSE 362 | IDENTITY AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This variable topics course will focus on how individuals and groups take on identities and how education and schooling affect the process. It will use multiple perspectives and a variety of contexts (such as family, community, nation, and international communities) to analyze how notions of self are developed, forged, and named and how these notions change over time. It will also examine how identities are constructed in relationship to issues such as ethnicity, class, gender, sexual orientation, language, religion, culture, age, and ability and their interconnections in the lived experience of individuals and groups. This course satisfies the self, society, & modern world requirement.

LSE 380 | PHILOSOPHICAL STUDIES IN PEDAGOGY, CULTURE AND GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a philosophical inquiry into the relationship of pedagogy to culture and globalization. In this course students explore this relationship from different philosophical perspectives about globalization that emerge from the Global North and the Global South. Specifically, the course examines how and why these perspectives have resulted in different conceptions of teaching, learning, culture, language, human development and worldmaking. Students will consider how these varied conceptions and practices enable alternative forms of knowledge and habits of knowing and worldmaking pedagogies that correspond to other ways of living and existing in the world. The course also examines how and why these conceptions of teaching, learning, culture, language, human development and worldmaking suggest different philosophies and theories of emancipation and possibilities for global and local futures. The course readings include philosophical literature from critical, post-critical, decolonial and indigenous traditions.

LSE 404 | CHILD REARING ACROSS CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Study of child-rearing practices, the effects of culture on cognitive development and the implications for teaching strategies for the child whose first language is not English.

LSE 420 | COMPARATIVE EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is devoted to the study of historical and contemporary issues related to comparative education-with an emphasis upon early childhood, elementary, and secondary levels. Through a comparative study of educational public policy, we will examine assumptions about the aims and purposes of education and schooling in terms of economic, political and social dimensions. Major topics and issues addressed will include the following: examining what it means to be educated; examining similarities and differences in the ways developed and developing countries educate children and youth; the organization and structure of educational institutions; disconcerting implicit and explicit values in different approaches to teaching and learning; relationships between schools and communities; education and the issues of change and social justice.

LSE 430 | EDUCATION AND SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A variable-topics course designed to examine education within a philosophical framework which focuses upon the relatively great potential of education as an agent for social justice and change. Through the examination of current issues and concerns, students are expected to engage in critical analysis, reflect upon theoretical frameworks, examine public policies and values, and consider ways in which schools and educators can promote the development of social justice. Each time the course is offered it will focus on one of the following topics: gender; ethnicity; language and culture; or social class and economic opportunity. For each topic, attention will be given to the issues of institutional responses to differences, equity, access and outcomes. (CROSS-LISTED with LSE 258)

LSE 438 | GENDER AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A variable-topics course designed to actively engage students in examination of the literature and issues related to gender and education. Curriculum, teaching and learning, achievement, and the organization structure and culture of schools are among the key concerns. Gender will be addressed as it intersects with other forms of inequality and difference: race, ethnicity, class, etc. Each time the course is offered it will focus on a particular topic, but for each topic attention will be given to issues about institutional responses to inequality and differences.

LSE 450 | DYNAMICS OF AFRICAN-AMERICAN CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is intended for those interested in cultural and human relations in order that they may examine the contributions of the black person to American Culture; gain a functional understanding of the social, economic and political development of the black person on America itself. (Cross-listed with SOC 490).

LSE 460 | INTERNATIONAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This variable-topics course will focus upon educational issues in a particular country or region outside of the United States. Through comparative study, a number of issues will be addressed: aims and purposes of education and schooling; economic, political, social and cultural contexts of educational policies; similarities and differences in organization and structure of educational systems; relationships between home, community and educational institutions; education, development and issues of social change.

LSE 461 | INTERNATIONAL STUDIES IN TEACHING AND LEARNING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This variable-topics course will focus upon aspects of curriculum, teaching and learning in a particular country or region outside of the United States. It requires work in the chosen country or region under the guidance of teachers familiar with its educational practices. The course will examine how curriculum is organized, developed and implemented in classrooms and schools with concentration on particular subjects or levels. From a comparative perspective, particular attention will be paid to the values and assumptions underlying curriculum and teaching.

LSE 462 | INTERNATIONAL FIELD EXPERIENCES IN EDUCATION | 2-8
quarter hours
(Graduate)

Through clinical experience outside of the United States, students will observe, participate in and reflect upon teaching and learning in cultural settings that differ from their own. This field experience abroad provides an opportunity to develop an understanding of what it means to be educated in the context of another society or culture. The intent of this experience is to add more global perspective to one's own professional knowledge and practice. (2 credit hours)

Liberal Studies Program (LSP)

LSP 110 | DISCOVER CHICAGO | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Discover Chicago courses acquaint first-year students with the metropolitan community, its neighborhoods, cultures, people, institutions, organizations, and issues. Students also learn about university life, resources, and strategies for academic success. Learning is accomplished through a variety of means including first-hand observation, active participation, personal discovery, reflection, discussion, and encounters with Chicagoans both in the classroom and on excursions. The course begins with Immersion Week one week prior to the official start of the Autumn Quarter, then continues through the first eight weeks of the quarter. Students select from a variety of Chicago-related topics. First-year students must register to take either LSP 110 (Discover Chicago) or LSP 111 (Explore Chicago) during their first quarter at DePaul. Students will receive credit for only one section of Chicago Quarter (Discover or Explore). Courses are offered during the Autumn Quarter and are available to first-year students only. Formerly ISP 103. (Honors students take HON 110.)

LSP 111 | EXPLORE CHICAGO | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Explore Chicago courses acquaint first-year students with the metropolitan community, its neighborhoods, cultures, people, institutions, organizations, and issues. Students also learn about university life, resources, and strategies for academic success. Learning is accomplished through a variety of means including first-hand observation, active participation, personal discovery, reflection, discussion, and encounters with Chicagoans both in the classroom and on excursions. Students select from a variety of Chicago-related topics. First-year students must register to take either LSP 110 (Discover Chicago) or LSP 111 (Explore Chicago) during their first quarter at DePaul. Students will receive credit for only one section of Chicago Quarter (Discover or Explore). Courses are offered during the Autumn Quarter and are available to first-year students only; limited additional sections are offered later in the year. Formerly ISP 102. (Honors students take HON 111.)

LSP 112 | FOCAL POINT SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Focal Point Seminars provide first-year students with the opportunity to learn how to closely examine a single topic, such as a significant person, place, event, text, idea, or issue. Students discover the complexity of a subject by studying it from the perspectives of multiple disciplines and different fields of inquiry, and by reading and writing extensively about it. Because the class is a seminar, students also debate the topic through lively class discussions. Students select from a variety of topics. Students will receive credit for only one section of LSP 112. Courses are offered during the Winter and Spring Quarters and are intended for first-year students.

WRD 103 or HON 100 is a prerequisite for this class.

LSP 121 | QUANTITATIVE REASONING AND TECHNOLOGICAL LITERACY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides more advanced mathematical and computational methods in the analysis and interpretation of quantitative information. Topics include databases, descriptive statistics, measures of association and their interpretation, elementary probability theory, and an introduction to algorithms and computer programming. The course is taught in a hands-on laboratory environment where students are introduced to advanced computer tools for data analysis, including databases and a professional statistical software package. PREREQUISITE(S): LSP 120 or a passing score on the LSP 120 Proficiency Exam. As an alternative to taking LSP 121, this requirement can be met by passing a separate LSP 121 Proficiency Exam (see qrc.depaul.edu). A student whose major requires calculus is exempt from this requirement. Formerly ISP 121.

LSP 120 or (MAT 147 or above) is a prerequisite for this class.

LSP 130 | TRANSFER SUCCESS SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides new transfer students an introduction to DePaul's mission and resources and provides guidance for reflection on their academic paths, purpose exploration, and career preparation. Students will reflect on past experiences at other institutions and consider how to apply what they have learned moving forward. This course is open to all new transfer students but is especially directed towards those who have between 30 and 88 credits.

LSP 199 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Permission of instructor and of First-Year Program Director required before registration.

LSP 200 | SEMINAR ON RACE, POWER, AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides students with an opportunity to learn about various topics in the construction and experience of race, racism, and anti-racism. LSP 200 courses investigate the intertwined historical roots and/or current legacies of racial inequalities related to differences such as class, ethnicity, gender, age, language, religion, ability, and sexual orientation. Students will engage with and examine experiences and perspectives of historically racialized groups and develop critical perspectives on racism. Topics of seminars vary and students select a course that interests them. Students can complete only one course numbered LSP 200.

At least Sophomore Standing is a prerequisite for this course.

LSP 201 | TRANSFER CAREER SEMINAR | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

This course, exclusively for transfer students, considers career preparation in the context of the college of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences. Students will be made aware of LAS's academic, institutional and co-curricular resources as they pertain to future career success. Discussion and reading will center on values and skills learned in liberal arts education and their applicability in the wider world. This course also provides a space for students to share their experience as transfer students. As such, a transfer student mentor contributes to this class.

LSP 250 | TRAVEL/STUDY | 2-4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Short-term study abroad experiences by special arrangement with sponsoring programs. May be taken for multiple credit when courses are not duplicated.

LSP 275 | LIVED CIVICS, THE SOCIAL CONTRACT & PUBLIC LIFE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Civics is the exploration of the rights and duties of people living in a political society. This interdisciplinary course aims to provide the groundwork for embracing, challenging, and grappling with the important and contentious issues that lie at the heart of American contemporary civic culture and democratic life. We will discuss and interrogate the social contract in the United States, examining the implicit agreement among members of a society to follow certain rules in exchange for the benefits of living together. The course will center the lives of students through the "lived civics" approach, which embraces the experiences of each student in their various communities as examples of "lived civics." These experiences will be used to explore key tensions within American political and civic life, along with historical context and founding documents. Students will explore questions such as how to balance individualism with the needs of a community, or what rights and responsibilities are needed in American political and social society today. While all sections of the course share foundational elements, instructors will tailor the application of this course material to their areas of expertise. Students will gain knowledge and skills to help them engage in thoughtful dialogue around meaningful and often controversial topics and empower them to be more active members of their communities.

LSP 301 | HUMANITIESX: TOPICS IN THE EXPERIENTIAL HUMANITIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

HumanitiesX (HX) courses engage students with a pressing social challenge through a combination of scholarly inquiry in the humanities and learning outside the classroom. All HX courses partner with a Chicago-area nonprofit organization, with whom students collaborate to create a substantive and public-facing humanities deliverable, exhibit, or event. HX courses grant Experiential Learning credit and may be taught by a single professor or be co-taught. This course is repeatable with different topics.

LSP 320 | PEER EDUCATION THEORY AND PRACTICE | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to introduce students to the principles and practices of how to mentor first-year students into the academic, intellectual and social life of the University. The course also prepares students to serve, if selected, as peer educators for incoming students in the upcoming autumn quarter. Formerly ISP 320.

LSP 321 | PEER EDUCATION THEORY AND PRACTICE II | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to support students chosen to serve as peer educators with the principles and practices of how to mentor first-year students into the academic, intellectual and social life of the University. Formerly ISP 321.

Lifelong Learning (LL)

LL 201 | REFLECTIVE LEARNING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this class, you will use a variety of strategies to surface and articulate knowledge you have gained outside of the formal college environment. Reflecting on past learning, you will use several methods for uncovering "tacit" knowledge and making it "explicit" to demonstrate and transfer skills to others in the workplace or other learning environments. 2 credit hours.

LL 205 | QUANTITATIVE REASONING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides an introduction to various topics in quantitative reasoning that most adults will be exposed to throughout their university coursework, their careers, and their daily lives. You will be introduced to different approaches to problem solving, how numbers are used in the real world, how to manage your personal finances, basic concepts in statistics and how they are applied in everyday settings and, finally, how money and populations grow and decay. Using mathematical models to understand real-world phenomena and to make predictions is an important component of the course. 4 credit hours.

LL 206 | ADVANCED MATH FOR PROFESSIONAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class covers college algebra concepts that professionals can apply in the workplace to solve problems and interpret data. Core topics include: exponential and logarithmic functions, inverse functions, and polynomial and rational functions. Students will use graphing software extensively to investigate how these functions represent patterns of and relationships between variables. The class will also allow students to review the prerequisite algebra needed to manipulate and solve more advanced equations.

LL 261 | ESSAY WRITING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students develop their ability to use writing to explore ideas as well as to communicate what they have learned in a variety of contexts. The principles and skills students learn are widely applicable and will improve their communication in business and personal settings as well as at school. This course focuses particular attention on writing to thrive in a writing-intensive curriculum. Students learn strategies for combining experience with analysis and reflection in essay writing, managing the writing process, and writing persuasively. Particular emphasis is given to the process of revision. 4 credit hours.

LL 270 | CRITICAL THINKING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students are introduced to the basic concepts behind the skills of effective listening, dynamic thinking, and persuasive argumentation and have an opportunity to practice these skills within an active and experiential context. Through peer and small group activities, problem-based exercises, and self-evaluation skills, students will develop effective habits of thinking that can be employed in subsequent learning experiences.

LL 280 | LIBERAL ARTS IN ACTION | 2-6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course directs students to analyze an engaging topic from multiple perspectives in the liberal arts. Students strengthen their problem-solving skills by drawing upon the ideas and methods of at least three different liberal arts disciplines. The learning activities clarify how the liberal arts can be put into action to solve problems. The course strengthens students development of critical thinking and academic writing across the curriculum. 2-6 credit hours.

LL 290 | RESEARCH WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Research writing allows writers to present credible and persuasive evidence and ideas to a variety of audiences. Research writing includes finding sources, evaluating their credibility, and smoothly integrating them into academic and non-academic texts. This process can lead writers to strengthen, expand, challenge, and/or change their beliefs based on their findings. Students will produce both academic and non-academic texts. Academic texts will include an annotated bibliography and a literature review using APA or MLA style. Non-academic texts might include a multi-modal blog or a series of persuasive memos. Completion of Research Writing is a prerequisite for LL300 Research Methods. 4 credit hours.

(LL 260 or LL 261 or LL 153 or LL 264 or LL 157 or LL 104 or PLA L4 or PLA LL 261 or WRD 103 or WRD 104) and (LL 270 or DCM 310 or LL 105 or PLA L5 or PLA LL 270) are prerequisites for this class.

LL 300 | RESEARCH SEMINAR | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Research Seminar is a required course in research design. The course advances the development and application of critical thinking skills while exploring methods of formal inquiry as preparation for academic and lifelong research. Research Seminar is taught under a general theme selected by the instructor or alternatively as an open topic format. A research proposal is the primary document produced and assessed in Research Seminar. This course satisfies a residency requirement. (6 credit hours)

(LL 260 or LL 261 or LL 153 or LL 264 or LL 157 or LL 104 or PLA L4) and (LL 270 or DCM 310 or LL 105 or PLA L5) and LL 250 are prerequisites for this class.

LL 301 | RESEARCH METHODS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces you to research methods and their application across liberal and professional studies as preparation for lifelong inquiry. Emphasis is on qualitative and quantitative research approaches, experimental design, sampling, measurement, analysis, ethics in research, and research communication. A comprehensive research proposal in your professional area is the primary document produced and assessed in Research Methods. The proposal is the implementation plan for your Capstone Project. Note: Completion of a college-level quantitative reasoning course is recommended before taking this course. LL 290 is a prerequisite for this class.

LL 302 | EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, you will demonstrate your ability to undertake lifelong self-directed learning by designing and executing an experiential learning project. Your learning endeavor involves identifying a topic of interest, establishing measurable outcomes, employing multiple learning strategies and reflecting on the learning methods used. A final product and class presentation comprise the chief deliverables. (formerly Externship)

(LL 260 or LL 261 or LL 153 or LL 264 or LL 157 or LL 104 or PLA L4 or PLA LL 261 or WRD 103 or WRD 104) and (LL 270 or DCM 310 or LL 105 or PLA LL 270 or PLA L5) are prerequisites for this class.

LL 303 | CAPSTONE PROJECT | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides the structure and guidance to complete a culminating applied project in your professional area. You will create an applied artifact expressing the core and advanced skills and knowledge developed in your major, and justify its form and content by analysis of relevant scholarship. Project implementation, data analysis, developing an artifact, assessment of project effectiveness, and a formal presentation of the artifact to an audience comprise the key course activities. (6 credit hours) (formerly, DCM 322)

LL 300 or LL 301 or DCM 309 is a prerequisite for this class.

LL 305 | ACTIVE CITIZENS: MAKING A DIFFERENCE IN THE COMMUNITY, WORKPLACE WORLD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Americans are known for active participation in organizations that strengthen our communities. We coach our kid's sports teams, take meals to members of our congregations, work for candidates that we believe in and join marches to support or oppose government action. With all these activities, we engage with other members of our community and workplace to make it better for ourselves and our families and to promote social justice. In this class, we will develop the knowledge and practice skills that enhance civic engagement. (4 quarter hours)

LL 390 | SUMMIT SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This required course is the final requirement completed by SNL students to earn their degree. Primary purposes are to 1) bring appropriate and reflective closure on the SNL experience; 2) enable students to celebrate and share their work with others who have accomplished goals and projects; and, 3) reflect upon the overall SNL experience, its developmental effect, its contribution to lifelong learning, and the transferable skills, attitudes, etc. that were developed as a result of the SNL experience. This course satisfies a residency requirement.

(FA 303 or FA 304) and LL 302 are corequisites for this class.

Management (MGT)

MGT 228 | BUSINESS, ETHICS, AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the nature and purpose of economic life and contemporary commerce as understood from the perspective of religious and secular communities, as well as the ethical implications that flow from the various worldviews. Sections of the course critically examine the thought of different religious traditions on specific business-related issues, placing a variety of religious discourses into direct conversation with secular voices regarding ethical business conduct. Cross-listed as REL 228.

WRD 103 or HON 100 or HON 101 is a prerequisite for this class.

MGT 248 | BUSINESS ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of various ethical and moral issues arising in contemporary business and its activities which affect our society and the world. Cross-listed with PHL 248.

MGT 250 | CAREER MANAGEMENT SKILLS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course helps students develop their careers. Students review their skills and interests as they relate to relevant occupations. They acquire career-enhancing skills in job search, career research, goal setting, and action planning. Students create resumes and cover letters, and they enhance their interviewing and networking skills. Through guided exercises and activities, students assess their current career activities and explore appropriate adjustments. This course is designed for students who have declared (or intend to declare) majors in Management or Business Administration. (2 quarter hours)

MGT 270 | INTRODUCTION TO ENTREPRENEURSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the basics of entrepreneurship. It focuses on developing an entrepreneurial mindset and thinking innovatively and creatively. Topics covered include the process of developing an idea, building a new venture, developing a business plan, understanding a chosen industry and market, developing strategies, creating revenue and business models, and writing and presenting a pitch to potential investors.

MGT 300 | PRINCIPLES OF MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Effective application of managerial techniques and concepts to continually improve an organization's competitive position in the marketplace. Topics include management processes, values and attitudes, ethics and diversity, the global environment of management, strategic planning, organizational structures, motivation, leadership, teams, human resources, organizational control, organizational communications, and career management.

MGT 301 | PRINCIPLES OF OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

MGT 501 or MGT 502 or MGT 504 is a prerequisite for this class.

MGT 512 | DEVELOPING SUSTAINABLE STRATEGIES (FORMERLY GSB 595) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to integrate the concept of strategy development into the larger ecological economic context of serving market/society needs in a finite world. The goal of strategy in organizations has traditionally been defined as one of value maximization, from the shareholder perspective exclusively. But the role of strategy is to guide organizations in competitively defining and meeting market/society's needs. Sustainable strategies take into account multiple perspectives by engaging in practices - principally systems thinking - to pursue opportunities in meeting market/society's needs that are economically viable, socially just, and operate responsibly within the constraints of a finite ecology. Students will demonstrate the literacies required to develop sustainable strategies that take into account all facets of the business venture (marketing, finance, management, design, production and distribution/life cycle analysis.) One key question will shape the trajectory of the course: 'How does one develop a competitive sustainable strategy to serve some market/society need?' Therefore, the focus of this course is for the student to select a need, determine the sustainable economic system to develop and deliver the product/service, and write and present the 'business case.' The student will also articulate the values and vision - personally and organizationally - driving the strategy.

MGT 514 | BEHIND THE SCENES WITH CHICAGO SPORTS ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours

MPH 101 | THE SCIENCE OF PROTECTING THE PUBLIC'S HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the philosophy and process of conducting health research for the purposes of protecting the health of the public. Public health research is responsible for many of the laws, policies, and best practices that guide how we prevent disease. Public health research moves beyond conjecture and opinion to provide sound evidence about the risks of ill health and disease. The course employs a series of case studies to evaluate evidence, make sense of correlations, and understand the risks of disease.

MPH 395 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an in-depth examination of various public health issues and can be taken multiple times for each topic offered.

MPH 501 | INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the basic tenets of public health, its focus on the prevention of disease and illness, and the promotion of the health and well-being of all people. The course provides a brief history of public health, an introduction to the five core disciplines of public health (epidemiology, biostatistics, environmental health, social and behavioral health, and health policy and management), and an overview of the field's core functions such as assessment, policy development, and assurance.

MPH 502 | INTRODUCTION TO EPIDEMIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on the theories and methods used in the field of epidemiology to study the occurrence, distribution and determinants of infectious and non-infectious diseases, other forms of illness (particularly those impacted by social and environmental forces), and injury in human populations. The focus will be on determining the impact, magnitude, and patterns of disease/illness/injury frequency so that causal agents can be identified and effective prevention, treatment and control measures can be designed and implemented. The course will explore variations of disease/illness/injury in relation to such factors as age, sex, race/ethnicity, occupational and social characteristics, place of residence, social inequality, susceptibility, exposure to specific agents, and other pertinent characteristics. Also of concern will be the temporal distribution of disease, examination of trends, cyclical patterns, and intervals between exposure to causative factors and onset of disease.

MPH 503 | INTRODUCTION TO ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides an introduction of key aspects of environmental health. Students will understand the reciprocal nature of our interactions with the environment: how the environment affects human health and well-being and how we impact the health of the environment. An emphasis in this course is on understanding environmental media and contaminant exposure routes and pathways; the impacts of contaminated sites on health; environmental health education, and community engagement; basics of environmental regulation; types of contaminated sites; and how environmental factors and contaminants can be involved in the transmission of disease and in adverse health outcomes.

MPH 511 | HEALTH AND BEHAVIOR THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine various theories and models that have been developed to identify the range of psychosocial factors that impact participation in both health-threatening and health-enhancing behaviors, and provide guidance for the modification of such behaviors. The theories and models will be explored from multidisciplinary perspectives and will be applied to an array of health issues. Practical applications of these theories to the development and implementations of theory-based public health interventions that can be applied with multiple populations (e.g., women, adolescents, elderly, people of color) within multiple settings (e.g., communities, schools, health care settings) at various levels of change (e.g., individual, community, social, policy) will also be explored. Cross-listed with PSY 511.

MPH 501 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 512 | RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide a critical examination of the relative strengths and limitations of various research designs, data collection methods, and types of existing data. Students will develop an understanding of (a) the relative contributions of a mixed-methods approach to public health research, (b) basic issues related to the measurement of public health concepts, and (c) the relative strengths and limitations of various analytic approaches to studying public health problems. Students will familiarize themselves with peer-reviewed journals, how to search for material on specific topics, how to develop a critical reader's eye, and how to summarize and draw evidence-based conclusions from multiple studies.

MPH 513 | PUBLIC HEALTH ADMINISTRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course considers the conceptual and theoretical foundation underlying managerial decision-making. The course introduces students to such basic managerial tools as basic accounting, cost-benefit analysis, budgeting, and marketing. Principles of strategic planning and forecasting are examined. The course goes on to examine the legal framework that governs public health practice, organizations, human resources, research activities, and community as well as individual patient intervention efforts.

MPH 515 | PUBLIC HEALTH ETHICS AND POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to analyze the ethical basis in which public health practice is grounded. It reviews concepts and ideas developed by a number of disciplines including philosophy, law, political science, and economics.

MPH 522 | PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT AND GRANT WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to provide students with the background and skills to develop and evaluate community public health programs in a variety of settings. Students will work individually and as members of teams to design measurable goals, objectives, action plans, timelines, and evaluation indicators of community-based public health programs. Application of methods to logic modeling, proposal writing, budget planning, project management, and data management will be examined throughout the course.

MPH 525 | PROGRAM EVALUATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide students with a comprehensive theoretical, methodological and ethical foundation for conducting public health program evaluation. Students will experience the practice aspects of evaluation including communicating and negotiating with stakeholders, conducting an evaluability assessment, developing logic models and evaluation questions, identifying appropriate data collection methods, gathering reliable and valid evaluation data that are appropriate to the selected design and analysis methods, analyzing data, reporting evaluation results, and ensuring evaluation use. The instructor will facilitate a learning and skill-building environment, drawing on personal experiences and the expertise of others in the field.

MPH 530 | SOCIAL EPIDEMIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines conceptual approaches and empirical findings related to the social and structural determinants of health. Students are introduced to the history and development of social epidemiology as a field of study, with emphasis on the tension between problem-focused and solution-focused research. Topics include the health effects of income inequality, racism/discrimination, and neighborhood effects, including social capital.

MPH 531 | DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores how statistical methods are used in the contemporary literature, focusing for the most part on social epidemiology. The course builds from an understanding of univariate and bivariate statistics and examines a range of multivariate strategies: ordinary least squares (OLS) regression, logistic, ordinal, and multinomial models, and hierarchical (multilevel) regression. The course revolves around a close reading of the research literature and hands-on application of statistical analysis; as such, the emphasis is on critically evaluating published work and setting up/interpreting analyses.

MPH 541 and MPH 502 (or instructor consent) are prerequisites for this class.

MPH 532 | DATA ANALYSIS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses primarily on regression models, with an emphasis on understanding the effects of compositional and contextual variables. Students develop statistical analysis to test theories and aid in the development of interventions to improve community health and reduce health inequities.

MPH 531 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 535 | PROGRAM DESIGN AND EVALUATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide a theoretical, conceptual, methodological, and ethical foundation for designing health-based programs and evaluating these programs using qualitative methods. The course will be practically-focused, and you will learn to carry out a qualitative evaluation of a health program in small steps, including: selecting a qualitative approach, developing instruments, sampling, collecting and managing qualitative data, developing codebooks and establishing inter-observer reliability, ensuring credibility and trustworthiness of data, using qualitative software, and reporting findings.

MPH 541 | BIOSTATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course emphasizes the application of statistical methods to problems of human health and disease. It covers parametric and nonparametric statistical inferential methods for univariate and bivariate situations using SPSS. Specific topics include but are not limited to the following: Interpretation of graphic and descriptive statistics for both quantitative and categorical data, confidence interval estimation and hypothesis testing methods, linear and multiple regression logistic regression, analysis of categorical data and ANOVA. Course emphasizes the statistical interpretation of the literature and analytic projects based on large data sets from published studies, the internet, or the student's workplace.

MPH 551 | GLOBAL HEALTH INEQUITIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines theories and data surrounding global health. Topics include epidemiologic transition, the burden of chronic non-communicable diseases in the global south, neglected tropical diseases, and access to medicines. Sociological and anthropological perspectives are explored to understand the structural causes of health inequalities around the world.

MPH 552 | MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will utilize a life course perspective to examine contemporary health issues affecting women and children. Students will examine health disparities and social determinants of health, and engage in discourse on a variety of health topics from a social justice framework. Course exercises and assignments will focus on building skills in community assessment, program planning, evaluation, advocacy and policy development, as they apply to maternal and child health.

MPH 553 | PUBLIC HEALTH AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an overview of key public health issues for populations undergoing forced migration. The course emphasizes the contextual factors relevant to the physical and psychosocial challenges faced by displaced populations. Using a community public health approach the course will address: the challenges of health promotion, health care access and delivery; the everyday contexts that affect health; strategies for conducting public health research; and interventions for addressing health outcomes.

MPH 554 | GLOBAL PUBLIC HEALTH PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the concepts, principles, tools, and frameworks fundamental to further study in the field of global public health. The course is global in scope but emphasis will be on low and middle income countries. It explores health systems issues and their impact on the health of populations. It outlines theories and models used in interventions to change health behavior and provides an overview of key actors and organizations working to advance health around the globe.

MPH 555 | EPIDEMIOLOGY IN A GLOBAL CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on the theories and methods used in the field of epidemiology to study the occurrence, distribution and determinants of infectious and non-infectious diseases, other forms of illness (particularly those impacted by social and environmental forces), and injury in human populations. The class examine epidemiology in various global contexts. The focus will be on 95 determining the impact, magnitude, and patterns of disease/illness/injury frequency so that causal agents can be identified and effective prevention, treatment and control measures can be designed and implemented. The course will explore variations of disease/illness/injury in relation to such factors as age, sex, race/ethnicity, occupational and social characteristics, place of residence, social inequality, susceptibility, exposure to specific agents, and other pertinent 100 characteristics. Also of concern will be the temporal distribution of disease, examination of trends, cyclical patterns, and intervals between exposure to causative factors and onset of disease.

MPH 556 | WOMEN'S HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An examination of women's health throughout the life cycle, with special emphasis placed on women's structural and societal roles within systems of health and in communities at large, which emphasizes on-going and emerging issues in women's health, such as sexual and reproductive health, contraception, gender-based violence, and chronic diseases, in order to address health disparities and redress health inequalities.

MPH 557 | ENVIRONMENTAL EPIDEMIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Environmental epidemiology is the science of identifying the role the environment has on the distribution of chronic and infectious disease. In this course, students will learn the practical techniques to identify health disparities and the associated environmental factors including the physical, chemical, biological, and socio-cultural determinants of health. Specific topics will include risk assessment, exposure estimation, and epidemiological study design demonstrated through case study analysis, critical review of the literature, data collection, and interpretation.

MPH 558 | QUALITATIVE METHODS IN PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the theory and application of qualitative inquiry. The course covers a variety of qualitative approaches including depth interviewing, focus groups, and photovoice. It also guides students through the process of designing a qualitative study, including: developing data collection instruments, managing data collection, analyzing qualitative data, and disseminating findings.

MPH 559 | VIOLENCE AND PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores violence from a public health perspective. It will examine various forms of violence, including: Interpersonal violence (e.g., community, family/partner violence), self-inflicted violence (e.g., suicide and self-harm) and collective violence (e.g., social violence and structural violence). It will also examine theories to explain violence and public health policies, programs, and community-based practices to address and prevent violence.

MPH 595 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Special courses will be offered as students and faculty affiliated with the MPH program identify selected topics of common interest.

MPH 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN PUBLIC HEALTH | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course can be taken in consultation with a supervising faculty member.

MPH 600 | PREPARATION FOR PUBLIC HEALTH PRACTICE | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

This year-long course includes a series of skills-based workshops designed to introduce students to the specialized skills and competencies needed in the public health workplace. These workshops are designed to complement the core MPH curriculum and are selected based on regular feedback from faculty, public health practitioners, and students.

MPH 602 | COMMUNITY HEALTH ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first of a three-course sequence. Students are expected to use multiple methods to obtain and synthesize data pertaining to their practicum organization and the communities served. They will apply these skills to community health practice in their practicum agency, and to the development of preliminary chapters in the academic capstone.

MPH 603 | COMMUNITY HEALTH PROJECT DESIGN | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the second course of the three-course sequence. Students are expected to assess and incorporate findings from their community health profile and organizational assessment to design a public health project plan that meets the needs of the community served by their practicum agency, and to further develop the academic capstone.

MPH 602 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 604 | CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN COMMUNITY PUBLIC HEALTH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the third course of the three-course sequence. Students are expected to describe and distill outcomes from their practicum project, and synthesize the meaning of these outcomes within a broader public health context. They will produce the final chapters of the academic capstone, submit the finalized capstone for review, and create a professional poster presentation.

MPH 602 and MPH 603 are prerequisites for this class.

MPH 605 | SOCIAL EPIDEMIOLOGY PROJECT DESIGN | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first part of a three-course capstone sequence. This course focuses on the first two parts of the capstone and is designed to provide the student with the practical experience needed to apply skills learning in Social Epidemiology to the practice of Community Health Assessment and Organizational Assessment.

MPH 600 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 606 | SOCIAL EPIDEMIOLOGY PROJECT IMPLEMENTATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This class examines the practical application of social sciences theories to the creation of effective epidemiological analysis and the presentation of findings. Using your practicum as a framework, we examine the scientific literature to assess current best practices and benchmarks for your proposed capstone product through a systematic review of the literature. We apply this scholarly knowledge, in concord with your work for MPH 605, to craft and conduct an appropriate epidemiological analysis for your capstone. We will review the analytical tools needed in the capstone and we will identify techniques to disseminate the findings of the project in a comprehensive, concise, and appropriate results section.

MPH 605 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 607 | CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN SOCIAL EPIDEMIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the third course of the three-course capstone sequence. This course focuses on the final production of the capstone and poster presentation at the MPH Graduate Public Health Forum. The capstone demonstrates students' ability to integrate knowledge and skills obtained throughout their MPH training and practicum placement to a social epidemiology issue and setting – and to express this integration in two structured, academic formats: capstone and poster.

MPH 606 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPH 698 | CAPSTONE THESIS COMPLETION | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

Students may register for this class if they are engaged in work on their capstone thesis. Registration requires certification by the chair that the student is engaged in writing. The course does not apply to completion of an IN in a class. This is a zero-credit course.

MPH 699 | PUBLIC HEALTH PRACTICUM | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Students placed in practicum are required to enroll in MPH 699, Pass/Fail course. MPH 699 is a year-long course with no in-person class time. However, the course D2L site serves as the centralized location for practicum paperwork, portfolio submissions, hour counts, and the coordination of practicum-related administrative matters. Students are required to successfully complete MPH 699 to be eligible for degree conferral.

MPH 600 is a prerequisite for this course.

Masters in Social Work (MSW)

MSW 321 | INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL WORK RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research needed in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge and professional social work practice. It presents social justice as an overarching paradigm in the study of social work research. MSW 321 presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge with professional social work practice and ethics. The course focuses on the quantitative and qualitative methods. The course covers the research process from problem identification through the conceptualization of research questions, sampling, design, measurement, data collection, analysis, and dissemination of findings. Additionally the course pays specific attention to ethics in research and issues of race, class, gender and sexual orientation. As an alternative to the quantitative research method, the course touches briefly on qualitative methods. The course makes use of examples and readings that focus on conducting research with individuals, families, and communities in urban environments. Students engage in a critical analysis of the quantitative research method and consider alternative methods of developing knowledge as it pertains to social work. Additionally, the course provides a basic coverage of data analysis using both the quantitative and qualitative research methods with the goal of developing student's conceptual understanding and ability to critically interpret research findings.

MSW 350 | SPECIAL TOPICS COURSE FOR UNDERGRADUATES | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

In-depth examination of selected and timely social issues from a social work perspective. Topics vary from quarter to quarter.

MSW 401 | PROFESSIONAL WRITING AND DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

The practice of professional social work requires accurate and persuasive communication in multiple formats. This required, foundation-level course is designed to introduce students to the major possibilities and constraints of professional writing and other forms of communication as well as survey the career paths available to professional social workers. There is an emphasis on writing for professional settings including case studies, mandated reports, summaries, and professional publication.

Status as a MSW degree seeking student is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 411 | HUMAN BEHAVIOR AND THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT I | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This is the first course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the first half of the life span: conception, infancy, childhood, adolescence and young adulthood.

MSW 412 | HUMAN BEHAVIOR AND THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT II | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This is the second course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems, organizations, and institutions. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the second half of the life span: young adulthood, middle adulthood, later adulthood and end of life.

MSW 411 and status as a MSW degree-seeking student or instructor consent are a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 421 | INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL WORK RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research needed in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge and professional social work practice. It presents social justice as an overarching paradigm in the study of social work research. MSW 421 presents the conceptual foundations and methods of research in order to assist students with integrating research knowledge with professional social work practice and ethics. The course focuses on the quantitative and qualitative methods. The course covers the research process from problem identification through the conceptualization of research questions, sampling, design, measurement, data collection, analysis, and dissemination of findings. Additionally the course pays specific attention to ethics in research and issues of race, class, gender and sexual orientation. As an alternative to the quantitative research method, the course touches briefly on qualitative methods. The course makes use of examples and readings that focus on conducting research with individuals, families, and communities in urban environments. Students engage in a critical analysis of the quantitative research method and consider alternative methods of developing knowledge as it pertains to social work. Additionally, the course provides a basic coverage of data analysis using both the quantitative and qualitative research methods with the goal of developing student's conceptual understanding and ability to critically interpret research findings.

Status as a MSW degree seeking student is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 431 | SOCIAL WELFARE POLICY I | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This foundation-level course is designed to provide students with the entry-level knowledge of social work ethics and values, policy formation and analysis, and practice skills necessary to impact and interpret the rules and regulations surrounding social welfare. Emphasis is placed on understanding political processes at the agency, local, regional and federal level and attention is given to economic considerations as well as the unique role of social welfare policy in regulating the lives of clients, particularly those from historically oppressed groups. This course is the first of two required social welfare policy courses for MSW degree candidates.

Status as a MSW degree seeking student is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 432 | ADVANCED SOCIAL WELFARE POLICY II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the second of two required Social Welfare Policy Courses in the MSW curriculum. This concentration course focuses on policy practice (including advocacy) skills in agencies and organizations. While including a review of analytical techniques, there is emphasis in this course on the human interactions which shape policy review and implementation. Only students who have successfully completed MSW 431 and the Foundation Practice and Field Education Sequence (MSW 481 thru 483 and MSW 491 thru 493) can be enrolled in this course.

MSW 431 or advanced standing is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 450 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIAL WORK | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

See schedule for current offerings. Graduate standing required.

MSW 481 | FOUNDATION PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work with diverse individuals and families in an urban context. The course is grounded in an empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. The course will explore the implementation of the ecosystems perspective as it applies to a generalist practice. The course will also cover the relationship between professional and personal values, social work ethics, assessment, relationship building, implementing change strategies, and practice evaluation. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 491 (Foundation Field Education I) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

Status as a MSW degree seeking student is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 482 | FOUNDATION PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the second in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work with groups in an urban context. The course will emphasize the development, implementation, and evaluation of various forms of therapeutic groups along with some content on organizational task groups. Task groups will be covered more thoroughly in MSW 483. The course is grounded in an empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 492 (Foundation Field Education II) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

MSW 481 and status as a MSW degree-seeking student are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 483 | FOUNDATION PRACTICE III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the third in a series of three required foundational courses (MSW 481, MSW 482 and MSW 483) designed to equip students with the basic theoretical knowledge, analytical skills, practice skills, and values needed to practice generalist social work within communities and organizations. Specifically, this course introduces skills associated with task groups which serve to meet client needs in communities and organizations. The course is grounded in the empowerment model with an emphasis on social justice and the Vincentian values of respect, advocacy, service, and inventiveness. This course is to be taken concurrently with MSW 493 (Foundation Field Education III) and is required of all students enrolled in the first year field sequence.

MSW 482 and status as a MSW degree-seeking student are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 491 | FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 481 as well as enrollment in an approved foundation field work placement. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals and families using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies.

Declared MSW student and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 492 | FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the second course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 482 as well as enrollment in an approved foundation field work placement. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals and families using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies.

MSW 491 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSW 493 | FOUNDATION FIELD EDUCATION III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the third course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 483 as well as enrollment in an approved foundation field work placement. Students will be provided with the opportunity to apply the beginning skills and knowledge needed to professionally aid individuals, families, and groups using the bio-psycho-social model and the empowerment approach, and introduce key components of field work and working with community organizations and social service agencies.

MSW 492 and department permission are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Individually-supervised learning experience, usually involving extensive research and written analysis.

MSW 501 | PROGRAM EVALUATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course offers a comprehensive overview of how program evaluation fits in today's social service environment. It presents social justice as an overarching paradigm in the study of program evaluation. The course will cover three methods of program evaluation: needs assessments, outcome evaluations, and process evaluations. The course will also cover the history of evaluation and ethical considerations related to race, ethnicity and sexual orientation and emphasize the role of program evaluation with community-based organizations that exist in an urban context. Practical issues related to organizational mission, staff resistance, resource demands and evaluation ethics will be covered in order to offer a reality-based perspective on conducting program evaluation.

MSW 421, (MSW 483 or MSW 484), and (MSW 493 or MSW 494) are prerequisites for this class.

MSW 521 | FUND DEVELOPMENT AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to creating, implementing and adjusting budgets within agencies and programs which serve people, as well as program marketing and fundraising (including grant writing). This course is taken either concurrently with MSW 582 (Community Practice II) or before advanced field education. MSW 521 emphasizes budget preparation, fund acquisition and fund distribution. Successful completion of MSW 501 (Program Evaluation) is required for this course, as is the successful completion of the MSW research course (MSW 421). This course builds upon the constructs introduced in the advanced practice sequence. This course introduces students to budgetary operations and the ethical, value-based planning and decision making processes by which social workers must implement fiscal and administrative decisions.

MSW 421, (MSW 483 or MSW 484), and (MSW 493 or MSW 494) are prerequisites for this class.

MSW 561 | FORENSIC SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice at the intersections of human services organizations and legal systems. This course prepares students to work directly with adults and juveniles who are involved in the justice system as well as victims of crime and their families across a range of community-based and institutional settings. The course emphasizes the intersections of race, poverty, gender, and other factors to prepare students to work effectively in a range of settings to promote humane treatment and social justice. After an initial emphasis on clinical and risk assessment, this course begins to introduce students to major evidence-based treatment models for treating individuals involved in the justice system and victims of crime. Students explore ethical issues unique to forensic social work. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 571 (Forensic Field I).

MSW 483 and MSW 493 are prerequisites for this class. MSW 571 is a co-requisite for this class.

MSW 562 | FORENSIC SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice at the intersections of human services organizations and legal systems. The course emphasizes the intersections of race, poverty, gender, and other factors to prepare students to work effectively in a range of settings to promote humane treatment and social justice. This course expands the focus on learning and applying major evidence-based treatment models for treating individuals involved in the justice system and victims of crime. Students will also develop skills in evaluating programs and practices, along with examining relevant ethical considerations.

MSW 561 and MSW 571 are prerequisites for this class.

MSW 563 | FORENSIC SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice at the intersections of human services organizations and legal systems. The course emphasizes the intersections of race, poverty, gender, and other factors to prepare students to work effectively in a range of settings to promote humane treatment and social justice. In this course students utilize knowledge gained in the pre-requisites and in their internships to develop a project scenario in which they feature a client (e.g., someone accused, an offender, a victim's family, etc.) and describe treatment approaches as well as related ethical, legal, and multicultural factors that may impact treatment. Students also consider and discuss professional identity and goals.

MSW 562 and MSW 572 are prerequisites for this class.

MSW 571 | FORENSIC FIELD I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the first course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 561 as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Forensic Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed to practice Forensic Social Work. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically- marginalized groups through required learning objectives and tasks.

Status as an MSW degree-seeking student is a prerequisite for this class and MSW 561 is a co-requisite for this class.

MSW 572 | FORENSIC FIELD II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the second course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 562, as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Forensic Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed to practice Forensic Social Work. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically- marginalized groups through required learning objectives and tasks.

MSW 561 and MSW 571 are prerequisites for this class. MSW 562 is a co-requisite for this class.

MSW 573 | FORENSIC FIELD III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the third course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 563, as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Forensic Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed to practice Forensic Social Work. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically- marginalized groups through required learning objectives and tasks.

MSW 562 and MSW 572 are prerequisites for this class. MSW 563 is a co-requisite for this class.

MSW 581 | COMMUNITY PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, including empowerment practice, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the first of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses, is on leadership and management of human service organizations. This course introduces students to the knowledge, skills and professional values essential to leadership of community-based or community-serving programs and organizations. This course covers leadership theories, styles, and techniques; supervision and facilitation; and the critical role(s) leadership play(s) in agency and program administration. Special attention is paid to the unique considerations of people with diverse backgrounds (and representatives of other marginalized groups) in leadership positions as well as working towards the promotion of social and economic justice. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 591 (Advanced Field Education I).

(MSW 483 or MSW 484) and (MSW 493 or MSW 494) are prerequisites for this course.

MSW 582 | COMMUNITY PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the second of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses, is on program planning. This course introduces students to the skills and knowledge needed to plan and design programs in community-based, people-serving organizations, starting with problem analysis and needs assessment. Related topics such as understanding the multiple dimensions of social problems, operationalizing concerns, and the importance of collaboration and addressing diverse groups' needs within a community practice framework are also addressed. Measures for accountability and effectiveness, especially for professional social workers, are also addressed. Attention is also given to the needs of historically-marginalized groups and planning for full social and economic justice. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 592 (Advanced Field Education II).

MSW 581 is a prerequisite for this class

MSW 583 | COMMUNITY PRACTICE III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Using select theoretical approaches, this course equips students with the advanced skills and knowledge needed to practice in community-serving agencies and organizations. The emphasis in this course, which represents the final of three consecutive, required (advanced) practice courses is on resource development and marketing. This course continues facilitation in planning and designing programs in community-based or community-serving organizations while also providing students with opportunities to integrate fund development, program evaluation, and effective stewardship of resources to leverage lasting social change, especially on behalf of historically-oppressed communities. Additional related topics include analysis of organizational change, partnerships, strategic planning, and quality assurance. It is required that this course be taken concurrently with MSW 593 (Advanced Field Education III).

MSW 582 is a prerequisite for this course.

MSW 591 | COMMUNITY FIELD EDUCATION I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the first course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 581 as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Community Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed in Community Practice. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically- marginalized groups in organizational leadership roles through required learning objectives and tasks.

Status as an MSW degree-seeking student is a prerequisite for this class and MSW 581 is a corequisite for this class.

MSW 592 | COMMUNITY FIELD EDUCATION II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the second course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 582 as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Community Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed in Community Practice. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically-marginalized groups in organizational leadership roles through required learning objectives and tasks.

MSW 581 and MSW 591 are a prerequisite and MSW 582 is a co-requisite for this class.

MSW 593 | COMMUNITY FIELD EDUCATION III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the third course in a three-part field education sequence. This course requires simultaneous enrollment in MSW 583 as well as enrollment in an approved field agency placement specializing in Community Practice. The course is designed to assist students processing the theoretical, analytical, and practical skills needed in Community Practice. Attention is also paid to the unique considerations of women and representatives of other historically- marginalized groups in organizational leadership roles through required learning objectives and tasks.

MSW 582 and MSW 592 are a prerequisite and MSW 583 is a corequisite for this class.

MSW 599 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This class is intended for students who experience disruption in their MSW course of study. Students may register for this class if they are engaged in work associated with their academic or field-placement-based work. Registration requires certification by the chair that the student is engaged in academic or placement-based work. The course does not apply to completion of an IN in a class. This course may be taken at most 3 times. It carries the equivalent of half-time enrollment status, for financial aid purposes. Zero-credit.

Masters of Liberal Studies (MLS)

MLS 401 | VISIONS OF THE SELF | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A study of the differing visions of the self as presented in significant documents from the history of ideas. Materials selected from classic texts of literature, philosophy, theology, psychology and social science.

MLS 402 | PERCEPTIONS OF REALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A survey, beginning with ancient Greece and ending with the modern world, of models of universal order as developed by natural scientists and literary and visual artists.

MLS 403 | THE AMERICAN EXPERIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A chronological and thematic study of the location of self within American culture. Readings chosen to reflect both dominant and dissenting ideas at specific points of American history.

MLS 404 | THE CITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A topical examination of the urban experience using the methods and sources of both historians and social scientists. Topics include surveys of various images of the city, utopian and dystopian visions, and the uniqueness of the modern city.

MLS 405 | REPRESENTATIONS OF THE BODY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine how the human body, which seems to be a natural, universal fact, is also a deeply cultural symbolic construction whose analysis yields insights into structures of power and consciousness.

MLS 406 | EXPLORING OTHER CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examination of the history, traditions, values and institutions that have shaped the lives of people in another culture. Analysis of the "terms of encounter," that is, the perspectives that students assume as they seek to encounter the "other." Variable topics.

MLS 407 | SELF, CULTURE AND SOCIETY IN CONTEMPORARY JAPAN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Interdisciplinary examination of the political, economic and social order of contemporary Japan. Relationship of individuals and groups to the social order, as they create the reality of diversity and possibilities for change.

MLS 409 | ENVIRONMENT AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Environment and Society" is a 400-level interdisciplinary core course on the environment. The course might include such topics as cultural diversity in time and place with regard to the human view of the natural world, various approaches to environmental ethics, philosophical and religious influence in conceptions of the earth as environment, the relationship between scientific measurement and the social constructions of the natural world, the science and politics of climate change, race and gender considerations in environmental politics, and environmental consciousness in literature and the arts. The instructor's own disciplinary interests will play a prominent role in the course construction, but the course will draw from the sciences, the social sciences and the humanities. As in all MLS courses, the instructor will use the course assignments to work with students on enhancing graduate-level intellectual skills through reflexive pedagogy.

MLS 419 | CHICAGO: THE 21ST CENTURY | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Chicago: Towards The 21st Century.

MLS 427 | TOPICS IN COMMUNICATION AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Variable topics relating to cross-cultural communication, culture and media, cultural difference in communication, and communication issues in multiculturalism. Consult current course schedule for topic.

MLS 428 | TOPICS IN ORGANIZATIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Variable topics relating to communication issues in organizational settings, including power, institutional culture and change, training, and multicultural factors. Consult current course schedule for topic.

MLS 440 | FEMINIST THEORIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A discussion and assessment of the various theories concerning the place of women in society, including theories that have advocated a more positive role for and valuation of women than those of the dominant society. The course will take both an historical and a topical approach. Cross-listed as WGS 300 and WGS 400.

MLS 441 | WOMEN ACROSS CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A critical analysis of the roles of women in societies around the world, with special emphasis on economics, politics, and culture. Focus is on African, Asian and Latin American cultures and non-dominant groups within Western Societies. Topics vary each quarter.

MLS 442 | ETHICS AND THE ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will present the thinking of social scientists, philosophers and theologians on the impact of religious values on the origin and development of American capitalism, and their possible relevance to contemporary discussions of business ethics. Cross-listed as GSB 650.

MLS 443 | WORK, LEISURE AND THE QUALITY OF LIFE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course examines the nature and meaning of work and leisure in Western culture, and the relationship of work and leisure to contemporary issues associated with the concept "Quality of Life". Cross-listed as SOC 475.

MLS 445 | GENDER AND COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A review of the differences in communication patterns between women and men. Topics covered include language and language usage differences, interaction patterns, and perceptions of the sexes generated through language and communication.

MLS 447 | GENDER AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Attention to the growing literature and empirical research on changing patterns in economic, psychological and social outcomes for women and men. Consideration of various theories of gender differentiation and inequality.

MLS 448 | WORK AND LEISURE IN THE FUTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The latter half of the 20th century has seen great change in the meaning, form and value assigned to work and leisure in society. Many of these changes have come to be characterized as inevitable consequences of life in post-industrial society. This course: 1) seeks to identify the factors that are shaping the future of work and leisure and 2) will explore futuristic scenarios that challenge the position of "work as a central-life meaning.

MLS 449 | TOPICS IN NON-FICTION WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics addressed in different versions of the course may include writing for magazines, science writing, travel writing, writing in humanities and social science research, etc. Consult current course schedule for topics.

MLS 450 | CHICAGO: ARCHITECTURE & URBAN DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A study of urban architecture in Chicago from 1833 to 1984, including the role of planning, the purpose of open space, the place of tradition, the impact of modern design theories and evaluation of contemporary developments.

MLS 451 | TOPICS IN AMERICAN POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics In American Politics.

MLS 452 | BUSINESS, SOCIETY AND SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A study of the basic ideas, aspirations and values which shape personal, social, cultural, economic and environmental systems. We will identify and critique the organizational systems serving society's needs today; specifically how they contribute to—or detract from—the goals of Sustainable Development, and to identify points of intervention for systemic change.

MLS 453 | POLITICS, MEDIA AND EVERYDAY LIFE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An examination of various ways in which the mass media influence our perceptions of reality. Political, social and cultural implications of media processes are assessed. Cross-listed as PSC 321.

MLS 455 | COMMUNITY AND THE CITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course explores the possibilities for community life within urban settings. It emphasizes the development of network relations and cross-cutting ties.

MLS 456 | THE USES OF AUTOBIOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Study of selected autobiographical writings to serve as models for self-expression.

MLS 458 | ISLAM AND THE WEST IN THE MODERN WORLD | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An examination of the economic, cultural and political interactions of Europe and the Islamic World.

MLS 459 | WRITING IN THE PROFESSIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Improves writing skills useful in semi- and non-technical professions; emphasis on style, tone, awareness of purpose and audience; effective memo, proposal and report design.

MLS 460 | THE DILEMMA OF THE MODERN AGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The crisis of the individual's place in society is exposed through social sciences, philosophy, literature, art and music. The distinctive features of and responses to modern culture-individualism, alienation and depersonalization—are illuminated through multiple perspectives.

MLS 461 | MODERN POETRY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Studies in 20th-century English and American poetry. Cross-listed as ENG 466.

MLS 462 | TOPICS IN BUSINESS ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Seminar In Business Ethics. Cross-listed as PHL 640 and GSB 640..

MLS 463 | NATIONALISM AND INTERNATIONAL CONFLICT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will explore the social origins and development of national identities. How these identities have been manipulated to serve specific competitive interests in the past two hundred years will also be discussed. Cross-listed as PSC 342 & INT 365.

MLS 464 | THE CULTURE OF AMERICAN CATHOLICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

How has the unique experience of immigration shaped the American Catholic Church from the colonial period to the 21st century? How did the idea of "the Church" as an authoritative hierarchy come about in the mid-20th century, and how has that notion been challenged by immigrant communities, as well as artists and intellectuals? Drawing on the disciplines of history, sociology, anthropology, cultural theory, literature and the arts, this course looks at those who built the Church and those who challenged and changed it. Cross-listed as REL 384 and CTH 384.

MLS 467 | SELECTED TOPICS ON WOMEN IN LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics vary; see schedule for current offering.

MLS 468 | SELECTED TOPICS: WOMEN, SELF AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics vary; see schedule for current offerings.

MLS 473 | TOPICS IN LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics addressed in different versions of the course may include various themes, movements and genres in British, American and World Literature. Consult current course schedule for topic.

MLS 474 | WOMEN AND ART | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examines the work of the most significant women artists from the Renaissance to the present. It will also investigate how women have been represented in Western art by both male and female artists. Cross-listed as HAA 366.

MLS 475 | TOPICS IN CONTEMPORARY FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An examination of recent films and their relation to broader tendencies in contemporary culture. Topics vary, see schedule for current offerings.

MLS 476 | CHICAGO IN FICTION AND FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines novels and short stories written by Chicagoans during the 20th century. It also includes a few film adaptations of these works.

MLS 477 | FEMINIST ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Critiques of mainstream empirical and philosophical works and of Carol Gilligan's work on ethics will include discussions on the women's voice in morality, the nature of theories by women vs. men, the formation of plural positions concerning care versus justice, and alternative ethical stances. Cross-listed as WGS 310/410 and REL 322.

MLS 478 | THE PSYCHOLOGY OF WOMEN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A review of research and theory on women including sexist biases and methodology, feminist therapy, violence against women, and gender differences in the development of power and sexuality. Cross-listed as PSY 561 and WGS 470.

MLS 479 | WRITING POETRY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Writing Poetry. Cross-listed as ENG 493.

MLS 480 | MAJOR AUTHORS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An examination of major writers in the English and American literary traditions. Topics vary; see schedule for current offerings.

MLS 481 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN ART HISTORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Explorations in the history of art from ancient Egyptians to contemporary art. Topics vary.

MLS 482 | ECOLOGY, SPIRITUALITY AND ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the ecological crisis from a religious/ethical perspective, examining the dangers posed for humanity and the planet. It considers the new cosmology developing from science, especially physics, and its dialogue with philosophy, myth and religion. Cross-listed as REL 320.

MLS 483 | CULTURAL PERSPECTIVES ON HEALTH AND DISEASE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A multidisciplinary examination of the cultural factor that help form notions of the well and sick states of the human body. Included will be such topics as the social/religious history of epidemics, healing in Western and non-Western medicine, etc. Sources will be drawn from the history of medicine, anthropological and sociological works, philosophy and literature. Cross-listed as REL 320.

MLS 484 | ZEN MIND | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the philosophy, art, literature and religious practice of Zen Buddhism. It explores Zen's influence in both Japan and America. Cross-listed as REL 342.

MLS 485 | INEQUALITY IN AMERICA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the nature and extent of inequality in American society and explores various psychological, political, social and economic theories which attempt to explain the existence of this phenomenon. Cross-listed as PSC 324.

MLS 486 | TOPICS IN POPULAR CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examines a specific dimension of popular culture using interdisciplinary theories and methods. Possible topics include Food in Film, The Ideology of Romance, or perhaps the popular culture of a decade like the 1950s or 1960s. Topics vary.

MLS 487 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN HISTORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics vary.

MLS 488 | TOPICS IN WORLD RELIGIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics in World Religions.

MLS 489 | TOPICS IN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Various topics in the field of sociology.

MLS 490 | SPECIAL TOPICS AND CONTROVERSIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Occasional offerings of particular contemporary relevance by visiting professors. Topics vary.

MLS 497 | INDEPENDENT STUDY [NON-CAPSTONE] | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent study in an area that does not lead directly into the thesis or capstone. Students may also register for this course on a topic indirectly related to their thesis or capstone if they will subsequently take MLS 498, in which the student directly prepares to write the Integrating Project/Thesis. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking independent studies follow a specified format of meeting frequency, activities, and scholarly production. This format is available on the program web site or from the MALS and IDS office. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the instructor of the independent study.

MLS 498 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent study undertaken as preparation for thesis or practicum capstone options. This course is optional preparation for MLS 499, Capstone. The MALS and IDS Program requires that students taking this course follow a specified format of meeting frequency, that they produce a review of literature related to their thesis or practicum, an annotated bibliography, and the required Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the thesis or practicum director.

MLS 499 | CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Capstone for students doing a thesis, practicum or enhanced portfolio essay. Students may register for this course after the Formal Proposal for the thesis or practicum, or the Enhanced Portfolio Essay Proposal, has been approved. Students are normally expected to complete their capstone projects within the quarter in which they take this course. This course carries four hours of credit. Registration is by permission of the Director of the MALS and IDS Program and the permission of the instructor who serves as the student's capstone director.

MLS 500 | CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A seminar offered occasionally to guide groups of students working on their capstone projects.

MLS 501 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to graduate students who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

MLS 502 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

Mathematical Sciences (MAT)

MAT 94 | BASIC ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The objective of this course is to increase the students' competence in working with ordinary arithmetic, using a large variety of practical problems and situations from basic sciences as motivation. Formerly WRC 104.

MAT 95 | INTRODUCTORY ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to functions, linear equations, linear inequalities, absolute values, systems of linear equations, exponents, and polynomials. Formerly WRC 204.

MAT 094or placement is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 100 | INTRODUCTION TO QUANTITATIVE REASONING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the algebra needed for quantitative reasoning with a focus on functions and modeling. This course emphasizes the applications of elementary algebra and the use of functions to model and analyze real-world situations. Topics include functions from graphical, tabular, and symbolic points of view and models using linear, quadratic, power, exponential, and logarithmic functions. Graphing technology is used extensively. This course is prerequisite to LSP 120 and is intended for students continuing on to LSP 120. This course is not recommended for students whose plan of study includes calculus.

MAT 094or placement is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 101 | INTERMEDIATE ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Functions, factoring, rational expressions, roots, radicals, quadratic equations, quadratic inequalities. Course meets for an additional 1 hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving.

MAT 095 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 110 | FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course gives students a deeper understanding of the foundations of elementary mathematics. Topics include problem solving, number systems, the decimal system, the number line, rounding, fractions, percentages, addition and subtraction.

MAT 101 or LSP 120 or equivalents or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 111 | FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course gives students a deeper understanding of the foundations of elementary mathematics. Topics include problem solving, fractions, percentages, addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division.

MAT 110 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 112 | GAMBLING AND GAMES, PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Students with very little mathematical background and little or no computing background will be given a brief introduction to the use of Microsoft Excel for mathematical purposes. This will be followed by a brief discussion of chance, gambling, and probability. Several popular games (such as lotteries, roulette, craps, and poker) will be considered both from a theoretical point of view and by means of very simple computer simulation. At the end, we will discuss briefly topics from game theory such as zero-sum games and game with cooperation.

MAT 094or placement is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 115 | MATHEMATICS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL TEACHERS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Continuation of Math 110-111.

MAT 111 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 120 | QUANTITATIVE REASONING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides a mathematical foundation for students to become confident and critical users of quantitative information of all kinds: numerical, graphical, and verbal. Students analyze data from a wide variety of fields, making and critiquing quantitative arguments. Mathematical topics include proportional reasoning and rates, the making and interpretation of graphs, linear and exponential models, logarithms, and finance. The course is taught in a hands-on laboratory environment where students are introduced to computer tools for data analysis and presentation.

MAT 100 OR MAT 101 OR Placement Exam

MAT 130 | FUNCTIONS AND MATHEMATICAL MODELS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Functions and their graphs, modeling with linear and quadratic functions, polynomial and rational functions, inverse functions, exponential and logarithmic functions, logarithmic scale, exponential growth and decay models, logistic growth.

MAT 101 or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 131 | PRECALCULUS AND TRIGONOMETRY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Functions and their graphs, inverse functions, exponential and logarithmic functions, polynomial and rational functions, trigonometric functions, inverse trigonometric functions, trigonometric identities, polar coordinates.

MAT 130 or equivalents or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 135 | BUSINESS CALCULUS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Differential calculus of one or more variables with business applications.
A grade of C- or better in MAT 130 (or equivalent) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 136 | BUSINESS CALCULUS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Integral calculus, matrix algebra, and probability theory with business applications.

A grade of C- or better in MAT 135 (or equivalent) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 137 | BUSINESS STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic concepts of statistics and applications; data analysis with the use of Excel; theoretical distributions; sampling distributions; problems of estimation; hypothesis testing; problems of sampling; linear regression and correlation.

A grade of C- or better in MAT 130 (or equivalent) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 140 | DISCRETE MATHEMATICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to combinatorics, basic probability, graph theory, propositional logic, singly-quantified statements, operational knowledge of set theory, functions, number systems.

MAT 130 or above or equivalents or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 141 | DISCRETE MATHEMATICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to properties of integers and real numbers, sequences, recursion, mathematical induction, relations, digraphs, graph theory, multiply-quantified statements, complexity.

MAT 140 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 147 | CALCULUS WITH INTEGRATED PRECALCULUS I | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Limits, continuity, the derivative, rules of differentiation, derivatives of trigonometric and logarithmic functions and their inverses, and applications, with precalculus review included for each topic. The full MAT 147-8-9 sequence covers all the material of MAT 150-1-2 plus additional precalculus material. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 130 or equivalents or placement by test is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 148 | CALCULUS WITH INTEGRATED PRECALCULUS II | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Extrema, curve sketching, related rates, definite and indefinite integrals, applications of the integral, with precalculus review included for each topic. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 147 (or MAT 150 or MAT 155 or MAT 160 or MAT 170) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 149 | CALCULUS WITH INTEGRATED PRECALCULUS III | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Techniques of integration, L'Hopital's rule, improper integrals, Taylor polynomials, series and sequences, first-order differential equations, with precalculus review included for each topic. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 148 (or MAT 151 or MAT 161 or MAT 171) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 150 | CALCULUS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Limits, continuity, the derivative, rules of differentiation, derivatives of trigonometric and logarithmic functions and their inverses, applications of the derivative, extrema, curve sketching, and optimization. This course meets for an additional 1-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving.

MAT 131 or placement by test is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 151 | CALCULUS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Definite and indefinite integrals, the Fundamental Theorem of Calculus, applications of the integral, techniques of integration. This course meets for an additional 1-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving.

MAT 150 or MAT 155 or MAT 160 or MAT 170 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 152 | CALCULUS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

L'Hopital's rule, improper integrals, sequences and series, Taylor polynomials. This course meets for an additional 1-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving.

MAT 151 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 155 | SUMMER CALCULUS I | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Limits, continuity, the derivative, rules of differentiation, derivatives of trigonometric and logarithmic functions and their inverses, applications of the derivative, extrema, curve sketching, and optimization. Definite and indefinite integrals, the Fundamental Theorem of Calculus, applications of the integral. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 131 or placement by Mathematics Diagnostic Test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 156 | SUMMER CALCULUS II | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Further applications of the integral, techniques of integration. L'Hopital's rule, improper integrals, sequences and series, Taylor polynomials. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 148 or MAT 151 or MAT 155 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 160 | CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE MAJORS I | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Limits, continuity, the derivative, rules of differentiation, derivatives of trigonometric and logarithmic functions and their inverses, applications of the derivative, extrema, curve sketching, and optimization. This course meets for an additional 1.5-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 131 or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 161 | CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE MAJORS II | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Definite and indefinite integrals, the Fundamental Theorem of Calculus, applications of the integral, techniques of integration. This course meets for an additional 1.5-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 150 or MAT 155 or MAT 160 or MAT 170 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 162 | CALCULUS FOR MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE MAJORS III | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

L'Hopital's rule, improper integrals, sequences and series, Taylor polynomials. This course meets for an additional 1.5-hour lab session each week for enrichment and problem solving. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 151 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 170 | CALCULUS FOR LIFE SCIENCES I | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course covers the following topics using examples from the sciences: Functions as models, logarithmic scale graphing, exponential growth and decay, difference equations and limits of sequences, geometric series, functions and limits, trigonometric functions and their limits, continuity, limits at infinity, the derivative, differentiation rules, derivatives of trigonometric and exponential functions, related rates, derivatives of inverse and logarithm functions. Course meets for an additional lab session each week during which time students will work on applied mathematics projects based on the topics covered in the course. Students majoring in the sciences should consult with their major department to decide between the 160 and 170 sequences. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 131 or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 171 | CALCULUS FOR LIFE SCIENCES II | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course covers the following topics using examples from the sciences: Applications of the derivative including approximation and local linearity, differentials, extrema and the Mean Value Theorem, monotonicity and concavity, extrema, inflection points, graphing, L'Hospital's Rule, optimization, and the Newton-Raphson method, antiderivatives, the definite integral, Riemann sums, the Fundamental Theorem of Calculus, area, cumulative change, average value of a function, and techniques of integration: substitution rule and integration by parts. Course meets for an additional lab session each week during which time students will work on applied mathematics projects based on the topics covered in the course. Course meets for an additional lab session each week during which time students will work on applied mathematics projects based on the topics covered in the course. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 150 or MAT 155 or MAT 160 or MAT 170 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 172 | CALCULUS III WITH DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for students in the life sciences and covers some topics from MAT 152, differential equations and an introduction to the Calculus of functions of several variables. Specific topics are as follows. Numerical integration, partial fraction expansions, Taylor approximations of a function, differential equations, separation of variables, slope fields, Euler's existence theorem, polygonal approximations to solutions of differential equations, the logistic equation and allometric growth models, equilibria of differential equations and their stability, applications of stability theory, functions of several variables, partial derivatives, directional derivative and the gradient. Course meets for an additional lab session each week during which time students will work on applied mathematics projects based on the topics covered in the course. (5 quarter hours)

MAT 151 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 207 | HISTORY OF PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

History Of Probability And Statistics.

MAT 215 | INTRODUCTION TO MATHEMATICAL REASONING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to basic concepts and techniques used in higher mathematics courses: set theory, equivalence relations, functions, cardinality, techniques of proof in mathematics. The emphasis is on problem solving and proof construction by students.

MAT 156 OR MAT 149 OR MAT 152 OR MAT 162 OR MAT 172 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 216 | FOUNDATIONS OF ADVANCED MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to abstract mathematics: congruences, modular arithmetic, the Euclidean algorithm, proofs involving manipulation of inequalities and estimation, sequences and their limits.

MAT 215 (or MAT 141) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 220 | APPLIED LINEAR ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Systems of linear equations, matrices and matrix algebra, determinants, diagonalization and matrix factorization with MATLAB/Maple, with applications to linear programming and graph theory.

MAT 141 or MAT 148 or MAT 151 or MAT 155 or MAT 161 or MAT 171 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 242 | ELEMENTS OF STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Descriptive statistics, elements of probability, the binomial and normal probability models; large and small sample hypothesis testing, correlation and regression analysis. Use of computer packages. This course does not count toward mathematics major credit. Cross-listed with SOC 279.

(MAT 095 and MAT 100) or MAT 101 or placement are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 260 | MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Vectors, dot and cross products, parameterizations of lines and planes in space, functions of several independent variables, partial derivatives, tangent planes and linear approximations, the chain rule, directional derivatives and the gradient vector, extreme values, Lagrange multipliers, double integrals and their applications.

MAT 156 OR MAT 149 OR MAT 152 OR MAT 162 OR MAT 172 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 261 | MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Surface areas, triple integrals, vector functions and space curves, derivatives of vector functions, arc length and curvature, vector fields, line integrals, Green's Theorem, parametric surfaces, surface integrals, curl and divergence, Stokes's Theorem, the Divergence Theorem.

MAT 260 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 262 | LINEAR ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Systems of linear equations and matrices; vectors in n-space; vector spaces: linear combinations, linear independence, basis; linear transformations, change of basis, eigenvalues and eigenvectors.

MAT 260 or Instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 301 | HISTORY OF MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

History of mathematics with problem solving.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141, or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 302 | COMBINATORICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Methods of counting and enumeration of mathematical structures. Topics include generating functions, recurrence relations, inclusion relations, and graphical methods.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141, or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 303 | THEORY OF NUMBERS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of properties of integers: divisibility; Euclid's Algorithm; congruences and modular arithmetic; Euler's Theorem; Diophantine equations; distribution of primes; RSA cryptography.

A grade of C- or above in MAT 216 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 304 | DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Linear equations, systems with constant coefficients, series solutions, Laplace transforms, and applications. Formerly MAT 338.

MAT 260 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 305 | GRAPH THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course studies graph theory and its applications. Topics include trees, Eulerian circuits, Hamiltonian cycles, matchings, graph coloring problems, random graphs, and random walks on graphs. Appropriate background would be a course in introductory linear algebra.

MAT 141 OR MAT 215 OR MAT 220 OR MAT 262 (or instructor approval).

MAT 309 | TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theories, methods, and materials for teaching and learning mathematics in secondary schools. Cross-listed with SEC 309.

SE 364 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 310 | ABSTRACT ALGEBRA I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The first quarter of a 3-quarter sequence. Topics in the sequence include the integers; abstract groups, rings, and fields; polynomial rings; isomorphism theorems; extension fields; and an introduction to Galois theory.

MAT 262 and (a C-minus or better in MAT 216), or instructor permission, are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 311 | ABSTRACT ALGEBRA II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of topics from MAT 310: Groups, rings, fields, polynomial rings, isomorphism theorems, extension fields, and an introduction to Galois theory.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 310 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 312 | ABSTRACT ALGEBRA III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of topics from MAT 311: Groups, rings, fields, polynomial rings, isomorphism theorems, extension fields, and an introduction to Galois theory.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 311 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 320 | GEOMETRY I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Incidence and separation properties of planes; congruences; the parallel postulate; area theory; ruler and compass construction.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141, or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 321 | GEOMETRY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to solid geometry and noneuclidean geometry (hyperbolic and spherical models); other special topics.

A grade of C- or better in MAT 320 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 323 | DATA ANALYSIS AND STATISTICAL SOFTWARE I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Computing with a statistical package. Introduction to data analysis, elementary statistical inference, regression and correlation. This course does not count toward mathematics major credit.

MAT 130 or placement by test is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 324 | DATA ANALYSIS & STATISTICAL SOFTWARE II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Advanced features and applications of the statistical package used in MAT 323.

C- or better in MAT 323

MAT 326 | SAMPLE SURVEY METHODS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Simple random, stratified, systematic and cluster sampling. Multistage and area sampling. Random-response and capture-release models.

MAT 349 or MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 328 | DESIGN OF EXPERIMENTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Linear models and quadratic forms. Single, two and several-factor experiments, incomplete designs, confounding and fractional factorial experiments. Response surfaces and partially balanced incomplete block designs.

MAT 349 or MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 330 | METHODS OF COMPUTATION AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Computational and theoretical methods in ordinary differential equations, complex numbers, systems of equations, phase plane analysis, and bifurcations. Applications to damped, driven oscillators, and to electronics.

MAT 331 | METHODS OF COMPUTATION AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Computational and theoretical methods in ordinary differential equations, complex numbers, systems of equations, phase plane analysis, and bifurcations. Applications to damped, driven oscillators, and to electronics.

MAT 261 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 335 | REAL ANALYSIS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Real number system, completeness, supremum, and infimum, sequences and their limits, \liminf , \limsup , limits of functions, continuity.

(MAT 149 or MAT 152 or MAT 156 or MAT 162) and (a grade of C-minus or better in MAT 216) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 336 | REAL ANALYSIS II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Properties of continuous functions, uniform continuity, sequences of functions, differentiation, integration. To follow 335 in the Winter Quarter.

A grade of C- or better in MAT 335 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 337 | COMPLEX ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Complex functions; complex differentiation and integration; series and sequences of complex functions.

MAT 215, MAT 261 and MAT 335 (or instructor permission) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 340 | TOPOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to point-set topology: metric spaces, topological spaces, continuity, connectedness, and compactness.

Grade of C- or above in MAT 335 or instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 341 | STATISTICAL METHODS USING SAS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The SAS programming language. Data exploration, description and presentation, with emphasis on writing statistical reports. Inference based on continuous and categorical data. Analysis of variance models and regression procedures including logistic regression. Cross-listed with MAT 448.

Successful completion of the programming course required as part of the Math Core Curriculum or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 342 | ELEMENTS OF STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Multiple regression, correlation, analysis of variance, time series, and sampling. Course content and emphases will vary with students' needs and backgrounds.

MAT 137 (or MAT 323 or MAT 348) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 343 | BUSINESS STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Multiple regression, correlation, analysis of variance, time series and sampling. Statistical theory applied to business. Use of statistical computing packages. Course content will vary with the needs and desires of individual students. (FORMERLY BMS 342)

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 137 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 348 | APPLIED STATISTICAL METHODS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to statistical software (which will be used throughout the course). Descriptive statistics; elementary probability theory; discrete and continuous probability models; principles of statistical inference; Simple linear regression and correlation analysis.

MAT 130 or equivalent is the prerequisite for this class.

MAT 349 | APPLIED PROBABILITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Probability theory, probability distributions, mathematical expectation, functions of random variables, sampling distributions, estimation, tests of hypotheses, simulation. Focus on applications.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 341 or MAT 348 or CSC 324 or DSC 323 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 350 | BAYESIAN STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Comparison of Bayesian and frequentist methods, conditional probability, Bayes theorem, conjugate distributions, computational methods, hands-on Bayesian data analysis using appropriate software, interpretation and presentation of analysis results. Students will learn to use software packages including OpenBUGS. The free software program R will be utilized for data analysis.

MAT 349 (or MAT 351) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 351 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Probability spaces, combinatorial probability methods, discrete and continuous random variables and distributions, moment generating functions, development and applications of the classical discrete and continuous distributions.

MAT 260 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 352 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Joint probability distributions and correlation; law of large numbers and the central limit theorem; sampling distributions and theory of estimation.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 351 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 353 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Principles of hypothesis testing; most powerful tests and likelihood ratio tests; linear regression; one-way analysis of variance; categorical data analysis, nonparametric statistics.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 352 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 354 | MULTIVARIATE STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The multivariate normal distribution. Hypothesis tests on means and variances including the multivariate linear model. Classification using the linear discriminant function. Principal components and factor analysis. PREREQUISITE(S): MAT 353 and 262, or consent of instructor. (CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 454)

MAT 262 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 355 | STOCHASTIC PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Discrete Markov chains and random walks, birth and death processes, Poisson processes, queuing systems, and renewal processes. Cross-listed with MAT 455.

MAT 353 and (MAT 220 or MAT 262), or instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 356 | APPLIED REGRESSION ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Simple linear, multiple, polynomial and general regression models. Selection of best regression equation and examination of residuals for homoscedasticity and other diagnostics. Use of statistical software. Cross-listed with MAT 456.

MAT 262 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 357 | NONPARAMETRIC STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Inference concerning location and scale parameters, goodness of fit tests, association analysis and tests of randomness using distribution free procedures. Bootstrap techniques. Smoothing methodologies. Cross-listed with MAT 457.

PREREQUISITE: MAT 349 or 353

MAT 358 | APPLIED TIME SERIES AND FORECASTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Development of the Box-Jenkins methodology for the identification, estimation, and fitting of ARIMA, and transfer-function stochastic models for the purpose of analyzing and forecasting stationary, non-stationary, and seasonal time series data. The course emphasizes practical time-series data analysis using computer packages and includes applications to economic, business, and industrial forecasting. Cross-listed with MAT 512.

(MAT 341 and MAT 353) or (MAT 356) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 359 | SIMULATION MODELS AND MONTE CARLO METHOD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Techniques of computer simulation of the classical univariate and multivariate probability distribution models, and such random processes as random walk, Markov chains, and queues. Cross-listed with MAT 459.

MAT 341 and MAT 353 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 360 | GENERALIZED LINEAR MODELS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Applications of generalized linear models. Topics include generalized linear models for non-normal continuous response, models for binary and multinomial response data, models for count data, and analysis of variance and covariance. The class of generalized linear models contains the models most commonly used in statistical practice.

(CSC 324 or DSC 323 or MAT 341) and (MAT 349 or MAT 351) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 361 | THEORY OF INTEREST | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theory and applications of compound interest to annuities, amortization schedules, sinking funds, bonds, and yield rates.

MAT 149 (or MAT 152 or MAT 156 or MAT 162) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 362 | LIFE CONTINGENCIES I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic Contingencies: The theory and applications of contingency mathematics in life and health insurance, annuities, and pensions from both a probabilistic and a deterministic viewpoint. Topics include survival distribution and life tables, life insurance, and life annuities.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 361 or instructor permission is a prerequisite and MAT 352 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 363 | LIFE CONTINGENCIES II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced Contingencies: A continuation of Mathematics 362. Topics include net premiums, net premiums reserves, multiple life functions, multiple decrement models, and valuation theory for pension plans.

A grade of C- or above in MAT 352 and MAT 362 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 364 | LOSS MODELS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Severity and frequency models, aggregate models, coverage modifications, risk measures, construction and selection of parametric models. Cross-listed with MAT 464.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 365 | LOSS MODELS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Bayesian credibility, Buhlmann credibility, insurance and reinsurance coverages, pricing and reserving. Cross-listed with MAT 465.

MAT 364 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 366 | MATHEMATICAL DEMOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to demography; mortality table construction and methods of population and demographic analysis.

MAT 353 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 367 | CREDIBILITY THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Credibility theory and loss distributions with applications to casualty insurance classification and finance. Cross-Listed as MAT 467.

MAT 352 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 368 | MATHEMATICS FOR FINANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course covers the mathematics of financial derivatives, investment strategies, arbitrage, put-call parity, binomial models for European options and interest rates, Black-Scholes formula, hedging, lognormal models for asset prices, exotic options, valuation using Monte-Carlo, and embedded options in annuity products.

MAT 260 and (MAT 220 or MAT 262) and (MAT 349 or MAT 353) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 369 | ACTUARIAL SCIENCE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a problem solving seminar that covers relevant topics in probability and statistics in the first actuarial exam: Exam P/1. The course also discusses exam preparation strategies.

MAT 370 | ADVANCED LINEAR ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Vector spaces, basis and dimension; matrix representation of linear transformations and change of basis; diagonalization of linear operators; inner product spaces; diagonalization of symmetric linear operators, principal-axis theorem, and applications. Cross-listed MAT 470.

MAT 262 and (a grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141) or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 372 | LOGIC AND SET THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics in axiomatic set theory, formal logic, and computability theory. A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 215 or MAT 141, or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 381 | FOURIER ANALYSIS AND SPECIAL FUNCTIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course covers the basic principles of discrete and continuous Fourier analysis and some of its applications currently used in scientific modeling. Students will use the computer to implement the computational algorithms developed in the course. Some of the topics covered will include Fourier transforms and their application to signal and image processing, discrete Fourier series, the fast Fourier transform algorithm and applications to digital filtering, and the Radon transforms and its applications to tomography.

MAT 262 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 384 | MATHEMATICAL MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Modeling of real world problems using mathematical methods. Includes a theory of modeling and a study of specific models, selected from deterministic, stochastic, continuous, and discrete models. Cross-listed with MAT 484.

MAT 262 (or MAT 220) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 385 | NUMERICAL ANALYSIS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Use of a digital computer for numerical computation. Error analysis, Gaussian elimination and Gauss-Seidel method, solution of non-linear equations, function evaluation, cubic splines, approximation of integrals and derivatives, Monte Carlo methods. Cross-listed with MAT 485.

MAT 262 and a programming course required as part of the Math Core Curriculum or consent of the instructor are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 386 | NUMERICAL ANALYSIS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theory and algorithms for efficient computation, including the Fast Fourier transform, numerical solution of non-linear systems of equations. Minimization of functions of several variables. Sparse systems of equations and corresponding eigenvalue problems. (CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 486 & CSC 386/486)

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 385 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 387 | OPERATIONS RESEARCH: LINEAR PROGRAMMING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Linear programming, integer programming and LP relaxation, the duality theorem, simplex algorithm, interior point methods, applications to industrial engineering. Students should take an introductory computer programming course before taking this course. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 487)

MAT 260 and MAT 262 are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 388 | OPERATIONS RESEARCH: OPTIMIZATION THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Convex optimization, quadratic optimization problems, Lagrange multipliers and generalization to inequality constraints, alternating direction method of multipliers (ADMM), unconstrained minimization, applications to industrial engineering including machine learning. Students should take an introductory computer programming course before taking this course. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 488)

MAT 260 and MAT 262 are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 389 | TOPICS IN OPERATIONS RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced topics in operations research and optimization theory.

A grade of C-minus or better in MAT 388 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 390 | MATHEMATICS READING AND RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course provides students with a hands-on experience about research in mathematical sciences. Students attend seminars and research colloquia, and actively participate at discussions about the topics presented. Students reflect on the connections between various areas of modern mathematics, the challenges of structuring and solving problems, and the personal experience of doing mathematics. As a final project, each student prepares and presents a mathematical expository paper describing a current area of research, emphasizing its relevance to mathematics in general and its connections to real world problems. This course may be used to satisfy the junior-year experiential learning (JYEL) requirement.

MAT 391 | STUDIES IN DEMOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course introduces students to the study by statistical methods of human populations in terms of type of data sources, population composition, growth, fertility, mortality, morbidity, health, migration, and urbanization. In addition, the course has a major component that emphasizes the study of current characteristics of the populations of developing countries in comparison with some developed countries including the United States of America. Students are required to present and submit a research project with comparative analysis of demographic statistics obtained on several developing and developed countries.

MAT 395 | TOPICS IN MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change. Variable credit allowed.

MAT 396 | SENIOR THESIS RESEARCH | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A thesis option is available to mathematics majors who wish to pursue an extended independent project related to a theoretical or applied focus of the program. Students would work under the guidance of a faculty mentor. A total of 4 credits must be completed over the one or two quarters prior to the thesis submission. Interested students are strongly encouraged to enroll in MAT 390 during their junior year. (2 quarter hours)

MAT 397 | MATHEMATICAL PEDAGOGY: THEORY & PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to current theories and practices in college mathematics instruction; helps undergraduate mathematics majors develop a deeper understanding of fundamental mathematical concepts and an awareness of how people learn mathematical ideas, and prepares them to work as consultants in mathematics instruction. Mathematical tutoring practicum is required. Four credit hour course offered over a two quarter span during the autumn and winter quarters only. See instructor for further information. This course maybe used to satisfy the junior experiential learning requirement, but it does not count toward mathematics major or minor credit. Cross-listed with MAT 697.

MAT 398 | SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Topics vary from year to year. This course does not count toward the mathematical major or minor credit.

MAT 215 (or MAT 140 and 141) and MAT 262, or instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)
(variable credit)*MAT 400 | APPLIED ABSTRACT ALGEBRA I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applied Abstract Algebra I.

MAT 401 | APPLIED ABSTRACT ALGEBRA II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applied Abstract Algebra II.

MAT 400 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 421 | BASIC BIOSTATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course includes both data analysis and experimental design, up to and including survival analysis such as used in the analysis of clinical trials. The course will be supplemented by standard topics with application areas relevant to drug development, including pharmacokinetics, clinical trials, bioequivalence, and pharmacoepidemiology.

MAT 453 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 424 | ADVANCED BIOSTATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The overall objective is the development of statistical literacy and skills in the analysis of biological and medical data including: generalized linear models, analysis of repeated measures, log-linear models, clinical trials and computer applications.

MAT 421 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 425 | SURVIVAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Basic quantities and models in survival analysis, types of censoring and truncation data, estimation for various survival models, nonparametric estimation of hazard and survival functions, comparing survival times between different groups, the proportional hazard and accelerated lifetime models for regression analysis with failure-time data and model checking methods. Appropriate background is one semester of applied statistics or equivalent.

MAT 426 | GENERALIZED LINEAR MODELS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applications of generalized linear models. Topics include generalized linear models for non-normal continuous response, models for binary and multinomial response data, models for count data, and analysis of variance and covariance. The class of generalized linear models contains the models most commonly used in statistical practice.

(DSC 324 or DSC 323 or MAT 448) and (MAT 349 or MAT 451) are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 427 | BAYESIAN STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Comparison of Bayesian and frequentist methods, conditional probability, Bayes theorem, conjugate distributions, computational methods, hands-on Bayesian data analysis using appropriate software, interpretation and presentation of analysis results. Students will learn to use software packages including OpenBUGS. The free software program R will be utilized for data analysis.

MAT 349 or MAT 351 or MAT 451 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 434 | TOPOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to point-set topology: metric spaces, topological spaces, continuity, connectedness, and compactness.

Grade of C-minus or better in (MAT 335 or ECO 435 or MAT 680 or a transfer equivalent) or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 435 | MEASURE THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a course in Lebesgue integration; the study of measure spaces and measurable functions; the basic theorems of Lebesgue integration; Egoroff's theorem, the monotone limit theorem, the Lebesgue dominated convergence theorem; an introduction to L_p spaces, Holder's inequality, Minkowski's inequality; Fubini's theorem.

MAT 336 or MAT 434 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 436 | FUNCTIONAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the basic theory of functional analysis. Students will study normed, Banach, and Hilbert Spaces and the theory of bounded linear functionals and operators acting on them. The contraction mapping and the fixed point theorem are also studied with applications to sequence and function spaces.

MAT 434 and (MAT 370 or MAT 470) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 437 | COMPLEX ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Course topics: Complex functions; complex differentiation and integration; series and sequences of complex functions. Cross-listed with MAT 337.

(MAT 335 or MAT 434 or MAT 680) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 441 | APPLIED STATISTICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Parametric and non-parametric statistical inferential methods for the univariate and bivariate situations using SAS and R. Specific topics include classical and exploratory graphical & numerical methods of data descriptions; inference about means, medians, and associations including analysis of variance and linear regression. Data analytic projects are an integral part of the course.

MAT 442 | APPLIED STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of MAT 441. Repeated measures design, association, analysis of covariance, and multivariate relationships. Diagnostics and model building. Methods of categorical data analysis. Logistical regression and log-linear models. Data analytical projects using SAS and R are an integral part of the course.

MAT 441 or MAT 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 443 | APPLIED STATISTICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of MAT 442. The course material generalizes univariate methods of inference to multivariate situations using SAS and R. Specific topics include canonical correlation, discriminate analysis, principal component analysis, factor analysis, and multivariate analysis of variance. Emphasis in the course is on data analytic projects.

MAT 442 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 448 | STATISTICAL METHODS USING SAS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The SAS programming language. Data exploration, description and presentation. Inference methods for continuous and categorical data. Analysis of variance models and regression procedures.

MAT 449 | STATISTICAL DATA MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students learn data organization and structures, design of statistical databases, statistical software analysis, basic structure of relational databases, SAS Macros, Python and R functions, complex SQL statements, and advanced data manipulation techniques.

MAT 441 (or MAT 448) is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 450 | ADVANCED STATISTICAL COMPUTING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced statistical computing methods used in modern scientific investigation. Topics include data management, random number generation, resampling methods, numerical optimization, Markov Chain Monte Carlo, smoothing methods, data mining: clustering and classification.

MAT 441 and MAT 451 are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 451 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course covers elements of probability theory, distributions of random variables and linear functions of random variables, moment generating functions, and discrete and continuous probability models. Appropriate background would be a course in multivariable calculus.

MAT 452 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of MAT 451. More continuous probability model. Laws of large numbers and the central limit theorem. Sampling distributions of certain statistics. An introduction to the theory of estimation and principals of hypothesis testing.

MAT 451 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 453 | PROBABILITY AND STATISTICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of MAT 452. More on hypothesis testing, most powerful, uniformly most powerful, and likelihood ratio tests. Introduction to the analysis of variance; linear regression; categorical data analysis, and nonparametric methods of inference.

MAT 452 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 454 | MULTIVARIATE STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The multivariate normal distribution. The general linear model. Multivariate regression and analysis of variance; discriminant analysis; principal component and factor analysis; applications and use of statistical software. Cross-listed with MAT 354.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 455 | STOCHASTIC PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Discrete Markov chains and random walks, birth and death processes, Poisson process, queuing systems, and renewal processes. Cross-listed as MAT 355.

MAT 452 is a prerequisite or a co-requisite for this class.

MAT 456 | APPLIED REGRESSION ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Simple linear, multiple, polynomial and general linear regression models. Model diagnostics; Model selection and Validation. Cross-listed with MAT 356.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 457 | NONPARAMETRIC STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Inference concerning location and scale parameters, goodness of fit tests, association analysis and tests of randomness using distribution free procedures. Bootstrap techniques. Smoothing methodologies. Cross-listed with MAT 357.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 458 | STATISTICAL QUALITY CONTROL | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

History; Deming guide to quality; graphical techniques of process control; Schewhart's control charts for means, ranges, standard deviations, individual measurements, and attributes; process capabilities and statistical tolerance; cumulative-sum charts. product liability; acceptance sampling; product and process design; applications and case studies.

MAT 459 | SIMULATION MODELS AND MONTE CARLO METHOD | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Techniques of computer simulation of the classical univariate and multivariate probability models, and such random processes as random walks, Markov chains, and queues. Cross-listed with MAT 359.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite or a co-requisite for this class.

MAT 460 | TOPICS IN STATISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

One of the following topics: Clinical trials; Reliability and life testing; Categorical data analysis; Bootstrapping; Data Mining; Response Surface Methodology; Meta analysis; Survival Models.

MAT 453 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 461 | ACTUARIAL SCIENCE I: THEORY OF INTEREST | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Theory of Interest: Theory and application of compound interest to annuities, amortization schedules, sinking funds, bonds, and yield rates. Cross-listed as MAT 361.

MAT 462 | ACTUARIAL SCIENCE II: BASIC CONTINGENCIES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Basic Contingencies: The theory and applications of contingency mathematics in life and health insurance annuities and pensions, from both a probabilistic and a deterministic viewpoint. Topics include survival distribution and life tables, life insurance and life annuities. Cross-listed as MAT 362.

MAT 461 is a prerequisite for this class and MAT 452 is a corequisite for this class.

MAT 463 | ACTUARIAL SCIENCE III: ADVANCED CONTINGENCIES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Advanced Contingencies: A continuation of MAT 462. Topics include net premiums, net premium reserves, multiple life functions, multiple decrement models, and valuation theory for pension plans. Cross-listed with MAT 363.

MAT 462 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 464 | LOSS MODELS I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Severity and frequency models, aggregate models, coverage modifications, risk measures, construction and selection of parametric models. Cross-listed with MAT 364.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 465 | LOSS MODELS II | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Bayesian credibility, Buhlmann credibility, insurance and reinsurance coverages, pricing and reserving. Cross-listed with MAT 365.

MAT 464 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 466 | MATHEMATICAL DEMOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Introduction to demography, mortality table construction and methods of population and demographic analysis.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 467 | CREDIBILITY THEORY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Credibility theory and loss distributions with applications to casualty insurance classification and ratemaking.

MAT 462 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 468 | MATHEMATICS FOR FINANCE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course covers the mathematics of financial derivatives, investment strategies, arbitrage, put-call parity, binomial models for European options and interest rates, Black-Scholes formula, hedging, lognormal models for asset prices, exotic options, valuation using Monte-Carlo, and embedded options in annuity products. Cross-listed with MAT 368. MAT 451 is a co-requisite for this course.

MAT 451 is a co-requisite for this course.

MAT 469 | STOCHASTIC CALCULUS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course introduces students to the mathematical tools and techniques used in modern Financial Theory. Topics include Brownian motion and Ito's lemma, stochastic integrals, stochastic differential equations, jump processes, applications to option pricing and interest rate models.

MAT 455 and MAT 468 are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 470 | ADVANCED LINEAR ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Vector spaces and subspaces, basis and dimension; matrix representation of linear transformations and change of basis; null spaces and ranges; dual spaces; eigenvalues, eigenvectors, and diagonalization; Cayley-Hamilton Theorem; inner product spaces and Gram-Schmidt orthogonalization; Jordan canonical form and applications. Cross-listed with MAT 370.

(Grade of C-minus or better in MAT 262 or MAT 672) and (Grade of C-minus or better in MAT 141 or MAT 215 or MAT 660) or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 471 | GROUP THEORY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Course topics: Classes of groups; actions of groups on sets; Sylow theorems; decomposition of groups; structure of finite abelian groups.

.Grade of C-minus or better in MAT 310 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this class

MAT 472 | FIELDS AND GALOIS THEORY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Course topics: Commutative rings and fields; irreducible polynomials and field extensions, adjunction of roots, algebraic extensions, splitting and normal fields, cyclic extensions, the Galois group, and the Fundamental theorem of Galois theory. Cross-listed with MAT 312.

(MAT 311 or MAT 473) and MAT 471 are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 473 | RINGS AND MODULES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Course topics: Rings and Algebras; classes of unique factorization domains; modules and principal isomorphism theorems, classes of modules, decomposition of finitely generated modules; Jordan and rational canonical form of a matrix.

MAT 311 or MAT 471

MAT 481 | FOURIER ANALYSIS AND SPECIAL FUNCTIONS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course covers the basic principles of discrete and continuous Fourier analysis and its applications. Some of the topics covered are Fourier series, discrete Fourier transforms, fast Fourier transforms, and Fourier transforms. Appropriate background would be calculus and a course in introductory linear algebra.

MAT 482 | PARTIAL DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Introduction to partial differential equations and their applications. Topics include separation of variables; the heat, wave and Laplace equations; boundary-value problems; Fourier series. Some time will be spent on physical applications and non-homogeneous or time-dependent boundary conditions.

MAT 304 or MAT 335 or MAT 437 or MAT 644 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 484 | MATHEMATICAL MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Modeling of real world problems using mathematical methods. Includes a theory of modeling and a study of specific models, selected from deterministic, stochastic, continuous, and discrete models. Appropriate background would be a course in introductory linear algebra. (CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 384.)

MAT 485 | NUMERICAL ANALYSIS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Use of a digital computer for numerical computation. Error analysis, Gaussian elimination and Gauss-Seidel method, solutions of linear and nonlinear equations, function evaluation, cubic splines, approximation of integrals and derivatives, Monte Carlo methods. Appropriate background would be calculus, introductory linear algebra, and a programming course. (CROSS-LISTED WITH MAT 385.)

MAT 486 | NUMERICAL ANALYSIS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and algorithms for efficient computation including the Fast Fourier Transform. Numerical solution of nonlinear systems of equations. Minimization of functions of several variables. Sparse systems of equations and eigenvalue problems. Cross-listed with CSC 386/486, MAT 386.

MAT 485 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 487 | OPERATIONS RESEARCH: LINEAR PROGRAMMING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Linear programming, integer programming and LP relaxation, the duality theorem, simplex algorithm, interior point methods, applications to industrial engineering. Appropriate background would be introductory linear algebra and computer programming. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 387)

MAT 488 | OPERATIONS RESEARCH: OPTIMIZATION THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Convex optimization, quadratic optimization problems, Lagrange multipliers and generalization to inequality constraints, alternating direction method of multipliers (ADMM), unconstrained minimization, applications to industrial engineering including machine learning. Appropriate background would be introductory linear algebra and computer programming. (CROSS-LISTED AS MAT 388)

MAT 489 | QUEUING THEORY WITH APPLICATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Discrete and continuous-time Markov chain models, Queuing systems, and topics from renewal and reliability theory.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 491 | DATA MINING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide students with methodologies of mining varied data and discovering knowledge from data. Students will learn classification, regularized regression, smooth spline, neural network, decision tree, SVM, PCA and clustering. The lectures will be complemented with hands-on experience with data mining software R to allow students develop some practical skills.

MAT 452 and MAT 456 are prerequisites for this class.

MAT 494 | GRAPH THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course studies graph theory and its applications. Topics include trees, Eulerian circuits, Hamiltonian cycles, matchings, graph coloring problems, random graphs, and random walks on graphs. Appropriate background would be a course in introductory linear algebra.

MAT 495 | DYNAMIC PROGRAMMING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Optimization of sequential decision processes. Markov decision models. Contraction mapping methods. Applications drawn from inventory theory and production control.

MAT 496 | GAME THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The minimax theorem for two-person, zero-sum games. Two-person general-sum games and noncooperative person games; Nash equilibrium.

MAT 498 | PROBLEM SOLVING IN MATHEMATICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Course topics: problem solving in various topics from GRE Subject examination in Mathematics. Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change. (2 quarter hours)

MAT 512 | APPLIED TIME SERIES AND FORECASTING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Development of the Box-Jenkins methodology for the identification, estimation and fitting of ARIMA, and transfer-function stochastic models for the purpose of analyzing and forecasting stationary, non-stationary, and seasonal time series data. The course emphasizes practical time series data analysis, using computer packages and includes applications to economic, business and industrial forecasting.

MAT 441 or MAT 448 or MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 515 | FINANCIAL MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course expounds on probabilistic methods used in risk-based capital allocation and risk management. Topics include Gaussian and Non-Gaussian modeling, including modeling of volatility and correlations, copulas, Extreme Value Theory, VaR, TVaR and applications to portfolio allocation and stress testing.

MAT 456 and MAT 512 are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 526 | SAMPLING THEORY AND METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Simple random, stratified, systematic and cluster sampling. Multistage and area sampling. Random-response and capture-release models. Cross-listed as MAT 326.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 528 | DESIGN AND ANALYSIS OF EXPERIMENTS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Single-factor fixed, random and mixed designs with and without restrictions on randomizations, including randomized block designs, Latin & Graeco-Latin squares. Factorial and fractional factorial experiments. Nested and split-plot designs. Confounding and response surface methodology.

MAT 453 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 595 | GRADUATE THESIS RESEARCH | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A thesis option is available to graduate students who wish to pursue an extended independent project. Students would work under the guidance of a faculty mentor. Course may be repeated for credit. (2 quarter hours)

MAT 596 | ADVANCED TOPICS IN ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 597 | ADVANCED TOPICS IN ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change.

MAT 598 | ADVANCED PROBLEM SOLVING IN ALGEBRA AND ANALYSIS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Course topics: problem solving in various topics in Algebra and Analysis. Consult course schedule for current offerings. Course may be repeated for credit when title and content change. (2 quarter hours)

MAT 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Offered by arrangement. Approval by department chair required. (variable credit)

MAT 600 | EXPERIMENTATION, CONJECTURE, AND REASONING WITH NUMBERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on furthering the participants' number sense together with providing them with opportunities to: 1) Use and discuss the roles of experimentation, conjecture, and logical reasoning in developing mathematical understanding; 2) Appreciate the value of algebraic notation in problem solving by comparing solutions done both with and without algebra; 3) Engage in mathematical speaking and writing with discussion of (a) how to evaluate accurate vs. inaccurate statements, (b) what level of detail is appropriate in an answer given the point of the problem, (c) what ways of presenting solutions are suitable for various audiences; 4) Discuss the distinction between "how" a mathematical strategy works and "why" it works, and articulate the pedagogical value of knowing the "why."

MAT 605 | GEOMETRY FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to geometry designed to engage students in the construction, description, and analysis of geometric objects, including three-dimensional objects. These activities will be used to generate questions and hypotheses that will lead to more abstract concepts and general arguments. Emphasis throughout will be on informal reasoning, experimental methods, inductive as well as deductive arguments, local organization, and the development of mathematical thinking. Appropriate technology will be used to explore hypotheses and support mathematical reasoning. Topics will include: polyhedra, and their nets, cross sections, and projections; triangles, quadrilaterals, and polygons; congruence and similarity; the Pythagorean theorem; perimeter, area, and volume; circles and spheres, symmetry and transformations; and tessellations. The course will also include discussion and reflection on learning mathematics.

MAT 608 | INVESTIGATING HIGH SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Drawing on high school mathematics content, students will identify and explore the mathematical themes that might form the content of a 12th grade capstone course. In the process, they will reflect on and discuss the major issues encountered when learning the mathematical concepts that form the basis of high school mathematics, identify ways to collaborate in order to improve mathematics learning, and identify ways in which they can take leadership roles in mathematics teaching and learning.

MAT 609 | TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theories, methods, materials and techniques for teaching and learning mathematics in secondary and upper elementary schools. This course is required for students seeking secondary math certification.

MAT 610 | CALCULUS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A review of topics from precalculus using algebraic, numerical, and graphical perspectives including linear functions, exponential functions, logarithms, polynomials, and trigonometric functions. An introduction to limits, continuity, the derivative, and basic properties of real numbers.

MAT 611 | CALCULUS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of Math 610. The derivative and its applications, including optimization and related rates. Introduction to integration and numerical algorithms using graphing calculators. Offered every Winter.

MAT 610 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 612 | CALCULUS III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A continuation of Math 611. Techniques of symbolic and numerical integration with geometric applications. Sequences, series, and power series. Offered every Spring.

MAT 611 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 618 | TOPICS IN CALCULUS AND DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Taylor series and Taylor's theorem, parametric equations, separable differential equations, slope fields, Euler's method. Offered every Summer.

MAT 612 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 620 | GEOMETRY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Axiom systems, types of reasoning used in proofs, Euclidean geometry results with concentration on triangles and circles, introduction to non-Euclidean geometry, and introduction to geometry classroom software. Offered every other winter.

MAT 660 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 621 | TRANSITION TO ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, teachers will begin the study of algebra as a generalization of number and operation, building on their new understanding of those topics from previous courses. Careful attention to reasoning about the use of variables and understanding the logic behind solving equations and inequalities will aid in the transition to a full treatment of high school algebra. Teachers will be introduced to high quality resources that will help them create effective algebraic learning environments for their students.

MAT 600, MMT 401 and MAT 605 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 622 | ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first of a 3-quarter sequence designed in part to prepare elementary and middle grade teachers to teach an algebra class to qualified 8th grade students in their schools. It is based on a vision of mathematics instruction throughout the grades that continuously builds students' algebraic skills and thinking. This first course in the sequence emphasizes problem-solving as an entry point into algebra for mathematics learners. Students see algebra as an active process for solving problems and as arising naturally as a way to generalize the laws of arithmetic, analyze patterns, and describe relationships in tables, graphs, and equations. In addition, students review and examine foundational concepts in algebra (variables, equations, relations, graphs, slopes of lines, and equations of lines) and are introduced to research on the development of algebraic thinking in middle grade students.

MAT 623 | ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The second course in the algebra sequence builds on the first and maintains emphases on problem-solving, deeper understanding of the central concepts of beginning algebra, and awareness of difficulties students have when encountering the subject for the first time. Topics include systems of linear equations, solving linear inequalities and systems of inequalities, absolute values equations and inequalities, and quadratic functions.

MAT 624 | FUNCTIONS AND MODELING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Advanced concepts in beginning algebra provide a basis for a deeper treatment of the relationship between functions and data, and lay the groundwork for the development of polynomial, exponential, and logarithmic models. The course will integrate the use of technology such as graphing calculators and spreadsheets.

MAT 631 | HISTORY OF MATHEMATICS THROUGH PROBLEM SOLVING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Topics include the development of calculus, probability theory, number theory, non-Euclidean geometry, and set theory. Offered every Winter.

MAT 620 and MAT 670 are co-requisites for this class.

MAT 632 | HISTORY AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is a cross-cultural survey of the history of mathematics, with emphasis placed on the development of concepts encountered by students in elementary and middle school. The course will also serve as a capstone for the program in that it will include references to content from all the earlier courses and will explicitly ask teachers to make connections across the middle school mathematics curriculum. The students will complete a small group research project in which they choose a mathematical concept from the program and use it as a focal point to study the development of mathematical ideas across time and across cultures.

MAT 640 | MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Functions of several variables, vectors, dot products and cross products, partial differentiation, directional derivatives, optimization, Lagrange multipliers, polar and spherical coordinates. Use of software packages to illustrate three dimensional objects. Offered Fall 2017 and every Summer as of 2018.

MAT 618 is a co-requisite for this class.

MAT 641 | MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS WITH LINEAR ALGEBRA FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Multiple integration, line and surface integrals, change of variable in multiple integration, Green's and Stokes' theorems. An introduction to matrices, determinants, linear transformations, and eigenvalues.

MAT 640 and MAT 671

MAT 642 | MULTIVARIABLE CALCULUS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Double and iterated integrals, area by double integrals, triple integrals, triple integrals in cylindrical and spherical coordinates, change of variable in multiple integration, line and surface integrals, theorems of Green, Stokes, and Gauss. Offered Winter 2018 and every Fall as of 2018.

MAT 640 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 643 | IDEAS OF CALCULUS IN THE MIDDLE SCHOOL CURRICULUM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course will introduce students to the "big ideas" of Calculus including limits, derivatives, and integrals. The course will emphasize how the mathematics in the middle school curriculum can lay a foundation for the study of continuous mathematics and to the role that Calculus plays in the sciences. In particular, direct connections to the topics of this course and the middle school curriculum will be made by studying activities from curriculum materials currently used in CPS that are relevant to the topics of Calculus. Trigonometry from the perspective of the middle school classroom will be used as the launching point for introducing the major ideas of the course. The course will also give the students the opportunity to understand the interplay between the concepts and tools they learned in the MMT 415-417 sequence and Calculus.

MAT 644 | DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will continue the study of differential equations (DEs) begun in MAT 618. Topics include solutions and applications of linear DEs, second order DEs with constant coefficients; linear systems: eigenvalues and eigenvectors of matrices, phase portraits and explicit solutions; nonlinear planar systems: linearization and stability analysis. Offered every other Spring as of 2018.

MAT 618 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 649 | DATA ANALYSIS AND PROBABILITY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course covers the fundamental concepts of probability that are part of the middle school curriculum and recent research findings on student learning of probability and classroom implications of this research. In addition, it covers the principles of graphically displaying, collecting and analyzing data with and without the use of technology. Topics will include measures of central tendency and dispersion, graphical representations of data (histograms, boxplots, bar charts, pie charts, and line graphs), and the design of experiments and simulations.

MAT 650 | PROBABILITY & STATISTICS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Combinatorics, sets, probability, random variables, distribution and density functions, multiple integration, standard probability laws, jointly distributed random variables. Use of graphing calculators, applets, and software packages to illustrate concepts. Offered every Winter.

MAT 640 and MAT 660 are prerequisites for this course.

MAT 651 | PROBABILITY & STATISTICS FOR MATHEMATICS TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Central limit theorem, point and interval estimation of parameters, hypothesis testing, least squares and regression. Offered every Spring.

MAT 650 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 660 | DISCRETE MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Logic and techniques of proof, mathematical induction, sets and functions, relations, introduction to number theory and combinatorics. Offered every Fall.

MAT 665 | DISCRETE STRUCTURES WITH A TRANSITION TO HIGHER MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

A transition to advanced courses having a greater emphasis on proof and abstraction. Techniques of proof, logic, sets and functions, number theory, recursive sequences, mathematical induction, and an introduction to combinatorics.

MAT 670 | ABSTRACT ALGEBRA I | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Examines the integers, prime numbers, the Euclidean algorithm, the uniqueness of prime factorization, equivalence relations, rational numbers, real numbers, and complex numbers. Provides examples of groups, rings, and fields and also covers the Fundamental Theorem of Algebra and roots of polynomials of small degree. Offered every other Winter as of 2018.

MAT 660 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 671 | ABSTRACT ALGEBRA II | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Examines modular arithmetic, the irreducibility of polynomials over different fields, criteria for solvability by radicals, rational values of trigonometric functions, difference functions, partial fraction decomposition, and geometric constructions with ruler and compass. Along with Math 670, this course provides the theoretical foundation for many topics covered in high school mathematics courses. Offered every other Spring as of 2018.

MAT 670 is a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 672 | LINEAR ALGEBRA | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Vector spaces, linear combinations, spanning sets, linear independence, basis, dimension, systems of linear equations, matrices, linear transformation, eigenvalues and eigenvectors.

MAT 660 is a prerequisite for this course.

MAT 680 | REAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Construction and properties of the real numbers. Proofs of essential results from calculus such as the intermediate value theorem, extreme value theorem, mean value theorem, existence of the Riemann integral, and Taylor's theorem. Offered every Fall.

MAT 618 and MAT 660 are a prerequisite for this class.

MAT 699 | TOPICS IN MATHEMATICS FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Diverse topics in mathematical modeling or mathematical appreciation germane to the secondary school classroom.

Mathematics for Middle School Teaching (MMT)

MMT 401 | FOUNDATIONS OF MATHEMATICAL THINKING AND LEARNING IN THE MIDDLE SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course is designed to help participants construct meaningful connections between being a learner of mathematics (i.e., a person who can solve problems, reason mathematically, communicate findings and thinking, and make connections) and being a teacher of mathematics (i.e., a person who can help others understand, use, and apply mathematical ideas). The course will begin the process (which will be continued throughout the remainder of the Master of Arts in Middle School mathematics Education program) of having students explore the interplay between narratives describing their own classroom experiences as well as literature and research about others' experiences in order to analyze the impact of developmental and interpersonal experiences on the learning and teaching of mathematics.

MMT 410 | THE DEVELOPMENT OF MIDDLE SCHOOL MATHEMATICS LEARNERS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Critical to the success of middle school mathematics learners, is their teachers' understanding of the multiple perspectives that research has taught us, as educators, about how people learn. In this course, participants will engage with the history and evolution of how the fields of educational psychology, cognitive science, applied developmental psychology, and mathematics education have contributed to a modern understanding of what constitutes effective practice for middle school mathematics teaching. Major theoretical positions and their seminal architects will be highlighted, examined and discussed. A particular emphasis will be put on each position's impact on curriculum development and classroom pedagogy for middle school mathematics.

MMT 420 | TEACHING, LEARNING, AND ASSESSMENT OF MIDDLE SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course will examine, in the context of classroom practice, the following themes: 1) How students can learn mathematics with conceptual understanding; 2) How to teach mathematics so that students learn with understanding; 3) How to assess students' mathematical knowledge to inform instruction and determine their growth; 4) The nature and content of innovative curriculum projects designed to teach mathematics for conceptual understanding.

MMT 430 | APPLIED PROJECT IN MATHEMATICS EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course will span the three quarters of the second academic year of the program and will be partnered with the three content-focused courses offered during the second year. Participants will be introduced to the field of educational inquiry through a study of various designs and methods of doing educational research. In addition, this course will help participants consider current issues in mathematics education in relationship to their own teaching and learning of mathematics and what it means to transfer the mathematics learned in other courses into one's practice as a math teacher. They will identify concrete changes they want to implement in their teaching during the years following their completion of the program based on the new content and ideas to which they have been exposed. As part of the course, the teachers will design an action research project during the first quarter, implement the project during the second quarter, and analyze the data during the third quarter.

Media Studies (MCS)

MCS 207 | HISTORY OF CINEMA I, 1890-1945 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the history of cinema as one of the most influential cultural forms of the 20th Century. We will study the aesthetic and technological developments of cinema during its first 50 years, as well as examine the social and economic factors shaping its history. Initially influenced by other art forms (theater, literature, painting) filmmaking quickly acquired its own formal system, language, and traditions. We will trace the changing styles, techniques, content, and methods of filmmaking as an art form, as popular culture, and as an industry. We will consider how cinema is bound to its social context via audience relations, economics, technology, and ideology. The limited scope of this course will cover primarily feature-length, narrative films as the dominant mode of filmmaking, although we will also look at the development of documentary and experimental filmmaking. The class will consist of lectures, screenings, and discussions.

MCS 208 | HISTORY OF CINEMA II, 1945-1975 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course covers the continued rise and development of cinema from 1945 to 1975. The course will have a dual focus, looking simultaneously at both the American studio system and international cinemas. The lectures, screenings, and discussions place equal emphasis on charting the development of cinematic techniques as well as examining the growth of specific national cinemas. In addition, the course surveys international stylistic trends in narrative, documentary, and avant-garde film. Students will acquire a broad understanding of the institutional, social, technological, and aesthetic forces that have shaped the development of cinema during the mid-twentieth century.

MCS 209 | HISTORY OF CINEMA III, 1975-PRESENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This final course in the film history sequence is designed to introduce students to a sense of modern film history and the multiple permutations of cinema around the globe. It presents film history from a global perspective, concentrating primarily on the development of new national and transnational cinemas. The course continues to chart the development of the American studios since the mid-1970s while examining the effects of media consolidation and convergence. Moreover, the course seeks to examine how global cinemas have reacted to and dealt with the formal influence and economic domination of Hollywood filmmaking on international audiences. Class lectures, screenings, and discussions will consider how cinema has changed from a primarily national phenomenon to a transnational form of communication in the 21st century.

MCS 231 | INTRODUCTION TO DOCUMENTARY STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the rise and growth of documentary forms, including audio, film, television, photography, literary journalism and ethnography. Students will study representative works from each documentary approach and learn to analyze the techniques of observation and representation at use in these pieces. Students will become familiar with major theoretical constructions of documentary and be able to use these analytical tools to critique documentary forms. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 242 | TELEVISION STYLE AND NARRATIVE STRUCTURE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

The art of television certainly has undergone many changes over the decades. Genres have come, gone, and resurfaced; in-vogue visual and narrative services have waxed and waned. Cable and streaming services have impacted how stories are told, sold, and viewed. Through the analysis of the style, structure, and storytelling strategies of television, students apply the concepts and terminology essential to an understanding and appreciation of television as an art form and an element of mass culture.

MCS 251 | SPACES OF CINEMA IN ROME | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the history and heritage of Italian cinema through an analysis of critically acclaimed films produced in Rome. Topics of focus include the comparison of Italian and Hollywood constructions of historical settings, and the cinematic organization of visual space. The course features visits to the Roman sites where films examined in the course were produced. The course's goal is the development of an understanding of filmmakers' artistic choices and the expectations that they set up for their audiences through setting. Offered in conjunction with the Rome Film Studies Program.

MCS 252 | CONTEMPORARY ITALIAN CULTURE THROUGH FILM | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course provides an exploration of contemporary Italian culture through the medium of cinema. The course examines how cinema addresses complex social and political concerns in Italy. Topics and themes include health care; the transformation of the structure of the family; immigration and emigration; the perennial problem of organized crime; and the difficulties faced by the younger generations in their attempt to integrate into society. Italian film industry professionals and cultural historians will provide context and perspective on contemporary social issues facing Italy. Offered in conjunction with the Rome Film Studies Program.

MCS 254 | IMAGINING ITALY: CINEMA AS A COLLECTIVE NARRATIVE OF THE ITALIAN PEOPLE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course is designed as an introduction to Modern Italian Society and Culture through Cinema, with a specific focus on how movies both represented and influenced fundamental facets of Italian mentality, culture, and social structures. More specifically we will focus on some crucial events and phenomena in Italian History and in current days, including the following: Fascism and Anti-Fascism; the postwar period, the Reconstruction, and the Republican Constitution; the economic boom and the Italian socio-cultural transformation in the 1960s; the North-South Divide in Italy; emigration and immigration; worker and student protests between 1968 and 1977; the origins and developments of organized crime in Italy including the Mafia.

MCS 257 | MEXICAN CINEMA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Mexican cinema has historically been one of the most important in the Spanish-speaking world. While Hollywood created the musical, Mexican audiences were watching comedias rancheras. This course is a historical and critical survey of Mexican cinema, from the internationally acclaimed films of the Golden Age, to the global success of filmmakers like Guillermo del Toro and Alejandro G. Inarritu. We will study the industrial and aesthetic connections between Hollywood and the Mexican film industry, as much as how this national cinema has fared within the Latin American region.

MCS 260 | TRANSMEDIA STORYTELLING: BUILDING A NARRATIVE WORLD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Transmedia storytelling, or the distribution of narrative content across multiple technologies and media, is rapidly becoming a common trend in contemporary media making. Whether it's television series sharing content with video games, films' narratives continued (or begun) in graphic novels, or media systems in which no one medium takes precedence in telling the story, transmediation can take many forms. This class will introduce the concept of transmedia from a media studies viewpoint, will examine transmedia's history, contemporary usage, and creation, and will have students work together to construct a transmediated narrative.

MCS 265 | FAITH, REDEMPTION, & TRANSCENDENCE IN INTERNATIONAL CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Which methods has cinema developed to convey the spiritual phenomena of faith, redemption and transcendence? The course investigates this question through the comparative study of international cinema. While it focuses primarily upon Christianity, it also provides students with the tools to make meaningful connections with other religions and the cinematic traditions that inform them. Among the films and filmmakers to be examined are Paul Schrader FIRST REFORMED (Paul Schrader, USA, 2018), SILENCE (Martin Scorsese, USA, 2017), WINTER LIGHT (Ingmar Bergman, Sweden, 1961), DIARY OF A COUNTRY PRIEST (Robert Bresson, France, 1951), EUROPA '51 (Roberto Rossellini, Italy, 1952), IDA (Pawel Pawlikowski, Poland, 2013), and THE PASSION OF JOAN OF ARC (Carl Theodor Dreyer, Denmark, 1929).

MCS 271 | MEDIA AND CULTURAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides students with a theoretical and methodological background in the interdisciplinary field of cultural studies, which considers media and culture as sites for the construction and contestation of race, class, gender, ethnicity, sexuality and nation. The course provides a foundation in critical cultural studies, ideology critique, critical race and gender studies, transnational media studies and active audience studies. Formerly Introduction to Radio, Television and Film.

MCS 273 | STORYTELLING & STYLE IN CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Course covers basic concepts and terminology of film and video as forms of art and mass culture. This course covers the aesthetic elements that constitute film and video texts: plot structures, sets, costumes and makeup, acting, lighting, cinematography, editing, and sound. By performing extensive textual analyses, students learn how the interaction of these elements produces meaning. Students also gain basics of how these concepts are practiced in film production. After mastering the aesthetic concepts, students also examine their use in three different modes of film: fiction, documentary, and the avant-garde. (Formerly Film/Video Analysis)

MCS 274 | DIVERSITY AND INCLUSION IN CINEMA AND TELEVISION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will analyze the representations of aspects of identity including race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, religion, social class, age, and ability in cinema and long-form television narrative. Rather than thinking of these aspects of identity as natural and fixed, this course will explore how identities are constructed and crafted through the cinema. In the context of theories of human identity and difference, students will view, read about, analyze and discuss movies and television series to understand the intersections and interactions of social and political identities and translate them into their media content production. The central question of the course is as follows: if one is dissatisfied by the current range of representational practices of identity offered by a dominant media industry, how can one challenge or disrupt the limitations of these practices through creative and responsible media production?

MCS 275 | COMICS STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Comics are a rich, vibrant medium whose history predates that of movies, television and radio. While many cultural critics have viewed comics as simplistic and childish over the years, the combination of text and images that comics offers literary and artistic possibilities not found in any other medium. This course examines the medium of comics by exploring its history and theory, along with issues of representation, form, aesthetics, genre, biography and autobiography. Along the way, we will engage with such themes as heroism, trauma, identity and youth, among others. Students will read scholarly work on the medium of comics, as well as a wide range of comic books, comic strips, graphic novels and webcomics.

MCS 280 | BAH HUMBAG! CHRISTMAS MOVIES/TV AND MEDIA METHODS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will use Christmas movies and television programs as a way to teach introductory methods in the field of media studies. Films and shows about Christmas are typically re-watched many times over a person's lifetime, and even become an annual tradition in some cases. Films like It's a Wonderful Life and programs like A Charlie Brown Christmas are commonly among the most re-watched media texts for most people. We watch them more often over the course of a lifetime than most other movies and shows. In turn, it would seem natural that we should critically analyze these media texts that we regularly return to in the same ways that we seek to find the cultural, aesthetic and/or political meanings inherent in popular Hollywood blockbusters and prime-time television series. But should Christmas media texts only be consumed emotionally rather than intellectually? Does studying these beloved films and shows somehow rob them of their joy, or does this process have just as many intellectual rewards as when we analyze more traditional media texts? These are some of the questions that we will seek to answer through applying various methodological approaches from the field of media studies to a wide range of Christmas shows and movies.

MCS 286 | RADIO PRACTICUM | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students who already actively participate at DePaul's radio station have the opportunity, depending on the station's needs, to produce on-air announcements, specialized broadcasts (weather, sports, University-based topics), newscasts, and assist station managers with their day-to-day responsibilities for MCS credit. In addition to working at the radio station, students must successfully complete a short research project on an approved topic. (1 quarter hour)

MCS 290 | MEDIA & CINEMA STUDIES WORKSHOP (VARIABLE TOPICS) | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course allows students to sample a range of hands on, practical offerings in media and cinema studies that can enhance their knowledge and expertise. Two types of workshop classes are offered: research and production. Examples of Research Workshop topics can include film criticism, Survey Design, and Academic Writing Bootcamp. Examples of Production Workshop topics include non-linear editing with Final Cut Pro, Multimedia Design, and Video Camera Basics. Students may take a maximum of 4 credit hours of MCS 290 in the major, and a total of 8 credit hours. (2 quarter hours)

MCS 316 | SOUND AND VISION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the unique ways that photography and audio documentary can blend together. The course will combine documentary and experimental production to help students learn to create audio documentary and visual projects and to work in mixed-media contexts.

MCS 331 | TOPICS IN DOCUMENTARY STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A rotating topics course that could focus on specific historical era or specific group of texts or documentarians from across film, television, audio, writing, and photography. Courses like Feminism & Documentary, and Political Documentary fit under this heading. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 339 | RADIO BROADCASTING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The overall objectives of this course are to familiarize students with the history and practices of commercial and college radio broadcasting and to afford students hands-on broadcasting opportunities at our state-of-the-art radio station. Numerous topics and challenges facing modern radio stations will be discussed, including deregulation, copyright law, and decency standards. It is expected that upon successful completion of this course that students will be prepared for advanced broadcasting and production courses and radio and television internships.

MCS 341 | TOPICS IN RADIO STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Subjects rotate among several historical and conceptual topics, such as Rock Radio, Talk Radio, Gender and Radio, Radio and American Culture, etc. Students will have the opportunity to build upon the foundations of radio that are explored in other radio courses. Radio topics courses are considered advanced study in the subject area; therefore, students are encouraged to complete MCS 339 or MCS 342 prior to taking a radio topics course. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 342 | HISTORY OF TELEVISION & RADIO | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A history of radio, television, and cable that engages with elements such as programming, economics, industrial structures, audiences, government and industry policies, and social effects. The course includes viewing, analysis, and criticism of a wide variety of American programming.

MCS 343 | MEDIA ETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Entertainment and social media dominate popular culture today in a way that begins to completely define American culture. In what ways do entertainment media impact society? As creators of media, what special responsibilities do we have? And as creators of entertainment media how can we use these ethical theories in our daily practice? This course will examine the underlying ethical theories used when we try to arrive at ethical judgments about right and wrong. This course will concentrate on analyzing the impact of digital entertainment on an individual and society. The issue of balancing individual creativity vs. cultural impact, particularly on children, will be addressed. The course will culminate with the formulation of elements of an ethical code of conduct for every electronic (social) media, television professional and movie creator.

MCS 344 | THE SEXUAL REVOLUTION: HOLLYWOOD IN THE 1960s | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The late 1960s are often described as a time of "Sexual Revolution" in America, with loosening standards and attitudes about sex and sexual practices. But was this period as "liberated" as it has appeared to be? Who was liberated by these new attitudes, and from what? How do attitudes about sexuality in the 1960s compare to our attitudes now? This course uses the study of American cultural history to examine perspectives of sexuality in the 1960s, and it focuses upon the films that Hollywood produced to represent this "new" sexuality. In the process, the course examines shifting definitions of gender and sexuality with which American culture was contending during this revolutionary time.

MCS 348 | TOPICS IN FILM GENRE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course offers an historical examination of film genres, with a varying focus on one particular genre: film noir, musicals, melodrama, detective/gangster film, science fiction film, comedy, Western, animation, youth films. The course explores the relationship of genres to general social histories. Lab for film viewing required. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 349 | TOPICS IN FILM STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Examination of a particular era of film history or national cinema, film movements, or moments in social history and their relationship to film production. Topics currently in rotation include Film Sound Studies, American Films of the 1970s, War and Film, feminist film, Psychoanalysis and Cinema, etc. Lab for film viewing required. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 350 | TOPICS IN GLOBAL CINEMA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed as a critical study of global filmmakers and the issues surrounding cinema and its transnational circulation. The class will examine specific aspects of the growth and evolution of cinema and look at points of contact between different cultural discourses, national cinematic styles, genres, and reception. Artistic, social, political, and industrial issues will be examined to provide different models of cinematic creation and consumption. Recent topics have included Latin American Cinemas, Asian Cinemas, Transnational Cinema, New German Cinema, History of French Film, Contemporary Global Directors, etc. Lab for film viewing required.

MCS 351 | TOPICS IN TELEVISION STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers advanced study of television as a unique audio-visual culture with its own history and styles. This course presumes basic knowledge of television terms and methods of media analysis. Studies of a selected aspect of television history, television criticism, or national television are offered regularly. Recent topics have included Global Television, Reality TV, American TV of the 1950s, Television News, etc. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 352 | TOPICS IN NEW MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the effects of new and/or digital media on interpersonal communication, media industries, and/ or media culture. Depending on the specific focus of this variable elective course, it might focus on economic, social, political, or aesthetic implications of new media, including the Internet, interactive games, and other new media technologies and applications. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 353 | TOPICS IN MEDIA STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a rotating topics class for subjects that encompass a number of different media, including radio, television, film. Possible topics may include: Media and Politics, Contemporary News Media, Reception Studies, Popular Culture Studies, etc. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 354 | TOPICS IN MEDIA AND MATERIAL CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers a critical study of popular media's interface with cultural objects and environments. Depending upon the topic, the course might focus upon amusement parks, museum exhibitions, clothing and fashion culture, or wearable technologies. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 355 | SEX IN THE BOX: U.S. TELEVISION, SEX, AND SEXUALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the continued negotiation of sex and sexuality on American television. Whether through their structuring absence, head-on attendance, or mere subtle implication, sex and sexuality have been omnipresent within the medium since its proliferation in the late 1940s. Through lenses of TV, social history, and gender/sexuality criticism, this course will examine various ways in which sexual issues such as the marriage bed, female sexual agency, GLBT visibility, teen sex, and rape have made their ways onto and been pushed off of the small screen. It will also interrogate how these broad categories interact with TV's assumed social role, contemporary and historical notions of American values, and TV regulation.

MCS 358 | TOPICS IN COMICS STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a rotating topics class for subjects pertaining to the study of the comics in media including comic books, graphic novels, webcomics, and other forms of sequential art and graphic narrative. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 359 | TOPICS IN CULT STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers rotating topics focused on "cult" media and subcultural audiences, that is, aspects of culture that are separate from, or differentiate themselves from, the mainstream, or that present new ways of examining consumers and the emotional resonance of various media products on contemporary audiences. Topics will focus on such aspects as genre films and television, audience analysis, affect, and cult products. The purpose of this course is to understand how audiences and media producers design media texts to confront and challenge contemporary ideologies, to offer alternatives to the mainstream, and to engineer deliberate affective reactions in audiences. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 360 | B-MOVIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore the role of the B-movie in film history: from its origins in the 1930s, through its evolution in the 1950s and all the way up to the modern critical application of the 'B' label to a variety of different film genres, styles and budgets. Students will examine the place of the B's within the overall contexts of both mainstream Hollywood cinema and low-budget filmmaking in general. Specific focus will be placed on issues of economic mode of production and how this impacts a film's aesthetics, as well as theories of cultural distinction regarding the notion of 'film trash' such as camp theory and cultism. A variety of films will be screened in class. Please take into consideration when choosing this course that we will screen films that may at times contain highly lurid, violent and/or sexual imagery.

MCS 361 | FANDOM & PARTICIPATORY CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the world of media fandom. Fans are people who hold an emotional attachment to media texts. By investigating the types of media texts people connect to, as well as the work fans do in their community, students encounter new ways of participating with media. Students not only examine fans as cultural "producers," who make media just as much as they consume it, but also examine media from the point of view of a fan. This course also looks at how participating in fandom can aid the development of diversity and positive social change.

MCS 362 | BLACKNESS IN AMERICAN TV | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Throughout the history of US television African American performers have been part of America's small screen entertainment. From the earliest days of Amos and Andy to 1970s Black sitcoms such as Good Times and That's My Mama and the 80s runaway hit The Cosby Show to contemporary network hits, black lives, stories, and performances have helped to paint an often skewed picture of America. This class will explore the position of Blackness and African American performers, creators, and executives throughout the history of American television.

MCS 363 | TOPICS IN FAN STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers a rotating series of topics all focused on a particular type of fandom, fan object, or fan practice. Fans are viewers who hold an emotional attachment to what they experience; fans often act on that emotional attachment. This course explores different facets of the fan experience in detail. Studies of selected topics could include: specific media fandoms (Trekkers, Potterheads,GLEeks, etc.), sports fandom, celebrity culture, fans in social media, specific fan practices (social activism, material work, fan vidding), or the influence of fandom in the contemporary media environment, etc. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 364 | MONSTERS IN POPULAR CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students will examine monsters, spooks, scares, and—above all—fear. Through informed viewing of television, film, radio, literature, and graphic novels, we will explore the evolution of some of the most well-known monsters, including vampires, zombies, and aliens, as well as less-known varieties, like the Golem, the cyborg, and even the human being. Screenings will be paired with discussion and class activities. The concept of the monster itself will be interrogated, and we will explore how the monster reflects humanity's fears as well as its desires. This is the one class that proves college is scary as hell.

MCS 365 | HORROR FILMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Why do we willingly subject ourselves to films that seek to scare, shock and disgust us? What compels us to watch films with ghastly imagery, gory special effects and gruesome murders? Are horror film fans merely uncultured sadists who revel in watching others suffer on screen? Are there cathartic pleasures to be had in horror films that are actually beneficial to society? This course examines the horror film genre from a variety of perspectives - from the cultural implications of why certain images frighten us, to the technological factors involved in special effects advancements, to the moral panics arising from both 1930s monster movies and modern "torture-porn" cinema. We will trace the horror genre back to its roots in the silent film adaptations of such gothic novels as Frankenstein and Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde, through the classical era of the 1930s/1940s and the Universal monster movies, into the new era of the 1970s (from big-budget and Oscar winning films like The Exorcist and The Omen, to the low-budget auteurist horror efforts like The Texas Chainsaw Massacre and Last House on the Left), and into the modern era of slashers, stalkers, remakes and reboots. [NOTE: This course will regularly examine films with extremely gory imagery that may be offensive and unpleasant to some students (...and if that's you, then you're definitely taking the wrong course!). To quote the beginning of Frankenstein (1931): "We think it will thrill you. It may shock you. It might even horrify you. So, if any of you do not care to subject your nerves to such a strain, now's your chance to...well, we warned you!"].

MCS 366 | COMMUNICATION, TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of a variety of contemporary and historical issues related to the introduction and diffusion of communication technologies in society. Especially examines how new technologies, particularly the Internet, are transforming the communication landscape. Emphasis on issues of intellectual property, surveillance, privacy, regulation, message construction, and access will be central to this course.

MCS 367 | SPORTS FANDOM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the study of fandom and participatory culture in relation to sports. It begins by asking "who are sports fans and why study them?" before moving on to consider questions of fan identity and belonging, consumerism and advertising, fan-team-industry relations, rivalries and anti-fandom, the intersections of sports and media fandoms, and the relationship between sports, politics, and participatory culture. Throughout the class, we'll take an intersectional approach that considers the impact of gender, race, sexuality, class, nationality, and ability on the topics under discussion. Students will engage with the material through readings, screenings, and discussion but also through participant observation in sports fan subcultures both familiar and new to the student.

MCS 368 | MUSIC INDUSTRIES AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course critically examines music as a form of cultural communication and as a media industry. Students learn about historical changes in the music business, contemporary issues that industry insiders negotiate, do-it-yourself alternatives to mainstream industry practices, and how music functions as a unique source for collective fandom.

MCS 369 | TIME TRAVEL ON TELEVISION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class examines the common narrative device of "time travel" as it has been shown on television. We will look at the history of time travel on television, how time travel becomes a narrative device, and at the generic components of time travel narratives. Through careful readings of television episodes, we will study the influence of technology, politics, identity, the body and mediation on representations of time travel. Further, we shall examine these texts not just as glimpses of possible futures, but also as cultural critiques of issues in the present. Through screenings, daily written responses, and a final project, students will have the opportunity to explore the intricate nature of narratives about time travel.

MCS 370 | ADAPTATION: MOVIES/TV/NOVELS/COMICS/TOYS/VIDEO GAMES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course looks at adaptation as a cross-media phenomenon, which we will trace back to the origins of the film medium in the late nineteenth century. The desire to experience familiar stories and characters in different media forms transcends generations. Film critic Margaret Farrand Thorp wrote in 1939 of the "widespread human eagerness to experience the same story in as many media as possible." This impulse has only grown in recent years with the increasingly vital role of franchises in an era of media convergence, whereby narratives become replayed, extended and/or intertwined across films, television programs, video games, comic books and other forms. The course will begin with the traditional adaptive process of turning novels into film, the theoretical concerns surrounding fidelity and medium-specificity, and the critical debates to do with adaptation and authenticity. We will look at the classical era of Hollywood in the 1930s through 1950s, followed by comparisons of graphic novels to their film versions. The more problematic process of adapting such properties as board games, toy lines and video games is explored in later weeks, as are the implications for the adaptive process created by the prolific nature of digital special effects. We will go beyond narrative and aesthetic analysis in many weeks to consider the industrial implications of adaptations, as well as what media theory can offer us in studying how and why texts are adapted from one medium to another.

MCS 371 | WRITING TELEVISION CRITICISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers an introduction to the aesthetic, rhetorical, and cultural criticism of English-language television via analyses of a contemporary, rotating television series. In this course, students will be exposed to different types of television criticism. Through close readings of television criticism as well as writing about television criticism, students will be encouraged to develop a critical voice of their own. Students will engage with different styles of criticism through readings, analysis, peer-reviews, and writing their own criticisms. Class includes a screening time. Projects include written work, digital profiles, and engagement with contemporary theories of television and media.

MCS 372 | DIGITAL CULTURE AND NEW MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course considers the cultural ramifications of new media in shaping life experiences and meaning. As interactive digital media technologies expand opportunities for social networking, text and instant messaging, file sharing, collaborative authoring, microblogging, podcasting and mobile communication, this course asks how these new technologies impact identity formation, creative participation and concepts of public culture. This course will focus on some of the major themes that have engaged new media scholarship and thinking: convergence and participatory culture, identity and humanity, technology and literacy. The course will include hands-on approaches to media criticism and culture.

MCS 373 | AUDIO DOCUMENTARY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course uses hands-on projects so that students can explore the steps in the process of creating an audio documentary. Through practical application students consider questions that surround the interpretation of cultural experience. Additionally, students analyze a variety of approaches to audio documentary in an effort to understand better this significant form of storytelling.

MCS 375 | LATINO/A TELEVISION AND MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Drawing from Latin American and U.S. television studies, this course explores the political, industrial and cultural dynamics that shape televisual representations in Latin American television and/or Spanish language Television in the US. More specifically, Spanish-language television and media will be examined from interdisciplinary frameworks, which include the cultural analysis of televisual modes, national and international regulations of media production and distribution, histories of production, and ethnographies of viewing.

MCS 376 | LATIN AMERICAN CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the production, distribution and impact of cinema in the Latin American context. Transnational relations with other industries, such as Hollywood and the European film context will be considered. We will investigate how social, economic and political forces have shaped or are presently influencing and transforming national cinemas. Questions of identity and cultural difference, particularly in relation to immigration, diasporas, transnationalism, youth culture, class, gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity are central to the discussions. We will consider the diversity of styles and topics that are now redefining the cinema of the region.

MCS 380 | BOARD GAMES AS MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the rising popularity of hobby board games as a way of understanding cultural changes in the digital age. We will discuss games and play as concepts, analyze new types of games, and examine the "gamification" of the world. Students will design a board game and learn how different game genres lead to different interpretations of meaning. This course will open up the study of board games in the media studies classroom. At first blush, board games do not seem like the typical "media" studied in the MCS program, which tends to focus more on television, film, and video games. And just like those forms of media throughout cultural history, board games have been viewed as not important enough to study. Like these once-ignored, now-valued media forms, however, board games not only have a lot to communicate about our culture, but also are undervalued as meaning-making creations. This class is about the board game as a meaning-making unit of information, as well as a system made up of units of information. In this class, we will develop frameworks and methodologies, and present case studies, for how scholars, students, and teachers might study the board game in our digital age.

MCS 383 | TALKING ABOUT FILM: THEORY & CRITICISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is to familiarize students with a wide range of disciplines (film, art history, philosophy, psychology, etc.) and how these ideas both inflected the development of classical film theories as well as the evolution of cinema. Moreover, the scope of the course seeks to examine the overall process whereby theoretical discourse develops historically.

MCS 385 | SEMIOTICS, STORYTELLING, & FILM FORM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide an in-depth exploration of how filmmakers create various types of meaning through film form and style. Methods of analysis will include semiotics (the analysis of signs and symbols that produce meaning), genre studies, and celebrity studies. We will pay specific attention to how meaning emerges from in-vogue or director-specific stylistic choices (for example, Spike Lee's dolly shot, bullet time post-Matrix, and the popularity of still photography in film of the late 1960s) and new technologies that emerge at various times (for example, special effects that allow for the production of different images, and advances in control over layered sound that change aural impact).

MCS 386 | AUDIO PRODUCTION FOR RADIO AND THE WEB | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students in this course will record, edit, and produce various dynamic audio pieces including podcasts, documentaries, commercials, and more. Though most pre-production work will be done at the studios of Radio DePaul, it may be possible for some students to complete their productions in a DePaul lab or at home. While experience is not required, an affinity for sound-only entertainment and information content will benefit students.

MCS 389 | TOPICS IN MEDIA PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a rotating topic course in areas of media production and may include classes such as Podcasting, Advanced Radio Production, Advanced Audio Documentary, Radio News, Multimedia Production, etc. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

MCS 393 | TOPICS IN ADVANCED MEDIA ETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Each section of this rotating topics course comprises an in-depth investigation of a different issue of media ethics. Among the topics offered: democracy and the media; stereotyping and prejudice; deception and the media; privacy; the ethics of media awards; and the ethics of authenticity. Prerequisite: MCS 343 or any prior coursework in ethics. May be repeated for credit as topics change.

MCS 501 | FILM AND MEDIA THEORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will serve as a foundation for students in theories of film, television, and new media. An engagement with areas such as formal analysis, television and film spectatorship, authorship, television flow, and media specificity will provide both a brief historical framework for these disciplines, as well as a survey of major texts. Readings will include scholars/theorists such as Sergei Eisenstein, David Bordwell, Laura Mulvey, Horace Newcomb, Raymond Williams, Nick Browne, and Henry Jenkins. Formerly MCS 501 Introduction to Media Studies.

Status as a College of Communication graduate student or Experience Design student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 502 | MEDIA AND CULTURAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides students with a theoretical and methodological background in the interdisciplinary field of cultural studies, which considers media and culture as sites for the construction and contestation of race, class, gender, ethnicity, sexuality and nation. The course provides a foundation in critical cultural studies, ideology critique, critical race and gender studies, transnational media studies and active audience studies. Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or MFA Cinema student or Experience Design student or department consent is a prerequisite to this class.

MCS 503 | CRITICAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will provide students with an advanced background in a wide range of methods used in media studies. The methods taught in this course may be applied to the study of film, television, print media, new media, social media, and their related paratexts and audiences. Some of the critical approaches to be covered include: Discourse analysis; Historiography; Political Economy; Sociological Analysis. Students will also learn how to produce media criticism in a range of formats, from traditional essays to short articles to video essays and more.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 504 | HISTORIOGRAPHY AND RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will offer critical perspectives and methods to film and media history and research. Areas of exploration will include how popular history and academic historiography interact, the way certain subjects and facts are emphasized over others, the different forms used to represent historical knowledge, and questions of history and memory. In addition to the assumptions, methods, and purposes of film/media histories, the course will also ask crucial questions regarding the nature of inquiry and the status of data and evidence. Students will learn how to address a specific research question through a variety of methodologies in a cogent and comprehensive manner. Students will also develop competency in writing a research proposal and using research tools such as Endnote and online journal databases.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 505 | DIVERSITY AND INCLUSION IN MEDIA | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will address questions of diversity and inclusion at different stages in the circuit of production and distribution of media. How do media corporations and legislation affect the diversity within the mass media industries? How are cultural identities depicted and how do such representations converge or interrelate with current social discourses? In the context of theories of human identity and difference, students will view, read about, analyze and discuss films, television series, and digital and social media to understand the intersections and interactions of social and political identities that they draw upon and depict. Finally, we will consider strategies to challenge or disrupt limiting media practices through creative and responsible discussion, while students explore their power and responsibility as creators.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 506 | MEDIA LITERACY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Media literacy is the process of understanding a set of competencies that help us become better creators, consumers, and activists of media and technology. As media - whether cinematic, online, televised, or a convergence thereof - become even more omnipresent in the 21st Century, we must focus on how we as media scholars/educators/activists can both develop skills in media literacy as well as help the current and future generations negotiate the media environment. This course will examine the concept of media literacy and how it is and can be practiced in our homes, communities, and schools. We will examine possible inroads and roadblocks to media literacy. What lessons does media literacy teach us? What elements of media are most important to examine? We will examine media literacy scholarship and existing programs as we develop our own possible plans for implementation of media literacy projects and programs.

Status as a College of Communication Graduate Student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

MCS 520 | TOPICS IN MEDIA STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is a seminar that focuses on a particular area of media studies including, but not limited to, topics such as the contemporary media industries, kids media culture, television studies, music cultures, digital divide, race and media, celebrity culture, radio studies, war and media, gender and media, global television, new media studies and sexuality and media. Military Science (MSC)

MSC 111 | OFFICERSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY | 1 quarter hour (Undergraduate)

The purpose of this class is to introduce cadets/students to the fundamental components of service as an officer in the United States Army. These initial lessons form the building blocks of progressive lessons in values, fitness, leadership, and officership. Additionally the class addresses "life skills" including fitness, communications theory and practice (written and oral), and interpersonal relationships.

MSC 112 | PROBLEM SOLVING AND DECISION MAKING | 1 quarter hour (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the "life skills" of problem solving, decision-making and leadership. The course is designed to help students in the near-term as leaders on campus. The class will help students be more effective leaders and managers in the long-term, whether they serve in the military or the civilian sector. Topics addressed include critical thinking, problem solving methods, leadership theory, followership, group cohesion, goal setting, and feedback mechanisms. Lessons are taught in a seminar format, emphasizing student discussions and practical exercises.

MSC 113 | FUNDAMENTALS OF LEADERSHIP | 1 quarter hour (Undergraduate)

This course provides cadets/students an introduction to the critical topic of leadership. The course seeks to convince cadets/students that they can learn to be better leaders than they are now (i.e. leaders aren't born they are developed), and to provide them with a model for understanding their development as leaders.

MSC 151 | PHYSICAL READINESS I | 1 quarter hour (Undergraduate)

Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.

MSC 201 | FUNDAMENTALS OF LEADERSHIP/ORGANIZATION AND PLANNING | 3.00 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Fund Leadership/Organization and Plan. Introduction to leadership techniques in conducting military briefings, writing in the Army style, issuing oral orders, and reporting information. Review "Code of Conduct," and leader obligations. A practical laboratory which introduces the student to drill and ceremony, marksmanship, rappelling, communications, and first aid is required for Army ROTC cadets.

MSC 202 | LEADERSHIP DYNAMICS | 3.00 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Fundamentals of decision-making, planning, supervising and technology management skills necessary to coordinate and control the efforts of subordinates in the accomplishment of a task. A practical laboratory which introduces the student to drill and ceremony, marksmanship, rappelling, communications, and first aid is required for Army ROTC cadets.

MSC 211 | LEADERSHIP AND PROBLEM SOLVING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The purpose of this class is to introduce cadets/students to principal leadership instruction of the Basic Course. Building upon the fundamentals introduced in the MSC 100 level classes, this instruction delves into several aspects of communication and leadership theory.

MSC 212 | MILITARY PRINCIPLES OF TACTICS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This quarter focuses principally on officership, providing an extensive examination of the unique purpose, roles, and obligations of commissioned officers. It includes a detailed look at the origin of our institutional values and their practical application in decision-making and leadership. The lesson traces the Army's successes and failure as it evolved from the Vietnam War to the present.

MSC 213 | OFFICERSHIP CASE STUDY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on the MS I year's introduction to officership and provides an extensive examination of the unique purpose, roles, and obligations of commissioned officers. The aim is to convey a clear and complete understanding of what it means to be a commissioned officer. Special emphasis is given to the officer's role in shaping and guiding the growth and evolution of the Army through decisions, policies, and personal example.

MSC 252 | PHYSICAL READINESS II | 1 quarter hour (Undergraduate)

Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.

MSC 277 | WAR & PEACE IN THE MODERN AGE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A survey of military history from 1648 to the present with emphasis on the relationship between armed forces and the societies that create them, the impact of technology on warfare, and efforts to limit deadly conflict.

MSC 321 | FUNDAMENTALS OF MILITARY LEADERSHIP AND TRAINING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Instruction and case studies, which build leadership competencies and military skills in preparation for further responsibilities as Army Officers. Specific instruction in the principles of war, decision-making processes, planning models, and risk assessment. Advanced leadership instruction focuses on motivational theory, the role and actions of leaders, and organizational communications. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 | ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Specific instruction is given in individual leader development, planning and execution of small unit operations, individual and team development, and the Army as a career choice. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 321 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 323 | ADVANCED LEADERSHIP | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds upon the previous lessons while introducing advanced leadership theories on motivation, leader modeling, and the role of a leader in an organization. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 341 | COORDINATE ACTIVITIES WITH STAFFS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This module consists of four lessons designed to give the cadet an understanding and appreciation of the critical importance that staff organization, planning, and coordination play in the success or failure of military operations. The module uses historical case studies initially to illustrate these points then transitions to provide an overview of staff fundamentals and principles contained in field manual FM 101-5. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 or MSC 323 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 342 | ETHICAL IMPERATIVES FOR THE JUNIOR OFFICER | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This six-lesson module on ethics builds upon previous instruction presented in the Basic Course and the MS III year. These lessons further strengthen character and values within the cadets, increase their understanding of the Army's consideration of others' expectations, and improve their capacity to make correct decisions when presented with an ethical or moral dilemma. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 322 or MSC 323 is a prerequisite for this class.

MSC 343 | ADVANCED MILITARY TOPICS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course builds upon the previous MS IV lessons while introducing advanced leadership theories on motivation, leader modeling, and the role of a leader in an organization. It will also address the responsibility and process of a leader on how to assess and apply risk assessment within the organization. Must be a contracted ARMY ROTC cadet.

MSC 353 | PHYSICAL READINESS III | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the principles of fitness: a fast-paced military-style interval training class that incorporates calisthenics and an emphasis on a healthy life style. Students will undergo an evaluation of their physical fitness level and it's progression over the course of the quarter.

MSC 399 | MILITARY THEORY | 1.50 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(Independent Study) Intensive research and study of one or more selected topics. The topics and research methodology are determined in consultation with the instructor. May be repeated for maximum of six credit hours.

Modern Languages (MOL)

MOL 197 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN MODERN LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

See schedule for current offerings.

MOL 198 | STUDY ABROAD | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Variable credit.

MOL 199 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Variable credit.

MOL 210 | CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary blend of the classical traditions of myth, literature and philosophy, concentrating on myth. It endeavors to place Classical literature into its historical, social and cultural contexts. Students will learn significant myths and the names and functions of the most important characters in them. They will investigate how the ancients used traditional narratives and images to explore, explain and experiment with ideas about themselves and their surroundings in those contexts. Learning about how myth is variously interpreted (as for example by means of theories of myth-interpretation) as well as basic methods of literary criticism (e.g., analysis of language, content, structure, etc.), students will employ ways to identify, understand and interpret the different types of communication present in myth-literature. As they move chronologically through the ancient world students will observe how myths change to reflect differing individual and collective concerns, as well as the specific interests (and so the significant aspects of discourse) of authors and audiences as conditions change. Students will also learn about literary genres, including poetry, tragedy and prose, their properties and distinctions and discover how genres also reflect audiences and times. Students will read and evaluate modern views of myth in order to understand how myth is open to multiple interpretations and upon what sounder bases myth is to be interpreted. While analyzing myths' diversity in various forms of literature, students will come to comprehend what mythology meant to the ancients, as well as those facets and ingredients of myth that are universal, enduring, and meaningful today.

MOL 211 | ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN EPIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course centers upon the Homeric Iliad and Odyssey and Vergil's Aeneid and endeavors to place these epic poems into their historical, social, and cultural contexts. Students will learn the definition of epic as a literary genre and discover how this genre evolved to reflect audiences and times. They will learn the components of epic language, in particular, literary devices and structural features (e.g., formulas, nested stories, epic similes). They will be able to describe the plots of the three epics and know the main- and mid-level human characters, gods, and goddesses. They will be able to define and better understand the meanings of "hero" and "heroism." Students will be able to express mature appreciation for the epics as whole works. Learning how the epics are variously interpreted as well as basic methods of literary criticism (e.g., analysis of language, content, structure, etc.), students will employ these as ways to understand and interpret the poems. As they read, learn and evaluate modern views of the epics, students will also acquire better means to distinguish critically between views and interpretations. A strong emphasis in this class will be upon the vital connections between past and present, and how students can become more aware of and understand important lasting concepts such as heroism, leadership, self-definition, etc. Finally, students will relate these stories to modern story-telling in order to understand how the heroes of the ancient Greeks live with us today. In short, they will interpret what epic poetry offered ancient listeners and what it has to teach modern readers. The classical tradition is rich with meaning and significance, even to modern 21st century adults and this class will not only be an exploration of the culture and instruction of the ancient world through epic, but an investigation of what classic motifs remain with us today.

MOL 212 | ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN TRAGEDY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Classical Tragedy introduces students to the authors, social contexts and performances of ancient Greek drama. Students will learn how to interpret the "myths" presented on the ancient Greek stage and how to apply what they have learned to detect and to interpret the moral, social and political issues raised in them. They will learn the names, works and careers of the principal tragedians: Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. Students will learn to assess the formal and aesthetic properties of the works of different tragedians. Emphasis will be given to specifics of performance and to seeing a play in the "theater of the mind" as well as gaining command of relevant terminology, e.g., parodos, peripeteia, mimesis, catharsis, etc. Students will learn to outline the plot, argument and key themes of each work clearly and will gain an understanding of the historical context and social conditions motivating each work. The main themes of Greek tragedy (e.g., power, gender, justice, violence etc.) invite comparison to themes of contemporary theater and film. Students will acquire an awareness of ancient Greek tragedy in its connection with our own theatrical and literary culture, and they will reflect upon the influence of Greek drama on modern stage and literature. They will be able to employ several concepts in the analysis of Classical Tragedy.

MOL 213 | ANCIENT GREEK AND ROMAN COMEDY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course students encounter selected landmarks of Greek and Roman satirical literature; they learn important theories of interpretation, theories of humor as well as secondary interpretative opinions about the works assigned. They will be engaged in the course material primarily through readings, lectures and discussions. Students also view or read whole or selected excerpts of modern visual or written literature that will supplement their primary and secondary readings. The roots of comedy extend deep into antiquity. This course, however, endeavors to train intelligent critics of modern satire. Students study authors ancient and modern in order to sharpen their critical abilities and to gain insight into Athens, Rome as well as the contemporary cultural milieu. Students are challenged to regard satire as a critical force. Students encounter comic dramatists with special interest in how the most serious material—war, death, injustice, suffering—is criticized in a way that they can enjoy. With the help of comic theorists students will explore the boundaries of the comic, the social and political function of comedy in different cultural contexts, and the varieties of humor: mad, cathartic, aggressive, destructive, defensive, celebratory etc. Students will confront a host of related issues such as the nature of tragic pleasure, the language and metaphors of humor, and the legal limits of satirical discourse.

MOL 214 | GENDER AND SEXUALITY IN ANCIENT GREECE AND ROME | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course attempts to recover the experiences of women in ancient Greece and Rome by examining literary texts and archaeological remains that concern them. Students will investigate women's roles in public and private life and gauge the changes in their situation and representation over time. We'll also discuss the similarities and differences between ancient and contemporary attitudes toward sex and gender. The task is challenged by the paucity of sources that were produced by the women of antiquity themselves; often our view is said to be "filtered through a male lens".

MOL 215 | ANCIENT SCIENCE AND ITS LANGUAGE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students will study ancient science, its proponents and its epochs, later concentrating on the language of science. Students will learn successive highlights of inquiry within scientific culture, beginning in prehistory and ancient Egypt. As they proceed from Egypt through the ancient Greek enlightenment and onto Roman science and its decline, students will learn the basics of how representative thinkers evaluated and altered "contemporary" understanding. Students will witness firsthand the ever-changing perspective of scientific knowledge and compare it with modern empirical methodology. They will acquire an ability to interpret varying viewpoints of "science" through an overview of changes of perception combined with selected readings from the works of ancient philosophers, physicists and physicians. Students will also learn the composition of scientific terminology; they will learn how to analyze, dissect and compose scientific terms based upon the Classical languages of ancient Greece and Rome.

MOL 220 | HOW LANGUAGE WORKS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The focus of this course is on linguistics as the study of how language works in the minds and brains of its speakers, taking an approach that focuses on the mental representation of language. We develop a theory of language knowledge that includes knowledge of sound systems, sentence structure, and meaning, and along the way we investigate data from diverse languages to illustrate how linguists think and reason. We also draw connections between linguistic knowledge and other types of cognition, as well as connections between linguistics and related fields, including philosophy, psychology, and neuroscience.

MOL 244 | CLASSICAL CHINESE I | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Classical Chinese is predominantly a literary language, which has played a linguistically and culturally unifying role among the many vernacular languages of China. Permission of instructor, some Mandarin Chinese preferred.

MOL 245 | CLASSICAL CHINESE II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Classical Chinese is predominantly a literary language, which has played a linguistically and culturally unifying role among the many vernacular languages of China. MOL 244 or equivalent recommended.

MOL 247 | CHINA AND SOCIAL MEDIA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to discuss various China-related social issues reported on Chinese and American social media. Students are required to read select materials about China from both American social media and the translated version of Chinese social media and participate in active class discussions on the readings. The materials aim to help students understand how and why salient social issues in China are reported divergently on state-run as compared to unofficial social media in China as well as on social media based in China as compared to those based in the U.S. Students will learn to use the knowledge of Chinese philosophy, history, contemporary political and economic contexts, censorship and journalism to understand what shapes Chinese media reports.

MOL 282 | MODERN AFRICAN LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Themes and theories of postcolonial studies in relation to African culture, politics and literature. Evaluation of novels, criticism, and movies to provide an introduction to the complex, highly heterogeneous experience of modern African literature.

MOL 293 | RUSSIAN MASS MEDIA, POLITICS, AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines how Russian and international news outlets alike present the realities of Russian society, culture and politics. Students will be asked to reflect on how mass media, rhetoric, imagery, and presentational styles influence the global public's understanding of current events. Through analysis of news segments and news articles, students will become more attuned to how contemporary depictions of this most important partner and adversary on the world stage are presented to a U.S. audience through both Russian state-sponsored news outlets in English (The Moscow Times, Russian Times [RT] TV) and through international outlets (news from France 24 English, Deutsch Welle English, Telemundo English, CNN, Bloomberg News, Fox News, etc). The course also explores how geopolitical relationships can be helped and hindered by their portrayal in the media, and students will gain an understanding of the material, symbolic, political, and cultural implications of the way media shapes, informs, and at times distorts, perspectives.

MOL 297 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN MODERN LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours

This course will introduce students to the rich and dynamic body of Russian folk texts and belief. Course readings will include epic poems, skazki (fairy tales), ballads, legends, incantations, and elements of popular culture. Students will learn and apply contemporary theories of folklore and traditional folk belief. The course will touch on the role of Russian folklore themes in literature and film. Emphasis on primary source materials with supplemental theory and history. Discussions in English. Readings in English. Cross-listed with RUS 306.

MOL 309 | THE NOVELIST'S WORLD | 4 quarter hours

Variable topics.

MOL 310 | JAPANESE CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Japanese Culture is a cross-cultural and interdisciplinary exploration of Japanese culture, especially as regards cultural figures such as "geisha," "samurai," and "Hello Kitty." These figures intersect with various critical discourses on gender, sexuality, nationalism, exoticism, orientalism, modernity, tradition, art, and aesthetics. They have also generated both praise and criticism. These questions are not only specific to the cultural figures as listed above but also run deep in society. The course will also examine other historical and ideological constructions in Japan and the West, especially in the United States.

MOL 340 | ARAB CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the first in a series of three hybrid courses in the Arabic Studies Program that examine Arab culture. The purpose of this course is to provide students with an overview of Arab culture and a clear understanding of its elements and historical events that shaped it. Emphasis will be placed on cultural aspects shared by all Arabs. The course will examine the general concept of culture, and study the elements that form Arab culture. It will also explore the impact of critical factors and events in Arab history from pre-Islamic to modern time on the evolution of Arab culture as we know it today. Students will gain insight into the way Arabs think by examining Arabs' cultural practices, products, and perspectives. In addition to learning about Arabs and Arab culture, students will practice using technology to research, blog, discuss, and contribute to open-sources on topics related to Arab culture. Students will also have the opportunity to meet and interact with Arabs and the Chicago Arab heritage community.

MOL 341 | MEDIA IN THE ARAB WORLD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is one of a series of three culture/media/and literature courses strongly recommended for a major in Arabic Studies. It is also an elective course that can be taken by students at large. The purpose of the course is to introduce students to the Arab media—including newspapers, television, and the Internet—as a product of Arab culture. Students will examine Arab media to gain better understanding of its nature, role, content, and influence within emphasis on the context of Arab societies and the factors influencing their people such as politics, religion, technology, and Western influence. In addition to the assigned readings from the textbook and a variety of sources that represent various perspectives, a sample of products of Arab media including newspapers, TV programs, news, cartoons, and blogs will be examined to better understand Arab media. Furthermore, elements and factors that impact Arab media will be analyzed and discussed. The impact of the West on Arab media, and the future of Arab media will also be discussed.

MOL 342 | MODERN ARABIC LITERATURE IN TRANSLATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is one of a series of three courses offered by the Arabic Studies program as part of the major and minor in Arabic Studies. It provides a survey of modern Arabic literature and focuses on various genres, including poetry, plays, short stories, and novels. Works by major Arab writers and poets representing various regions and content related to Arab culture are examined and analyzed to develop an appreciation for Arabic literature and a deeper understanding of Arab culture. This is a hybrid course. Students meet onsite one day a week for 2 hours and conduct work online to satisfy the course requirements. Specific assignments are provided each week through D2L and Ning social network for the online portion of the course.

MOL 349 | TEACHING MODERN LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Teaching Modern Language course is specially designed for the teacher who is about to begin his/her career teaching foreign languages at the K-12 levels. This course is also designed for accomplished and experienced teachers who wish to receive new information on current theory and practice. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with the theoretical and practical tools that will enable them to become critical and reflective foreign language practitioners.

MOL 350 | METHODS OF TEACHING MODERN LANGUAGES IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Provides training in the theory and methods of teaching foreign languages in the elementary school (FLES). Designed for both pre-service and in-service teachers. Pre-service teachers include foreign language majors interested in elementary school teaching and elementary majors who are proficient in a foreign language and interested in teaching FLES. In-service teachers include elementary teachers proficient in a foreign language who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES and secondary trained teachers who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES. In order to meet the objectives of this course and subsequent methods courses, it is expected that all participants be able to demonstrate proficiency in English and a second language before enrolling.

MOL 354 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS/CURRENT RESEARCH SECOND/FOREIGN LANGUAGE ACQUISITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course serves both as undergraduate and graduate-level introduction to the field of second language acquisition (SLA) research. As such, it will introduce students to the research methods, findings, and some of the theoretical discussions that have encompassed the last three decades of SLA research. The focus is on basic questions regarding the process of language learning, rather than on explicitly pedagogical issues. The most important goal of SLA research is to uncover and describe the processes that are potentially affected by instructional efforts. Thus, one of the goals of the course is to have students reflect and, if necessary, modify how they view the role of an instructor and a learner of a second language. The material can be used to inform learning a second language as much as it is instrumental in teaching a second language. The material in this course should encourage students to question assumptions and begin to formulate individual ideas about what goes on in classrooms, how students learn, and how this learning could inform teaching of a second language. A final goal is to introduce students to critical reading of research articles in the field, as a preparation for possible further study of SLA.

MOL 355 | CONTEMPORARY CRITICISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An overview of contemporary criticism from Russian formalism to post-modernism. Cross-listed as CPL 355.

This course introduces students to the professions of translation and interpreting and covers several associated topics: the skills and knowledge each profession requires above and beyond language proficiency, professional conduct and ethical practice, and the translation and interpreting theory that informs professional translation and interpreting.

MOL 371 | TRANSLATION AS AN ART & SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a skill-building translation course that introduces students to the approaches, methods, and techniques they should be ready to deploy in order to engage in translation as an art and as a science. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 372 | TRANSLATION LANGUAGE-PAIR PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a skill-building translation course in which students receive translation training in their language pair. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 373 | CONSECUTIVE INTERPRETING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course trains students in the practice of consecutive interpreting, including memory training and note-taking skills. Students practice interpreting in the consecutive mode from and into English using a variety of speech types, and receive feedback from the instructor and/or external assessors as necessary. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 374 | SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course trains students in the practice of simultaneous interpreting. Students practice interpreting in the simultaneous mode from and into English using a variety of speech types, and receive feedback from the instructor and/or external assessors as necessary. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 379 | TRANSLATION/INTERPRETING PRACTICUM | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course, which is designed for students pursuing a certificate in Translation and Interpreting Studies (TIS), provides students with an opportunity to gain practical experience in translation and/or interpreting, under the guidance of the instructor. In consultation with the instructor, students will identify an appropriate translation and/or interpreting project and work on it throughout the quarter with the goal of completing it by the end of the quarter. Students pursuing a TIS certificate are advised to take this course after completing all other certificate courses or concurrently with the last one, if possible. If scheduling or other considerations make this infeasible, this course can be taken at any time by any student who has the necessary skills needed to undertake the project. Students who are not pursuing a TIS certificate and are interested in this course should contact the instructor to discuss whether the class is a good fit for them.

MOL 380 | COMMUNITY BASED SERVICE LEARNING | 4 quarter hours

MOL 400 | PROFESSIONAL PRACTICUM | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Supervised experience in teaching, tutoring, interpreting, editing writing or other professional exercise of language skills.

MOL 401 | PROFESSIONAL FOUNDATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this course students will prepare a series of surveys/summaries of research literature and learning resources. They will identify one or more professional organizations such as MLA, CLA, ACTFL, CTFL, AATX, and others. Using their by-laws, publications, and recent conference programs, students will write a literature summary that identifies the major issues of concern to these organizations, and analyze their resources and professional standards related to research and practice in the students' field of interest. Required for Modern Language MA students.

MOL 402 | LANGUAGE, SELF AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course offers students a theoretical and methodological introduction to the theory and methods of the study of language variation and change and its relationship to various social and individual factors (e.g. race, class, sex, ethnicity, identity, etc.). It introduces students to the concepts, theories, and methods used to analyze language and its role in the definition and construction of individual and group identity. Students will look specifically at how social and individual factors may influence linguistic structure and vice versa. The course will explore various theories of sociolinguistics, including the interaction between language and speakers' membership in various groups, linguistic variation across groups, intergroup theory, dialectology, and discourse analysis, among others. Through the course readings students will consider and critically analyze the notions of the speech community and the individual, the existence (or not) of dialects, synchronic variation and diachronic change, the relationship between social factors and language, language policy and planning, language standardization, linguistic ethnography, and theories related to education and society. Bilingual phenomena such as code switching, language contact, and the creation of pidgins and creoles will also be examined. Topics may vary by quarter. This course is required for language MA students.

MOL 440 | ARAB CULTURE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first in a series of three hybrid courses in the Arabic Studies Program that examine Arab culture. The purpose of this course is to provide students with an overview of Arab culture and a clear understanding of its elements and historical events that shaped it. Emphasis will be placed on cultural aspects shared by all Arabs. The course will examine the general concept of culture, and study the elements that form Arab culture. It will also explore the impact of critical factors and events in Arab history from pre-Islamic to modern time on the evolution of Arab culture as we know it today. Students will gain insight into the way Arabs think by examining Arabs' cultural practices, products, and perspectives. In addition to learning about Arabs and Arab culture, students will practice using technology to research, blog, discuss, and contribute to open-sources on topics related to Arab culture. Students will also have the opportunity to meet and interact with Arabs and the Chicago Arab heritage community.

MOL 441 | MEDIA IN THE ARAB WORLD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is one of a series of three culture/media/and literature courses strongly recommended for a major in Arabic Studies. It is also an elective course that can be taken by students at large. The purpose of the course is to introduce students to the Arab media—including newspapers, television, and the Internet—as a product of Arab culture. Students will examine Arab media to gain better understanding of its nature, role, content, and influence within emphasis on the context of Arab societies and the factors influencing their people such as politics, religion, technology, and Western influence. In addition to the assigned readings from the textbook and a variety of sources that represent various perspectives, a sample of products of Arab media including newspapers, TV programs, news, cartoons, and blogs will be examined to better understand Arab media. MOL 442 | MODERN ARABIC LITERATURE IN TRANSLATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is one of a series of three courses offered by the Arabic Studies program as part of the major and minor in Arabic Studies. It provides a survey of modern Arabic literature and focuses on various genre including poetry, plays, short stories, and novels. Work by major Arab writers and poets representing various regions and content related to Arab culture are examined and analyzed to develop an appreciation for Arabic literature and deeper understanding of Arab culture as portrayed in the major works of modern Arab poets and authors. This is a hybrid course. Students meet onsite one day a week for 2 hours and conduct work online to satisfy the course requirements. Specific assignments are provided each week through D2L and Ning social network for the online portion of the course.

MOL 449 | TEACHING MODERN LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The Teaching Modern Language course is specially designed for the teacher who is about to begin his/her career teaching foreign languages at the K-12 levels. This course is also designed for accomplished and experienced teachers who wish to receive new information on current theory and practice. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with the theoretical and practical tools that will enable them to become critical and reflective foreign language practitioners.

MOL 450 | METHODS OF TEACHING FOREIGN LANGUAGES IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Provides training in the theory and methods of teaching foreign languages in the elementary school (FLES). Designed for both pre-service and in-service teachers. Pre-service teachers include foreign language majors interested in elementary school teaching and elementary majors who are proficient in a foreign language and interested in teaching FLES. In-service teachers include elementary teachers proficient in a foreign language who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES and secondary trained teachers who are teaching or who are interested in teaching FLES. In order to meet the objectives of this course and subsequent methods courses, it is expected that all participants be able to demonstrate proficiency in English and a second language before enrolling.

MOL 454 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS/CURRENT RESEARCH SECOND/FOREIGN LANGUAGE ACQUISITION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course serves both as undergraduate and graduate-level introduction to the field of second language acquisition (SLA) research. As such, it will introduce students to the research methods, findings, and some of the theoretical discussions that have encompassed the last three decades of SLA research. The focus is on basic questions regarding the process of language learning, rather than on explicitly pedagogical issues. The most important goal of SLA research is to uncover and describe the processes that are potentially affected by instructional efforts. Thus, one of the goals of the course is to have students reflect and, if necessary, modify how they view the role of an instructor and a learner of a second language. The material can be used to inform learning a second language as much as it is instrumental in teaching a second language. The material in this course should encourage students to question assumptions and begin to formulate individual ideas about what goes on in classrooms, how we learn, and how this learning could inform our teaching of second language. A final goal is to introduce students to critical reading of research articles in the field, as a preparation for possible further study of SLA.

MOL 457 | TEACHING CULTURE IN THE MODERN LANGUAGE CLASSROOM | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Pedagogical theory and practice in the integration of culture into the language classroom.

MOL 460 | RUSSIAN DRAMA IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course presents some of the greatest Russian plays of the 18th and 19th century. In the course, students will read original works in English translation by Von Vizin, Griboedov, Pushkin, Gogol, Lermontov, and Ostrovsky. Some critical works will be included. Students will read, analyze, and interpret the plays, comedies and dramas, both with respect to form and meaning.

MOL 461 | RUSSIAN DRAMA IN TRANSLATION II: SOVIET ERA | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Russian theater of the 20th century appeared in parallel to realistic novels and contributed to the movement of realism in Russian literature. Russian theater of the 20th century, presented by such authors as Chekhov, Gorky, Bulgakov and Tefi, demonstrates tendencies from realism to avant-garde. Some critical works will be included. The student will read, analyze and interpret the plays, comedies and dramas, both with respect to form and meaning. In the process they will develop greater insight into the social and multicultural issues of the time.

MOL 464 | RUSSIAN SHORT STORY IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION II: SOVIET ERA | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course presents some of the greatest Russian short stories (1880 - 1930) in English translation. Students will read short stories in English translation by major Russian writers such as Chekhov, Kuprin, Bunin and Bulgakov. Students will analyze and interpret short stories of the 1880-1930 period, both with respect to form and meaning, and discuss some critical works.

MOL 468 | RUSSIAN NOVEL IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION III: CONTEMPORARY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Major Russian prose works of the late 20th century, read in English translation. Authors include Bulgakov, Platonov, Pristavkin, and Bitov.

MOL 470 | PROFESSIONAL TRANSLATION AND INTERPRETING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the professions of translation and interpreting and covers several associated topics: the skills and knowledge each profession requires above and beyond language proficiency, professional conduct and ethical practice, and the translation and interpreting theory that informs professional translation and interpreting. The course also provides students with the opportunity to practice translation and interpreting at a basic level, with feedback from the instructor and/or external assessors as necessary. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 471 | TRANSLATION AS AN ART & SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This is a skill-building translation course that introduces students to the approaches, methods, and techniques they should be ready to deploy in order to engage in translation as an art and as a science. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 472 | TRANSLATION LANGUAGE-PAIR PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This is a skill-building translation course in which students receive translation training in their language pair. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 473 | CONSECUTIVE INTERPRETING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course trains students in the practice of consecutive interpreting, including memory training and note-taking skills. Students practice interpreting in the consecutive mode from and into English using a variety of speech types, and receive feedback from the instructor and/or external assessors as necessary. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 474 | SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course trains students in the practice of simultaneous interpreting. Students practice interpreting in the simultaneous mode from and into English using a variety of speech types, and receive feedback from the instructor and/or external assessors as necessary. This course requires a minimum of intermediate proficiency in a language other than English. If you have questions about your language proficiency, please contact the Director of the Translator and Interpreter Corps for guidance.

MOL 479 | TRANSLATION/INTERPRETING PRACTICUM | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course, which is designed for students pursuing a certificate in Translation and Interpreting Studies (TIS), provides students with an opportunity to gain practical experience in translation and/or interpreting, under the guidance of the instructor. In consultation with the instructor, students will identify an appropriate translation and/or interpreting project and work on it throughout the quarter with the goal of completing it by the end of the quarter. Students pursuing a TIS certificate are advised to take this course after completing all other certificate courses or concurrently with the last one, if possible. If scheduling or other considerations make this infeasible, this course can be taken at any time by any student who has the necessary skills needed to undertake the project. Students who are not pursuing a TIS certificate and are interested in this course should contact the instructor to discuss whether the class is a good fit for them.

MOL 496 | MAMOL CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

As the required capstone course for the M.A. program in Modern Languages, MOL 496 requires students to reflect on their coursework and the materials that they have produced for their portfolios in order to articulate a coherent vision of their experience in the program. It encourages them to learn from each other's professional interests, builds community among them, and facilitates interactive learning. The course employs a seminar design that is intentionally flexible, and varies depending upon the participating students' goals and objectives. Class sessions will focus on the common issues and concerns that all students face as "language professionals." In addition, each student must select a representative work (the portfolio project), create an overview and commentary text on this work, and present the work to the class. Each student's portfolio and project (whether a thesis, internship, or creative work) will reflect his or her own intellectual interests and professional goals.

MOL 497 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN MODERN LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

See schedule for current offerings.

MOL 498 | STUDY ABROAD | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course may only be used as a free elective for students in the School of Music. Junior Year Experiential Learning.

MUS 210 | MUSICIANSHIP IV | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

(Autumn) An integrated study of theory/history pertaining to music of the 19th and early 20th century. Activities include readings, listenings, analysis, and theory exercises.

MUS 211 | AURAL TRAINING IV | 1 quarter hour

(Undergraduate)

A six-quarter sequence of sight-singing and dictation, organized in coordination with the musicianship curriculum. Each quarter is a prerequisite for the following level. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 131 is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 212A | MUSIC THEORY IV | 2 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

The study of theory including consistent chromaticism and modulation. Analysis of 19th century music in all genres.

MUS 130A is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 212B | MUSIC HISTORY IV | 1 quarter hour

(Undergraduate)

Music of the Romantic period from 1820 to 1880.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 213 | GROUP PIANO IV | 1 quarter hour

(Undergraduate)

The fourth of six courses in a two year (six-quarter) sequence of two one-hour classes per week using electronic piano labs. Curriculum is organized on the basis of six levels of functional keyboard competence, coordinated with the two-year Musicianship Studies experience described above. Emphasis is on sight-reading, harmonization, theory, score-reading, accompanying and ensemble playing. Note: Students with extensive previous keyboard experience may complete the competence requirements in fewer than six quarters. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 133 is a prerequisite for this course.

MUS 220 | MUSICIANSHIP V | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

An integrated study of theory/history pertaining to music of the 20th and 21st centuries. Activities include readings, listening, analysis, and theory exercises.

MUS 221 | AURAL TRAINING V | 1 quarter hour

(Undergraduate)

A six-quarter sequence of sight-singing and dictation, organized in coordination with the musicianship curriculum. Each quarter is a prerequisite for the following level. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 211 is a prerequisite for this course.

MUS 222-A | MUSIC THEORY V - A | 2 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Music Theory V focuses on the music and materials of 20th century concert music. The course will provide an introduction to key theoretical concepts associated with a range of musical aesthetic trends from throughout the past century, connecting them to a larger musical context that includes jazz, popular music and global music cultures. Activities and assignments will focus on analytical and theoretical exercises, composition projects, and, of course, listening. All of these are intended to increase and strengthen your evolving abilities to analyze, think about, and write about music.

MUS 222-B | MUSIC THEORY V - B | 2 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Music Theory V focuses on the music and materials of 20th century concert music. The course will provide an introduction to key theoretical concepts associated with a range of musical aesthetic trends from throughout the past century, connecting them to a larger musical context that includes jazz, popular music and global music cultures. Activities and assignments will focus on analytical and theoretical exercises, composition projects, and, of course, listening. All of these are intended to increase and strengthen your evolving abilities to analyze, think about, and write about music.

MUS 222-C | MUSIC THEORY V - C | 2 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Music Theory V addresses diverse musical genres in the 20th century, focusing mainly American music, from ragtime to symphonic, blues, jazz and rock. Students will study the building blocks of these musical languages by reading, listening, analyzing, transcribing, composing, and playing or singing. All of these are intended to increase and strengthen students' evolving abilities to analyze, think about, and write about music.

MUS 222A | MUSIC THEORY V | 2 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

The study of theory including post-tonal theory as applied to music from 1900 to 1950.

MUS 212A is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 222B | MUSIC HISTORY V | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

Music from 1880 to 1950.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 223 | GROUP PIANO V | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

The fifth of six courses in a two year (six-quarter) sequence of two one-hour classes per week using electronic piano labs. Curriculum is organized on the basis of six levels of functional keyboard competence, coordinated with the two-year Musicianship Studies experience described above. Emphasis is on sight-reading, harmonization, theory, score-reading, accompanying and ensemble playing. Note: Students with extensive previous keyboard experience may complete the competence requirements in fewer than six quarters. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 213 is a prerequisite for this course.

MUS 224 | MUSIC, HISTORY, AND CULTURE I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to Musicology in ways that enhance their understanding of musical works as artifacts of a given period, society, and culture. Students will be exposed to the tools and techniques that illuminate the creation and reception of musical compositions in the period, through the study of selected exemplars. This course primarily covers composers, concepts, and works from early music through the Baroque period.

MUS 225 | MUSIC, HISTORY, AND CULTURE II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to Musicology in ways that enhance their understanding of musical works as artifacts of a given period, society, and culture. Students will be exposed to the tools and techniques that illuminate the creation and reception of musical compositions in the period, through the study of selected exemplars. This course primarily covers composers, concepts, and works from the Classical, Romantic, Modernism, and the contemporary period.

MUS 226 | GLOBAL MUSIC CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Global Music Cultures introduces students to a variety of musical traditions from classical, folk, and popular idioms from around the world. Students will develop analytic and listening skills and learn the cultural and historical contexts for these traditions, but also reflect more generally on musical practices from a global perspective. This course satisfies a Culture and History Through Music requirement for undergraduate music majors in the DePaul University School of Music. To satisfy the musicianship requirement, you must earn a C- or better.

MUS 230 | MUSICIANSHIP VI | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

History of music of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance; readings of texts and articles; study of specific works.

MUS 231 | AURAL TRAINING VI | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

A six-quarter sequence of sight-singing and dictation, organized in coordination with the musicianship curriculum. Each quarter is a prerequisite for the following level. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 221 is a prerequisite for this course.

MUS 232 | MUSIC THEORY VI | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The study of theory including topics in new music from 1950 to the present.

MUS 222A is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 232A | MUSIC THEORY VI-A: CONCEPTS AND MATERIALS IN CONTEMPORARY MUSIC | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theory VI (MUS 232A) focuses on the materials and methods of 20th and 21st century concert music. With that in mind, the course will discuss innovative compositional techniques, prominent theoretical concepts, and influential stylistic and aesthetic trends from throughout the past century, focusing mostly on developments since World War II. Activities and assignments will include assigned readings and listening. All of these are intended to increase and strengthen your understanding of contemporary music.

MUS 232B | MUSIC THEORY VI-B: ANALYSIS OF MUSICAL FORM | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Using Classical formal templates as a frame, Analysis of Musical Form focuses on understanding the elements of form in concert music and how they work together within a composition. Students will apply concepts and skills acquired during Music Theory I-V in an analytical context with the goal of being able to gain insight into a composition on multiple structural and musical levels.

MUS 232C | ANALYSIS OF GLOBAL MUSIC TRADITIONS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

MUS 232C focuses on building student's analytic, critical thinking, listening, and familiarity with diverse performance practices and applying these them to understanding global musical traditions. This course focuses specific musical traditions that may from court, folk, popular, religious, and/or vernacular music from around the globe.

MUS 233 | GROUP PIANO VI | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

The last of six courses in a two year (six-quarter) sequence of two one-hour classes per week using electronic piano labs. Curriculum is organized on the basis of six levels of functional keyboard competence, coordinated with the two-year Musicianship Studies experience described above. Emphasis is on sight-reading, harmonization, theory, score-reading, accompanying and ensemble playing. Note: Students with extensive previous keyboard experience may complete the competence requirements in fewer than six quarters. (1 quarter hour)

MUS 223 is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 265 | MUSICAL TRADITIONS OF AMERICA AND THE WORLD | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the musical styles of world cultures and jazz. Required of all music majors. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 270 | MUSIC FOR DANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores music / dance collaboration. It traces popular and social dancing through their journey back to their indigenous, ritual, and cultural origins. Students will gain a deeper understanding of two art forms: music and dance, and the common elements between the two. It also provides a framework for understanding and exploring interdisciplinary and experiential collaborations between musicians/composers and dancers/choreographers. In exploring the relationship between music and dance, students will learn vocabulary appropriate to identify and describe common inherent qualities of both music and dance through listening, watching, and doing informed by practical exploration, and historical context. Core instruction will comprise lectures alongside listening activities, group discussion, and practical demonstrations. Students will develop critical listening skills and key musical vocabulary to enable them to analyze, interpret, and respond to historically significant works from a diverse body of relevant genres. Assessment will be based on student participation in online and offline discussions, and their demonstration of the use and understanding of appropriate vocabulary.

MUS 272 | MUSIC AND VISUAL ART | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Appreciative approach to the styles of selected 20th-century artists and composers. Arts and Literature.

MUS 274 | THE GOSPEL MUSIC TRADITION IN AMERICA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The origins, people, context, and spirit of gospel music. Arts and Literature.

MUS 277 | GUIDE TO MUSIC THEORY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The advanced study of notation and elemental theory for non-music majors. Online drills and short composition studies will be included as course activities.

MUS 278 | JAZZ | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A comprehensive study of the origins and developments of jazz, specifically concentrated on important jazz styles and performers since 1917. Arts and Literature.

MUS 280 | POPULAR MUSIC OF AFRICA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course surveys a wide variety of popular music genres, songs, and performers from the continent of Africa. Students will learn about the cultural context and history of various pop music genres as well as how to recognize key stylistic features.

MUS 281 | OPERA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class surveys the history and styles of opera from its beginning through the present, with a focus on examples from the 18th through the 20th centuries. While students will learn to identify major operatic styles, a major focus of the course will be the contribution music makes to drama in the context of opera. We will work on developing a vocabulary for discussing the music of opera and its interaction with the stories opera tells.

MUS 282 | LOVE SONGS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will investigate case studies of love songs in the Western tradition, considering contemporary conventions, the response of composers and poets to expectations, and the relation between first-person song and autobiography. In this interdisciplinary class, students will explore the historically contingent nature of musical and poetic convention, changing ideas of love and gender relationships, and the importance of biography in the reception of love songs. While the course will have a broad historical scope, an emphasis on modern popular music will allow students to apply critical reading and listening skills to the music they already appreciate.

MUS 283 | INTRODUCTION TO LYRIC WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

MUS 284 | CINEMATIC SOUNDS: THE ROLE OF MUSIC IN FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course surveys the history of film music in the 20th century. Students will learn to identify the formal elements of both cinema and film music, and the various ways these elements can be combined to create a sense of narrative, genre, or spectacle.

MUS 303 | BASIC CONDUCTING PRACTICUM | 0 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to ensemble conducting. Students will learn to prepare a score and to execute a rehearsal with a live ensemble. Topics include score study, rehearsal skills, critical listening skills, and physical conducting skills. This course must be taken concurrently with Basic Conducting (MUS 304). (0 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 304 | BASIC CONDUCTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to ensemble conducting. Students will learn to prepare a score and to execute a rehearsal with a live ensemble. Topics include score study, rehearsal skills, critical listening skills, and physical conducting skills. COREQUISITE: Basic Conducting Practicum (MUS 303).

MUS 130A is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 305 | MUSICAL ENCOUNTERS OF THE PORTUGUESE EMPIRE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the role that music played in encounters between Europeans traveling on behalf of the Portuguese Empire and the cultures colonized by the Portuguese beginning in fifteenth century and continuing today in post-colonial contexts. This course will also examine the musical genres that developed as a result of cross-cultural contact. Musical case studies are selected from different historical periods and diverse cultures and geographical areas encompassed by the Portuguese Empire: Portugal, Asia, Africa, and South America. This class will include listening and reading assignments, and students will have the opportunity to further explore an area of interest in a research project on a topic of their choice. Arts and Literature.

MUS 306 | PUNK ROCK THROUGH THE YEARS: ISSUES & AESTHETICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the aesthetic, political, and social issues that have shaped the development of punk rock and its various sub-genres in the United States and the United Kingdom since the early 1970's.

MUS 308 | ANALYTICAL TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Investigation of various analytical approaches to music syntax, structure, style and texture (including timbral and vocal or instrumental configurations) as exhibited in representative compositions from late Baroque to the 20th century. Intended for Bachelor of Arts majors.

MUS 310 | INTRODUCTION TO ETHNOMUSICOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the discipline of ethnomusicology, the study of why and how people around the world experience music. Students explore key themes and research methodology of ethnomusicology through selected readings, sound recordings, documentary film, live performances, site visits, and class discussions. Students complete an independent fieldwork project.

MUS 319 | DALCROZE EURHYTHMICS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide students with a physical approach to understanding musical concepts and aesthetics through the philosophy of Emile Jaques-Dalcroze, which offers an experiential way of knowing music through the body.

MUS 320 | INTRODUCTION TO WORLD MUSIC | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the study of the music and styles of non-western cultures.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 321 | INTRODUCTION TO JAZZ HISTORY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the major styles, performers and composers of jazz.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 322 | ADVANCED MUSICIANSHIP | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Specific topics in music (e.g., Sonata Form in the Early Classic Period, Symphonic Poems in the Late 19th Century) that require the student to combine analytic and musicological approaches to the material. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 323 | MUSICOLOGY SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The seminar in musicology engages students in an in-depth study of a specific topic and advances their understanding of subject matter, analysis, and communication about music. Although seminar topics vary by quarter, each seminar in musicology shares learning outcomes and writing expectations that emphasize developing tools for engaging with musical topics in an in-depth way.

MUS 360 | TOPICS IN MUSICIANSHIP | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An in-depth investigation of a topic in musicianship studies. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 379 | BAROQUE MUSIC | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(2 hours) This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during the Baroque period, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 381 | HISTORY OF OPERA | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A history of opera from the 17th century to the present. Emphasis on the development of musical style with particular reference to significant operas, musical examples, and recordings. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 386 | MUSIC SINCE WORLD WAR II | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during post World War II period, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 387 | EARLY 20TH CENTURY MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is concerned with the history and development of musical styles and procedures during the early 20th Century, with reference to significant compositions, musical examples, and recordings.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 389 | TUNING SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide advanced music students with an introduction to both the development of theoretical tuning systems and their practical application. Supplemented by relevant readings from both historical treatises and recent scholarship, students will learn several influential theoretical tuning systems (Pythagorean, Meantone, Equal-temperament, Just Intonation) via works that explore them. Analytical application of these systems in vocal, instrumental and electronic music will increase the student's musical repertoire while tracing the historical development and practical application of tuning systems. A final project will provide the student an important opportunity to apply these concepts to a work of their choosing.

MUS 395 | SENIOR CAPSTONE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to fulfill the senior capstone experience for School of Music Bachelors of Arts students only. Students will develop a final project, culminating their musical studies in relationship to their liberal arts studies. The individual projects should reflect an advanced level of musical understanding, scholarship, and writing. The School of Music faculty member will meet with the students in a biweekly seminar throughout the quarter, and on an individual basis as needed.

Status as a Bachelor of Arts in Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 398 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An in-depth study of a musicianship topic under the supervision of a faculty member. (Departmental permission required). (variable credit)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 400 | MUSIC RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to music research types and techniques; bibliography and bibliographical sources; the development of writing skills; analysis of research examples.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 408 | ANALYTICAL TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Investigation of various analytical approaches to music syntax, structure, style and texture (including timbral and vocal or instrumental configurations) as exhibited in representative compositions from many historical periods. Intended as an overview of theory/analysis for graduate students.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 420 | HISTORY OF THE ORATORIO | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An analytical and historical study of oratorio literature from 1600 to the present.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 421 | MUSIC AND POLITICS OF BRAZIL | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines Brazilian popular music, the music of religious practices, regional folk traditions, and 19th-century European dance music and the political, cultural, and economic contexts of these musics.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 435 | 18th & 19th WIND HISTORY AND LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A historical connection exists between wind music of the ancient and medieval periods, and the music of today. This course will trace that historical line, focusing on the 18th & 19th Centuries. The development of repertoire as well as the functions and uses of wind music will be explored. It is the intention of this class to address the needs of people who will perform, conduct, or teach "classical" wind music as part of a career. Emphasis will be placed on original music suitable for professional concert performance.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 436 | 20th CENTURY WIND HISTORY AND LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The role of this course is to inform students of the development of wind music through the exploration of ensemble size and instrumentation, civic or artistic purpose, influential composers and conductors, and specific repertoire.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 460 | TOPICS IN MUSICIANSHIP | 2-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An in-depth investigation of a topic in musicianship studies. (2 quarter hours)

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 475 | MEDIEVAL MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Historical survey of music from the Middle Ages: sacred and secular music as artistic, theoretical, and intellectual expression of the Middle Ages; history of musical styles to 1420; performance practice issues.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 478 | RENAISSANCE MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Historical survey of music from the Renaissance. Musical style, compositional procedures, and performance practice are studied, within the social, political and economic environment in which the composers worked.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 479 | BAROQUE MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Historical survey of Baroque music and performance practice.

Representative examples of both vocal and instrumental music are studied, mostly using the analytical techniques of the period, with the aim of becoming familiar with the most significant manners of composition of Baroque composers.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 481 | HISTORY OF OPERA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course surveys the history of opera in western culture from its beginnings in the 17th century through the 20th century. The class materials cover stylistic trends and genres as demonstrated through seminal works. Each class period will contain a relevant analytical study.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 482 | WORLD MUSIC CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This graduate course will provide a global musical perspective and widen the lens through which students experience music. Through lectures, listening, guest performances, and engaging discussion students will gain rich insights into new worlds of music.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 484 | CLASSICAL MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Traces the development of musical style during the Classical Era through the analytical study of examples in the principal musical forms such as sonata form. Reception and performance practice then and now will be addressed.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 485 | ROMANTIC MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Survey of nineteenth century music through a close analysis of representative Romantic works. The course will cover the expansion of both harmonic language and form leading to their eventual breakdown and reinterpretation.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 486 | MUSIC SINCE WORLD WAR II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course surveys Western art music and related theoretical and technical issues from near the end of World War II to the present focusing on the development of new musical languages, new instruments and new methods of analysis.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 487 | 20TH CENTURY MUSIC BEFORE WWII | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course surveys Western art music and related theoretical and technical issues from near the end of the 19th century to World War II, focusing on the new musical languages and aesthetics developed from 1890 until 1940.

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

MUS 498 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An in-depth study of a musicianship topic under the supervision of a faculty member. (Departmental permission required). (variable credit)

Status as a Graduate Music Performance student (degree or certificate) is a prerequisite for this class.

Network Technologies (NET)

NET 261 | BASIC COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS (FORMERLY TDC 261) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(Formerly TDC 361) Introduction to voice, data, and multi-media network communications fundamentals. Wired, Wireless, and Optical applications in Local, Metropolitan, Wide Area Networks are explored. The overview explains how technical, regulatory, competitive, standardization and cultural factors impact modern network applications. Approved for Scientific Inquiry credit. PREREQUISITE(S): NONE.

NET 311 | COMPUTERS IN TELECOMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS (FORMERLY TDC 311) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to computer architecture and operating systems with an emphasis on network systems. Topics covered include computer components and functions, logic circuits, process management, memory management, file management, interrupts and I/O peripheral devices, as well as computer networks, distributed systems, and network administration. Students will have several hands-on labs utilizing a Linux environment and will use Shell script for basic systems and network administration as well.

IT 263 and (IT 211 or CSC 241 or CSC 243) are prerequisites for this class.

NET 351 | NETWORKING FOR THE INTERNET OF THINGS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will cover networking for low-power devices, focusing on the Internet of Things (IoT). Our emphasis will be on energy-efficient network design and implementation, and topics will cover design challenges in scalability, interoperability, and performance evaluation. This course will establish foundations for leveraging Cloud Computing variants (Fog, Cloudlets and Cloud) for improving network operation and IoT data management. Students will learn how to formally model and design protocols for IoT systems, and gain practical experience in developing IoT prototypes in a course-long team-based project. The course will also cover recent developments in Cellular IoT infrastructures, and will address security vulnerabilities and challenges in CPS systems. The broader scope of Cyber Physical Systems (CPS) will be addressed both in design and integration with IoT systems.

IT 263 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 362 | PRINCIPLES OF DATA COMMUNICATIONS (FORMERLY TDC 362) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Theory and components of data communication systems, modes, codes, and error detection techniques for data transmission, network protocols and line control procedures, communication carrier facilities and system planning.

(NET 311 or CSC 373) and (IT 263 or NET 261) are prerequisites for this class.

NET 363 | INTRODUCTION TO LOCAL AREA NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 363) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course covers the principles of local area network (LAN) technologies including protocols, hardware, LAN software and design concepts. The course will focus on the lower layers of the OSI model and explore Ethernet, bridging/switching, VLANs, securing the network and Spanning-tree and Rapid-Spanning-tree protocols. Basic inter-VLAN routing will also be investigated. The course will involve several extensive lab exercises and troubleshooting activities to help reinforce the concepts.

NET 261 or IT 263 is the prerequisite for this class.

NET 364 | VOICE COMMUNICATIONS TECHNOLOGIES (FORMERLY TDC 364) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A detailed study of transmission, signaling and switching systems for facilities-based public and private voice networks. Voice digitization and transmission over circuit-switched and packet-switched infrastructures. Computer telephony integration techniques. Quality of service issues in integrated voice-over-data systems. Course may include laboratory work with PBX lab.

IT 263 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 365 | NETWORK INTERCONNECTION TECHNOLOGIES (FORMERLY TDC 365) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A comprehensive study of network interconnection technologies including layer 2 bridges and switches, layer 3 routers and higher-layer gateways. The TCP and IP protocols will be studied in detail, including IP address management and router operations and management along with associated Internet protocols. RIP and OSPF protocols will be considered. Course includes laboratory work with protocol analyzers and router administration.

NET 363 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 368 | NETWORK PROGRAMMING (FORMERLY TDC 368) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Programming distributed client/server applications; the sockets interface and multitasking issues; client/server models; remote procedure call; examples of applications such as electronic mail and file transfer.

CSC 309 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 369 | NETWORK PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS AND DESIGN (FORMERLY TDC 369) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Quantitative foundations of network performance analysis. Probability theory and queueing theory will be developed and applied to problems in LAN performance, traffic engineering, and the analysis of throughput and response time measures for data communications networks. Performance tradeoffs in network design.

NET 371 | WIRELESS COMMUNICATIONS NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 371) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A survey of modern wireless technologies with an emphasis on cellular and personal connection technologies. Topics include wireless system operations, management, signaling, security, planning and maintenance. Realization of real-time and non-real-time traffic, VoIP, Voice over LTE (VoLTE), and Quality-of-Service (QoS). Some assignments may use the 5G De-Mobile Lab facilities.

NET 261 or IT 263 is the prerequisite for this class.

NET 372 | WAN SERVICES (FORMERLY TDC 372) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A survey of Wide Area Network services used to securely access and interconnect business network services. Topics will include T-carrier and SONET transport, Digital Subscriber Line (DSL), and wireless data access methods, as well as Multi-Protocol Label Switching, Virtual Private Networks and Software Defined Networks.

NET 365 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 375 | NETWORK PROTOCOLS (FORMERLY TDC 375) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced routing technologies, BGP protocols, multi-area routing protocols, network management protocols, Secure protocols, IP multicasting protocols.

NET 365 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 376 | NETWORK PROJECT (FORMERLY TDC 376) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Case study in developing a large network project. Students will work in groups to analyze and design a major network system.

NET 377

NET 377 | FUNDAMENTALS OF NETWORK SECURITY (FORMERLY TDC 377) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Fundamentals of Network security design and implementation. Review of components used in an enterprise security infrastructure including routers, firewalls, security auditing and assessment tools, Virtual Private Networks (VPN) and Intrusion Detection Systems (IDS). The integration of the different components will be studied in detail, including IP addressing, Network Address Translation (NAT), design of firewall rule sets and performance considerations. Course includes laboratory work with routers, firewalls, Virtual Private Networks and security assessment tools.

NET 365 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 378 | INFORMATION STORAGE AND MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 378) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides a comprehensive overview of network-based storage technology and information storage infrastructure. Major topics include the storage architectures, service features, and benefits of Intelligent Storage Systems. Networked storage technologies include fiber channel (FC), based Storage Area Network (SAN), Network Attached Storage (NAS), and IP-SAN. Advanced storage technologies on Content Addressed Storage (CAS), information security, and storage virtualization are also discussed.

NET 379 | TELECOMMUNICATION AND NETWORK SECURITY PRACTICUM (FORMERLY TDC 379) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Design and implementation of telecommunication and network security infrastructure. This laboratory-based class includes the setup of realistic network infrastructure environment using bridges, routers, layer 2/3 switches and servers. Advanced routing infrastructure implementation using OSPF, RIPv2, EIGRP, BGP, multi-homed BGP setups and IGP/EGP redistribution. Network infrastructure hardening using routers and switches.

NET 365 or Instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class. Good knowledge of TCP/IP is required.

NET 384 | SCRIPTING FOR NETWORK MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 384) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a hands-on course on using script languages to develop practical applications for Network Management. Students will first learn the fundamentals of Linux system and script language(s) for task automation, and use scripts to develop dynamic web sites. After that, the course will cover Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP), and use Application Programming Interface (API) to automate networks tasks of Fault Management, Configuration Management, Accounting Management, Performance Management, and Security Management (FCAPS). The final project of the course is to develop a dynamic web site with the above five functional areas to manage Linux servers, Ethernet switches and IP routers.

NET 311 or CSEC 378 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 390 | TOPICS IN NETWORK TECHNOLOGY (FORMERLY TDC 390) | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and will vary with each quarter. Prerequisite(s): See syllabus.

NET 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY (FORMERLY TDC 399) | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable credit.

NET 405 | NETWORK FUNDAMENTALS (FORMERLY TDC 405) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides an introduction to data networking technologies, including Ethernet and Internet data technologies, network security, business applications and network management.

NET 411 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTER AND NETWORK SYSTEMS (FORMERLY TDC 411) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to computer architecture and operating systems with an emphasis on network systems. Topics covered include computer components and functions, logic circuits, process management, memory management, file management, interrupts and I/O peripheral devices, as well as computer networks, distributed systems, and network administration. Students will have several hands-on labs utilizing a Linux and Cisco IOS environment and will use Shell script for basic systems and network administration as well. PREREQUISITE(S): None.

NET 413 | INTRODUCTION TO LAN TECHNOLOGIES (FORMERLY TDC 413)
| 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course covers the principles of local area network (LAN) technologies including structured cabling, protocols, network devices, and network operating systems. Students will learn the theories and practices of designing, provisioning, and deploying LAN technologies in an enterprise environment.

NET 405 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 431 | EMERGING WIRELESS AND MOBILITY NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 431) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A study of evolving 2.5, 3rd & 4th Generation Wireless Networks, and disruptive technologies like WiFi(802.11), WiMax, Bluetooth, RFID, Ultra-Wideband and the security implications mobility networks. This course provides a balanced view of the Wireless Industry in transition, through evolving technology, regulation, competition and standards. Students will be better prepared to deal with the rapid changes and seize the opportunities as data mobility impacts traditional telecommunications and private networks. In addition students will have access to extensive Global Wireless Education Consortium materials to support their individual advanced interests.

NET 413 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 451 | NETWORKING FOR THE INTERNET OF THINGS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will delve into the design and modelling of Internet of Things (IoT) devices. The course will focus on the inherent challenges in designing low-power communication systems, and cover a number of leading architectures, standards and interfaces for IoT networks. The emphasis will be on energy-efficient network design and implementation, and topics will cover design challenges in scalability, interoperability, and performance evaluation. The topics will include formal design and modelling in IoT systems, including the use of Resource Description Framework (RDF). The topics covering IoT operation will build on prominent supporting technologies, such as Cloud/Edge computing and Information Centric Networks. Students will gain practical experience in developing IoT prototypes in a course-long team-based project. The course will also cover recent developments in Cellular IoT infrastructures, and will address security vulnerabilities and challenges in IoT systems.

NET 413 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 460 | FOUNDATIONS OF NETWORK TECHNOLOGIES (FORMERLY TDC 460) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introductory course on network technologies for local and wide area networks. The course examines in detail the core concepts for network architectures, Ethernet systems including wired, wireless, and Metro, virtual local area networks, storage area networks, optical networking, and the more traditional network services such as T-1, frame relay, Asynchronous Transfer Mode (ATM), and SONET.

NET 405 and NET 413 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 463 | COMPUTER NETWORKS AND DATA SYSTEMS (FORMERLY TDC 463) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A detailed discussion of the upper layers of network architectures. Network protocol organization will be discussed using TCP/IP as an example. IP addresses, subnetting, supernetting, and CIDR. Routing algorithms. Transport layer protocols. Application layer protocols. Introduction to IPv6.

NET 405 and NET 413 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 464 | CONVERGED MULTIMEDIA NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 464) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Exploration of multimedia networks including voice, data, and video services offered by network carriers and Internet Service Providers (ISP) to both enterprise and residential customers. The course starts with an overview of current voice and data networks and presents the driving forces leading to a converged multimedia network. The focus is on Voice over IP (VoIP), including signaling, protocols, equipment, network architecture/design, traffic engineering, and service deployment strategy.

NET 413 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 468 | NETWORK PROGRAMMING (FORMERLY TDC 468) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course covers the basic and advanced issues of TCP/IP networking programming such as multiple processes, I/O multiplexing, multi-threaded processes, multicasting and secure network programming USING C/C++. Application examples such as Internet browsing, instant messaging, proxy filtering and file transfer protocols are discussed.

(NET 463 OR CSC 435) and CSC 404 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 477 | NETWORK SECURITY (FORMERLY TDC 477) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Network infrastructure security issues, including perimeter security defense, firewalls, Virtual Private Networks, Intrusion Detection Systems, wireless security, network security auditing tools and ethical considerations. Strategies for the deployment of "Defense-In-Depth" mechanisms in an enterprise computing environment.

NET 463 or CSC 435 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 478 | INFORMATION STORAGE AND MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 478) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a comprehensive overview of network-based storage technology and information storage infrastructure. Major topics include the storage architectures, service features, and benefits of Intelligent Storage Systems. Networked storage technologies include fiber channel (FC), based Storage Area Network (SAN), Network Attached Storage (NAS), and IP-SAN. Advanced storage technologies on Content Addressed Storage (CAS), information security, and storage virtualization are also discussed.

NET 484 | SCRIPTING FOR NETWORK MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 484) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a hands-on course on using script languages to develop practical applications for Network Management. Students will first learn the fundamentals of Linux system and script language(s) for task automation, and use scripts to develop dynamic web sites. After that, the course will cover Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP), and use Application Programming Interface (API) to automate networks tasks of Fault Management, Configuration Management, Accounting Management, Performance Management, and Security Management (FCAPS). The final project of the course is to develop a dynamic web site with the above five functional areas to manage Linux servers, Ethernet switches and IP routers.

NET 411 and NET 413 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 511 | TELECOMMUNICATIONS PRACTICUM (FORMERLY TDC 511) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to the design and management of data networks for the enterprise environment. Network design includes physical design, logical design, LAN, WAN, and experimental design. Network managements includes switch, router, and firewall configuration, SNMP configuration, performance measurement, and network trouble shooting. Students will have many hands-on lab exercises to strengthen their learning of network concepts.

NET 463 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 512 | CELLULAR AND WIRELESS TELECOMMUNICATIONS (FORMERLY TDC 512) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An introductory course in cellular and wireless communications with an emphasis in 4G Long Term Evolution (LTE) and LTE-Advanced cellular networks. Topics include principles of digital wireless communications, cellular architecture, radio access deployment, core network deployment, subscriber management, mobility and session management, security, roaming, interconnection, Self-Optimizing Networks (SON), Voice over LTE (VoLTE), and LTE-Advanced upgrades. Student lab assignments may use LTE network equipment deployed in the School of Computing De-Mobile Lab.

NET 464 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 514 | COMPUTER TELEPHONY (FORMERLY TDC 514) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A study of enabling technologies allowing the integration of voice communications services with personal computers, LANs and mainframes. Telephony programming interfaces, call management software, intelligent fax/data retrieval and interactive voice response systems will be considered.

NET 463 and NET 464 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 532 | WIRELESS SYSTEM ENGINEERING AND DEPLOYMENT (FORMERLY TDC 532) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An advanced course in cellular communications with an emphasis on LTE-Advanced and 3GPP technologies. Topics include Cellular IoT (CloT), Network Slicing, LTE support for V2x services, advanced carrier aggregation, and enhanced Licensed Assisted Access (eLAA). Students will work on applied assignments using the LTE equipment in the 5G De-Mobile Lab.

NET 512 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 542 | PROTOCOLS FOR ADVANCED WIRELESS NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 542) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides students with an in-depth study of the advanced wireless communication protocols and technologies. It starts with an overview of the wireless evolution from the first generation network to the modern and future wireless technologies. It will then go on to explore major aspects of each advanced wireless technology: air interface, smart antennas, network infrastructure, network elements and their functions, QoS, security, mobility, and performance. Wireless protocols, including both User-to-Network Interface (UNI) and Network-to-Network Interface (NNI), are also studied in detail. Students will also learn new service opportunities provided by these advanced wireless technologies.

NET 512 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 560 | ADVANCED NETWORK TECHNOLOGIES AND DESIGN (FORMERLY TDC 560) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces advanced network technologies and design, including Multi-Protocol Label Switching (MPLS), MPLS Virtual Private Networks, IP storage networks, content distribution, capacity planning and traffic engineering.

NET 460 and NET 463 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 562 | COMPUTER-COMMUNICATION NETWORK DESIGN & ANALYSIS (FORMERLY TDC 562) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides an in-depth study of Internet protocols from the perspective of network planning, simulation and troubleshooting. The course includes in-depth study of Internet traffic, traffic measurement techniques, network planning and simulation using simulation tools, and packet management techniques.

NET 411 and NET 460 and NET 463 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 563 | PROTOCOLS AND TECHNIQUES FOR DATA NETWORKS (FORMERLY TDC 563) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Advanced topics in TCP/IP including in-depth study of IPv6, TCP traffic control, and routing protocols; multicast routing protocols; upper layer protocols supporting Quality of Service (QoS); Software Defined Network (SDN); data compression techniques; and other advances in networking technologies.

NET 411 and NET 460 and NET 463 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 567 | TELECOMMUNICATION SYSTEMS DESIGN AND MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 567) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The theory and practice of Telecommunication system design. Ongoing systems management. Telecommunication management including selection of vendors/systems, structuring an RFP systems proposal analysis, computer aided telecommunications management. Telecommunication management strategies from a business perspective.

NET 411 and NET 460 and NET 463 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 568 | NETWORK MANAGEMENT (FORMERLY TDC 568) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The five major areas of network management—fault management, performance management, security, accounting and configuration management—are discussed. Advanced topics such as fault diagnosis and isolation, event correlation, MIB design, SNMP programming, performance monitoring, service level agreements and network security architectures are also discussed.

NET 411 and NET 460 and NET 463 are prerequisites for this class.

NET 577 | NETWORK SECURITY II (FORMERLY TDC 577) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an advanced class in network security. Topics include: Intrusion Detection and Prevention Systems; Security Engineering processes; Advanced firewall considerations; Honeypots; Incident response; Forensics; Enterprise security policy development and complex enterprise security infrastructure design and integration.

NET 477 is a prerequisite for this class.

NET 593 | TOPICS IN NETWORK ENGINEERING AND SECURITY (FORMERLY TDC 593) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and will vary with each quarter. Prerequisite(s): See syllabus.

NET 594 | NETWORK CAPSTONE (FORMERLY TDC 594) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this class students will synthesize knowledge from previous courses to design, build, test, and demonstrate a comprehensive network project as members of a project team. Topics introduced or reviewed, and used in completing the project, will include network requirement analysis, network architecture design, vendor evaluation, planning, experimental design, physical design, logical design, security design, testing strategy, documentation, change management, and network management strategy. Other topics include reasoning about uncertain user requirements, negotiation, online meeting techniques, and group dynamics. PREREQUISITE(S): TDC 477 and TDC 511.

NET 477 and NET 511 are prerequisites for this class.

Neuroscience (NEU)

NEU 120 | THE BRAIN THROUGH SCIENCE FICTION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is a "Science as a Way of Knowing" (SWK) course that examines applications of neuroscience, the study of the brain and the nervous system, through describing some well-known works of science fiction, from the early 1800s (Frankenstein) to modern times (Inception, Westworld).

NEU 201 | INTRODUCTION TO NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class will introduce the structure and function of the nervous system as well as approaches to study and model it. Anatomical, cellular, and molecular foundations will be covered and these will be related to behavior and cognition. Computational approaches will also be presented. A historical review will place neuroscience within its contemporary context and current approaches will be presented, discussed, and critiqued.

A grade of C- or better in BIO 191 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this course.

NEU 202 | ADVANCED NEUROSCIENCE FUNDAMENTALS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This advanced fundamentals course is designed for students who have a strong foundation in the basic principles of neuroscience and are interested in deepening their understanding of the field. The course will cover advanced topics such as neural development, aging, and diseases of the nervous system, homeostasis, and brain/body connections. Students will engage in literature research, experimental design, and novel analysis of data sets as well as exploration of careers in science.

NEU 201 or permission of the instructor are prerequisites for this class.

NEU 228 | NEUROETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines moral standards and issues as these arise in the practice of neuroscience. Advances in this field have developed unprecedented ways of understanding, predicting, and even, influencing and controlling the human mind and, through this, human behavior. Neuroethics considers the ethical dilemmas that emerge in such research and the technologies that it fosters as well as the challenges these advances pose to some of the fundamental underlying concepts of moral theory: human nature, personal identity, and moral responsibility itself. Cross listed as PHL 228.

NEU 256 | INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTATIONAL NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Provides an introduction to basic computational methods for understanding what nervous systems do and how they function. The course covers the structure of the brain, from neurons to circuits to regions, and also the computational and theoretical approaches to model the brain. The course will introduce students to the physiology of individual neurons, how they communicate through synapses and firing, and how they work together to create systems that control, learn and memorize. The course will include the application of mathematical and computational models to neural systems.

CSC 241 and NEU 201 (or consent of instructor) are prerequisites for this class.

NEU 280 | RESEARCH METHODS IN NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide students an understanding of how questions are answered in neuroscience by exploring experimental designs used in neuroscience research and individual techniques used by neuroscientists. In addition to reading about these methods, students will have hands on opportunities to conduct some of the methods discussed, as well as conduct research experiments. Lastly, students will formulate their own research question and develop a proposal to answer their question.

NEU 201 or PSY 377 or BIO 339 or NEU 339 or BIO 340 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

NEU 310 | SEMINAR IN NEUROPSYCHOPHARMACOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this discussion-based course we cover how substances from the outside world affect the brain and behavior by reviewing primary research literature. Drugs such as levodopa can be greatly beneficial in the clinic, while other substances like cocaine can lead to addiction and drug abuse. The course will focus on drug action at a molecular and cellular level, as well as drug effects on a behavioral and psychological scale.

NEU 201 and (CHE 120 or CHE 130) are prerequisites for this class.

NEU 339 | CELLULAR NEUROBIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the cellular and molecular mechanisms of neuronal function and the changes that occur in processes such as learning and memory. Emphasis on electrophysiology, synaptic communication, and cellular signaling. Cross-listed as BIO339/439.

BIO 250 (or NEU 201 or PSY 377 or HLTH 301) is a prerequisite for this class.

NEU 350 | SENSORY NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This Lecture/lab course explores how the nervous system is involved in the processing of our five senses and our responses to them. The course will explore the gross anatomical organization of the neural pathways involved in sensation and perception as well as how the energy in our environment is detected by the nervous system and turned into neural signals within these sensory pathways. The emphasis is on understanding how individual sensory behaviors are produced by different neural systems and how these individual behaviors integrate into the activities of whole organisms. Cannot receive credit for both NEU 350 and BIO 340.

NEU 201 or PSY 377 or BIO 339 or NEU 339 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class. Cannot receive credit for both NEU 350 and BIO 340.

NEU 351 | NEUROSCIENCE OF MOVEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This Lecture/lab course explores how the nervous system is involved in the creation of movement. The course will explore the gross anatomical organization of the neural pathways involved in movement, how the different categories and components of movement from reflexes to skilled movements are produced by different neural systems, and how movement is integrated into the activities of whole organisms.

NEU 201 or PSY 377 or BIO 339 or NEU 339 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class. Cannot receive credit for both NEU 350 and BIO 340.

NEU 360 | CONVERSATIONS WITH NEUROSCIENTISTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Conversations with Neuroscientists is a seminar style course where students have an opportunity to read scientific articles covering a variety of topics in neuroscience and discuss them with the author themselves. The course also examines career trajectories of the Neuroscientists who participate in the class to provide students an understanding of career options in the field.

NEU 201 or PSY 377 or BIO 339 or NEU 339 or BIO 340 or instructor consent is a prerequisite for this class.

NEU 380 | SPECIAL TOPIC IN NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A lecture and discussion based course focused on a particular topic in neuroscience. Topics may vary depending on the expertise of the instructor.

NEU 201 OR PSY 377 and Junior Standing are prerequisites for this class.

NEU 390 | NEUROSCIENCE CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a liberal studies course for seniors concluding their neuroscience major. The course will examine one topic in neuroscience from multiple viewpoints in the field of neuroscience as well as relate it to fields outside of science such as history, philosophy, religion, sociology, etc.

Senior standing and major in Neuroscience (or consent of instructor) are prerequisites for this class.

NEU 397 | RESEARCH EXPERIENCE IN NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, a student works with a faculty mentor on a research project. Under faculty supervision, the student will perform research, analyze data, and review scientific literature while working to answer a scientific question. Writing requirements include a reflection on how the research experience informed their ideas of post-graduate goals as well as a summary write up of results and conclusions. Faculty consent and a research contract is required to register for this course.

NEU 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN NEUROSCIENCE | 2-4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Experimental and/or library independent study of a topic in neuroscience. Can be repeated if the content of the independent study changes.

Status as a neuroscience major is a prerequisite for this course.

New Media Studies (NMS)

NMS 501 | PROSEMINAR IN NEW MEDIA STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The Proseminar in New Media Studies is an introduction to the field in both its academic and professional dimensions. The course addresses the humanistic and rhetorical approaches to new media that characterize the NMS program at DePaul, and helps students understand how these perspectives inform their work with new media.

NMS 502 | NEW MEDIA, OLD MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course situates current media within a history of media technologies. Students examine the historical, cultural, and social contexts in which new media emerge, as well as how and why new media come to integrate with or supplant existing media.

NMS 504 | TEXT AND IMAGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course we will explore the increasingly important dynamic between textual information and visual information. In this course we will read about how hypertext has changed the environment and nature of the written word, and we will examine how the Web has "remediated" previous media into a new dynamic. We will use this knowledge to perform analyses of visual and textual artifacts; students may also create their own artifacts.

NMS 505 | WORKSHOP/PORTFOLIO SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will have a choice between a collaborative workshop or a more individually-centered portfolio development seminar. Each group prepares a digital media project for an existing community group, such as a social service organization. Those students preferring to work independently will, under the guidance of the advising professor, develop and defend a complete portfolio of their work within the NMS program. May be repeated for elective credit.

NMS 506 | INTERNSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In consultation with the director of NMS, students design a field experience under the direction of a project director in the field. The field experience may be derived from issues raised in courses, from thesis research, or from personal research interests.

NMS 507 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In consultation with the director, advanced students may devise, with the approval of an NMS faculty member, an independent course of study that is related to the field yet does not duplicate a core or elective course already available.

NMS 508 | DESIGN RHETORICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with a theoretical foundation and practical skills in the design of rhetorically sophisticated new media objects. We will learn basic principles of visual composition, both by examining existing compositions and building our own. We will also seek to understand the way visual literacies and culture shape the rhetorical choices we make as designers and managers of new media projects.

NMS 509 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN NEW MEDIA STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

See schedule for current offerings. May be repeated for credit as topics vary.

NMS 510 | WRITING DIGITAL CONTENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course teaches students how to author written and multimodal digital content. Students also learn how to strategically deploy digital content for professional and civic purposes through such practices as content strategy, content management, and measurement analytics.

NMS 520 | WEB DESIGN I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to the process of making functional sites for display on the Internet. Students will learn HTML-based development software, and work with imaging software to apply fundamental theories of new media design to the production of working computer-screen applications.

NMS 521 | WEB DESIGN II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to digital authoring software, such as Macromedia Flash, that allows for the combination of animation, sound, and complex user interaction. Students will design and produce working animations while exploring the balance between purpose, usability, and aesthetic appeal.

NMS 530 | HTML/CSS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to fundamental web development and design languages. Students will learn HTML syntax, naming practices, and techniques for developing and structuring web pages and sites. Students will also learn how to style HTML pages with Cascading Style Sheets (CSS). While most instruction will proceed through XHTML, students will also have an opportunity to explore HTML5 and CSS3.

NMS 531 | JAVASCRIPT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to JavaScript and JavaScript libraries, focused on the rhetorical possibilities JavaScript makes available for web development. Students will learn the basics of JavaScript as a language, how it interacts with HTML and CSS, how to use it to produce dynamic and interactive structures in sites, and how to leverage existing JavaScript libraries.

NMS 540 | DIGITAL ARCHIVES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with an overview of issues related to digital archives, and hands-on experience with contemporary archiving practices. Students in NMS 540 will explore digital archiving through theoretical readings and case studies, and create or maintain digital archives for local organizations.

NMS 541 | DIGITAL STORYTELLING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Digital storytelling is a community-based media arts practice for creating first-person video narratives. This course introduces digital storytelling and its allied values of personal storytelling, participatory process, and accessible production methods. Students learn the digital storytelling methodology, create their own digital story, and explore how personal storytelling is used in organizations and communities. Some sections may include a service-learning component.

NMS 551 | USABILITY THEORY AND PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students in the class will learn the theory and history of usability, exploring how the practice developed in technical writing, web design, and new media contexts. We will explore arguments for greater user inclusion in design and development processes as well as critiques of these practices in industry. Students will develop practical experience by composing usability protocols (how to design user testing), running various kinds of usability tests with real technologies and users, interpreting results of those tests for a variety of audiences, and writing usability test reports. The course will explore the usability of technologies generally, but focus particularly on web usability.

NMS 597 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

Nursing (NSG)

NSG 200 | HEALTH AND NUTRITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an introduction to the complex interactions between nutrition, exercise, genetics, cultural factors, physiological and psychological stressors and health. Each class provides an overview on the various nutritional factors which influence the health of individuals. A population based approach is used to address the issue of world hunger and undernutrition. Multiple perspectives relating to nutrition are included such as cultural, religious, family and alternative nutritional lifestyles.

NSG 210 | PARENTING IN MULTICULTURAL FAMILY SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Families exist in complex systems of home, community and environment. Each family depends on their cultural history, previous experiences and social supports to assist with parenting. Today over 70% of families with children have two working parents. In the case of single parenting or blended families stressors are great. This course will examine the effect of culture and family traditions on parenting practices in the United States. Multiple family theories will be introduced and discussed. The primary focus is identification of child and family risk factors and strengths. Identifying positive parenting behaviors will enhance the well being, self esteem and health of the family.

NSG 230 | WOMEN'S HEALTH: THE PHYSICAL SELF | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the biological dimensions of women's health. The theoretical bases for evaluating medical research, assessing personal health, and decision-making consumerism from a feminist perspective are emphasized. An advanced-level scientific research paper due at the end of the quarter.

WRD 103 or HON 101 or HON 100 or ENG 120 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 232 | MEN'S HEALTH: THE PHYSICAL SELF | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This introductory course explores the unitary nature of men's health patterns focusing on anatomy and physiology of the major body systems emphasizing the difference in males. Health issues pertinent to these system differences in males will be presented based upon health risks, assessment, screening, diagnosis, management and treatment. Developing an understanding of male anatomy and physiology utilizing correct medical terminology to describe various parts and conditions. Elements of scientific research are explored in the context of lecture and laboratory sessions. Students select a research-based topic supported by clinical research studies to articulate their knowledge and understanding through a written paper and oral power point presentation.

NSG 260 | STATISTICS FOR THE HEALTH SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces the health science student to theory and application of probability, risk, descriptive and inferential statistics. Computer laboratory experience focuses on using data sets in clinical trials, epidemiology, and critical pathway development.

NSG 261 | INTRODUCTION TO FINANCE/ACCOUNTING IN HEALTH CARE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to basic principles, concepts, and techniques in cost accounting, reimbursement, budgeting, and financial management in health care for the practicing health professional.

NSG 290 | FUNDAMENTALS OF NURSING PRACTICE | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces the art and science of nursing by examining basic nursing skills and principles of critical thinking, problem solving, and therapeutic communication. Students integrate theoretical concepts of human growth and development, aging, stress, health promotion, education, and teaching throughout the course. Professional roles of the nurse, ethical issues, and critical thinking are explored to foster growth in knowledge and basic nursing skills and competencies. Through clinical experience students apply knowledge and provide safe, quality care to older adults in the clinical setting.?

NSG 291 | HEALTH ASSESSMENT ACROSS THE LIFESPAN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course integrates concepts and skills of health and physical assessment of children, adults, and elders. Emphasis is placed on the nursing process with focus on patient-centered care across the lifespan. Data collection, decision making, diagnostic reasoning, and critical inquiry in nursing practice are explored and practiced in the laboratory setting for the safe provision of quality care.

NSG 292 | PATHOPHYSIOLOGY FOR ALTERATION IN HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course addresses physiological and pathophysiological principles relevant to clinical practice. Building on the basic sciences, focus is on interrelationships of systems regulation and dysregulation of cellular, organ, and system function. Physiological and pathophysiological function at the cellular level is discussed for the following: metabolism and temperature regulation, acid-base balance, as well as cardiac, pulmonary, renal, hematology, immune, nervous, gastrointestinal, genitourinary, endocrinology, and reproductive systems.

NSG 293 | PHARMACOLOGY FOR ALTERATIONS IN HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces principles of pharmacodynamics with emphasis on nursing implications in the management of pharmacological therapy. Focus is on drug classifications, mechanism of action, and pharmacologic effects with emphasis on accurate dosage calculations, proper administration, and documentation. The nurse's role in the application of specific drugs in the management and treatment of disease is examined for safe and accountable medication administration across the lifespan.??

NSG 294 | NURSING THEORY FOR PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the philosophies, theories, and history of the science of nursing while examining the relationships between nursing practice and nursing science. Students will analyze and discuss theories that provide structure for nursing research and evaluate their usefulness and applicability to professional nursing practice. The role of clinician, educator, and researcher are investigated with emphasis on the contributions of nursing theorists both historical and modern who clarify and explain complex nursing concepts.??

NSG 301 | INTRODUCTION TO THE ART AND SCIENCE OF NURSING I | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The foundations of the art and science of nursing are developed through the study and practice of basic nursing skills, therapeutic communication and critical thinking in classroom, laboratory and clinical settings. Foundations are strengthened through exposure to theories of human development, aging, stress, health teaching and health promotion. Knowledge is applied to the care of older adults in the clinical setting, facilitating student understanding of individual expressions of wellness, health and illness, and the development of a professional value system. Course includes 24 lab hours and 24 clinical hours.

NSG 322 and NSG 332 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 302 | INTRODUCTION TO THE ART & SCIENCE OF NURSING II | 8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The art and science of nursing and select theories are examined to provide the basis for critical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic interventions in the provision of medical/surgical nursing care with adult/geriatric populations. The role of the nurse as a health facilitator and provider of care are emphasized in working with common medical/surgical issues. Classroom, clinical, and laboratory experiences relate to individuals and families experiencing acute and commonly occurring patterns of illness. Course includes 80 clinical hours and 3 lab hours.

NSG 301, NSG 322 and NSG 332 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 303 | INTRODUCTION TO THE ART & SCIENCE OF NURSING III | 8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The art and science of nursing and select theories are examined further as the basis for critical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic interventions in holistic nursing practice with adult/geriatric populations. The role of the nurse as a health facilitator and provider of care are emphasized in working with complex medical/surgical issues. Classroom, clinical and laboratory experiences relate to health promotion and healing of individuals and families experiencing acute and commonly occurring patterns of illness. Course includes 80 clinical hours.

NSG 302, NSG 322 and NSG 332 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 307 | ART AND SCIENCE OF NURSING IV: PSYCHIATRIC MENTAL HEALTH | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the etiology, symptomatology, and clinical management of selected mental illnesses across the lifespan. A mental health recovery approach is utilized, focusing on the multi-factorial and individualized nature of illness presentations and the need for person-centered care and multi-modal treatment. Critical thinking, compassionate communication, and therapeutic nursing interventions are applied to practicum experiences. Various psychiatric nursing roles will be explored in the contexts of health promotion, disease management and rehabilitation. Course includes 60 clinical hours.

NSG 303 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 310 | PATIENT CENTERED NURSING I: MED/SURG I | 8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the art and science of nursing theories and medical/surgical care of adults and older adults experiencing acute and chronic conditions. The application and integration of theoretical concepts and evidence-based practice are emphasized in the promotion of critical thinking, clinical reasoning, and clinical judgement in the provision of medical/surgical care of adult/geriatric populations. Classroom, laboratory, and clinical experiences focus on individuals and families in acute care settings requiring multi-dimensional, safe, and quality care.?

NSG 312 | PATIENT CENTERED NURSING II: MED/SURG II | 8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The art and science of nursing theories and medical/surgical care of adults and older adults experiencing acute and chronic conditions are examined further in this course. The application and integration of theoretical concepts and evidence-based practice are emphasized in the promotion of critical thinking, clinical reasoning, and clinical judgement in the provision of medical/surgical care of adult/geriatric populations. Classroom, laboratory, and clinical experiences focus on individuals and families in acute care settings requiring multi-dimensional, safe, and quality care.?

NSG 314 | PATIENT CENTERED NURSING III: MENTAL HEALTH | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on psychiatric-mental health nursing concepts, theoretical approaches to mental health/illness, and the care of persons of various age groups with psychiatric mental health disorders. The application of theories and implementation of evidence-based care of individuals with psychiatric/mental health issues is examined with emphasis on cultural, ethical, and legal concepts, psychosocial needs, and the wellness of individuals and their families. Clinical experience facilitates student synthesis of classroom material and content in the application of psychiatric/mental health concepts, critical thinking, and therapeutic relationships in mental health.

NSG 316 | PATIENT CENTERED CARE IV: PEDIATRICS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course applies professional nursing concepts in caring for children and their families. Focus is on the physiological, pathophysiological, developmental, and psychosocial needs of children from infancy through adolescence. Clinical experience integrates nursing care of children and families, health promotion, and acute and chronic illness management.

NSG 318 | PATIENT CENTERED NURSING: OB/MATERNITY | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course applies professional nursing concepts in the care of newborns and childbearing women experiencing actual or potential illness manifestations or injury patterns. Focus is on the physiological, pathophysiological, sociocultural, educational, and psychosocial needs of newborns, childbearing women and their families. Clinical experience integrates maternity nursing care of the neonate, childbearing woman, and their families in inpatient and outpatient settings.

NSG 320 | CRITICAL CARE CENTERED NURSING | 8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on nursing roles and responsibilities in caring for high acuity adult patients and families. Critical care concepts are examined as students synthesize knowledge and apply advanced skills in the care of adults with multi-system or emergent health problems. Advanced clinical reasoning and multidisciplinary collaboration is emphasized in the care of adults with complex fluid and hemodynamic imbalances, cardiac, neurological, respiratory, and renal conditions. Clinical experience integrates critical thinking, clinical decision making, and advanced skills in the care of high acuity patients in intensive care settings.

NSG 322 | BASIC PATHOPHYSIOLOGY AND PHARMACOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The principles of pathophysiology and pharmacology are introduced and applied in the management of pharmacological therapy. Emphasis includes the fundamental principles of drug mechanism of action, application of specific drugs in the treatment of disease, and related nursing care. To ensure patient safety, attention is given to drug administration and calculations. Developmental changes related to pathogenesis are addressed.

NSG 323 | COMMUNITY AND POPULATION HEALTH | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on community, population-focused, and public health nursing concepts as a theoretical basis to prevent, promote, maintain, and restore health to families, groups, communities, and populations. Community assessment, epidemiology, and environmental health frameworks provide an evidence-based guide for promoting and protecting the health of the public. This course integrates community service learning experiences.

NSG 325 | CONTEMPORARY HEALTH CARE ISSUES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores current issues and trends in health care systems. Emphasis is on coordination and effective use of best practices for allocating scarce resources for diverse communities from a cultural, ethical, and policy perspective. Students are expected to think critically using ethical frameworks focused on what society considers fair and just care as they explore factors that influence the health and wellness-illness continuum of human experiences. Topics include health literacy, telehealth, crises affecting health care systems, just culture, interdisciplinary global health workforce, and political environment for nursing practice.

NSG 326 | NURSING INFORMATICS AND TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on introductory concepts, frameworks, and methods of information science. Students examine health information systems, computerized health-related databases, and outcomes data from the National Database of Nursing Quality Indicators (NDNQI). This course introduces integrated patient care technologies such as patient monitoring and medication administration systems. Ethical standards related to data security, regulatory requirements, confidentiality, and clients right to privacy are examined.

NSG 327 | NURSING RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to basic research concepts, quantitative and qualitative research processes, and nursing research applications to practice. Students will develop an understanding of research and its implications for clinical practice and decision-making.

NSG 328 | QUALITY AND SAFETY FOR TRANSFORMATIONAL NURSING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The course focuses on quality and safety improvement science and implications for practice in health care work environments to promote health and minimize risk of harm. Principles of teamwork and collaboration, quality improvement, patient centered care, informatics, and evidence-based practice are analyzed at the system and individual levels.

NSG 329 | LEADERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT FOR SAFE NURSING CARE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces leadership and management through the application of theory and evidence-based concepts in professional nursing. Power, change strategies, and nursing practice legal, regulatory, and professional standards are examined. The course focuses on advocacy skills and QSEN competencies to promote a culture of safety.

NSG 330 | FOUNDATIONS OF PROFESSIONAL NURSING PRACTICE | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces the registered nurse student to the philosophy and mission of the De Paul University School of Nursing RN to MS Program. The central focus will be on the associate degree nurse transition to baccalaureate level education. Major areas of emphasis will include the evolution of nursing as a scientific professional discipline, the role of the professional nurse as a client advocate, change agent, the role of power and politics as sources of empowerment for practice, and legal, and ethical parameters in the scope of nursing practice.

NSG 331 | TRANSITION TO PROFESSIONAL NURSING | 8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides a capstone immersion experience requiring students to demonstrate competency and proficiency applying knowledge and skills from liberal arts, sciences, and nursing. This course entails 130 clock hours of direct patient care experiences. Students will utilize the art and science of professional nursing practice in a clinical setting, acknowledging cultural, spiritual, psychosocial, and community-based influences on health. Applying a multidisciplinary view of baccalaureate level nursing practice, students will develop an evidence-based nursing project that identifies a quality and safety concern within their field of interest.

NSG 332 | HEALTH ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to prepare the student to perform comprehensive physical assessments and mental status exams of the individual in the context of their family and community. Course includes 30 lab hours.

NSG 335 | LESBIAN HEALTH MATTERS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the unitary processes and experiences of health and quality of life for lesbians in diverse communities and with a range of identification and orientation. The idea that homophobia exists and serves as a significant barrier to access and to maintenance of health for lesbians underpins the course. The course uses multiple forms of scientific literature, general literature, film, and art to study the personal, ecological, and socially constructed determinants of health and quality of life. Various feminist, nursing, queer, and post-colonial perspectives on contemporary scientific and social discourse will emphasize linking health and illness with economic, social/cultural, and political dimensions of society. Concepts of personal health patterning, risk reduction, and health promotion will be stressed.

NSG 376 | COMMUNITY HEALTH NURSING FOR THE PROFESSIONAL NURSE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The emphasis of this course is on the delivery of comprehensive, culturally appropriate services to meet the continuing health needs of families, aggregates, and communities. Students will design population-focused nursing interventions to reduce assessed risk, incidence, and prevalence of community health problems. The role of the community health nurse in health promotion, disease, and injury prevention and management across the lifespan is examined, specifically across the continuum of care and coordination of services at the individual and population levels. Emphasis is placed on current trends and professional, legal/ethical, economic, cultural, and environmental issues as they apply to community health nursing.

NSG 377 | PRACTICUM: THE PROFESSIONAL NURSE AND COMMUNITY HEALTH | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides opportunities for developing the professional nurse role in community health care. Experiential learning activities focus on community assessment, health program planning and evaluation, and management of innovation at the community level. Health education and leadership development are emphasized in both public health and community-based settings involved in health care delivery for individuals, families, and communities.

NSG 376 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 380 | UNDERGRADUATE NURSING SYNTHESIS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides a capstone experience of the art and science of professional nursing practice in contemporary society with integration of the liberal studies program. Applying a multidisciplinary view of baccalaureate level nursing practice, students will identify a practice concern in their nursing field of interest and develop a quality improvement plan or policy revision recommendation from assessment to an evaluation plan.

NSG 393 | FOUNDATIONS FOR SUCCESS IN NURSING | 3 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to enhance the transition of the 3+2 Masters Entry to Nursing Practice student from undergraduate to graduate level work and from general academics to professional preparation. Students will learn the fundamentals of graduate level writing within a profession, develop critical thinking skills to enhance mastery and application of nursing content and obtain foundational knowledge of current issues in nursing and health care. The class will be taught as a hybrid and incorporate online tutorials, self-assessments and asynchronous discussion as well as face-to-face lecture, discussion and small group work.

NSG 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

INDEPENDENT STUDY (variable credit)

NSG 400 | THEORETICAL COMPONENTS OF NURSING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to examine the nature, function, and development of concepts, models, and theories for their relevance to advanced nursing practice and nursing research. The structure of theory is analyzed by examining the relationship between theoretical components. A variety of types of theoretical statements utilized to conceptualize nursing practice and research are presented and evaluated. A process for developing a conceptual framework for inquiry and data-based nursing practice is presented. Course includes 12 CbSL hours (MENP req. only).

NSG 431 (or status as an RN to MS or DNP student) is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 401 | NURSING RESEARCH I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is a seminar course emphasizing the components of the research process. Using discussions and analysis of published studies, students will examine current research problems and their associated methodological and ethical issues. Students will prepare problem statements, formulate research questions, review nursing research literature, and utilize appropriate methodologies to prepare a synthesis paper.

NSG 400 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 422 | APPLIED PATHOPHYSIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A synthesis of organic & inorganic chemistry, molecular biology, and cellular physiology that serves as a foundation for advanced understanding of pathophysiology and pharmacology.

Status as an NP student or (status as an MENP student and NSG 332) is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 424 | PATHOPHYSIOLOGY FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Survey of current advances on human physiology with emphasis on the cellular and microcellular basis of health and disease. Students will engage in intensive study of human anatomy and physiology and complex pathophysiologic processes. Current research findings are reviewed for implications for health promotion, health maintenance and health restoration.

NSG 425 | FISCAL MANAGEMENT IN HEALTH CARE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Fiscal management and budgetary practices in health care institutions are explored. Budget preparation, cost-benefit, analysis, product costing, reimbursement, and analysis of financial status in organizations is emphasized.

NSG 426 | PHARMACOLOGY II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Emphasis is placed on the proper use of medication in self-care and dependent-care relative to health-related requisites, nursing role in administration of drugs, and proper patient education. The course focuses on the principles of nursing management in drug therapy along with the basics of core drug knowledge and patient-related variables. The major classifications of drugs are being examined along with issues arising from the use of drug therapy in contemporary society, and the related nursing implications are discussed. The pharmacological aspects of nursing care are integrated using the nursing process. In addition, there is emphasis on assessing and evaluating patient responses that change in accord with health, age, lifestyle, gender and other factors.

NSG 322 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 428 | PATHOPHYSIOLOGY FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Using a case study approach, pathophysiologic and physiologic alterations will be analyzed in selected systems-related disease processes. Appropriate clinical and lab analysis will be included in preparation for advance practice. Using a variety of learning modalities, students will explore current theories and research related to pathology, pathophysiology and abnormal physiologic function including implications for health promotion, maintenance and restoration.

NSG 429 | PATHOPHYSIOLOGY & APPLIED PHARMACOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course builds on the background of the registered nurse in exploring advanced concepts of pathophysiology and pharmacology. Emphasis is placed on concepts of pathophysiology in relationship to pharmacologic therapies and clinical management. The application of pharmacologic therapies in health promotion and patient management is explored from perspective of the masters prepared nurse.

NSG 430 | POLITICAL AND LEGAL ISSUES IN HEALTH CARE | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Seminars will discuss social, economic, legislative and regulatory mechanisms that influence professional practice and health policy in the United States. Emphasis is on the legal definition of professional practice as well as major issues involved in designing, implementing and evaluating policy decisions including scope, dynamics, and conceptual and practical dilemmas. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 431 | HEALTH PROMOTION FOR FAMILIES AND COMMUNITIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines issues, frameworks, theories and techniques relevant to health promotion for individuals, families and communities. Physical and social determinants of health are examined as are methods for assessing and facilitating cultural competence. The nurse's role as advocate for health promotion and wellness in public policy is discussed. Course includes 12 CbSL hours (MENP req. only).

NSG 433 | NURSING AND BIOMEDICAL ETHICS IN HEALTH CARE | 2-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Seminars and case studies are used to explore issues and frameworks for ethical practice and research in the health professions. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 434 | COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT SEMINAR I | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

This course is designed to provide a deeper understanding and integration of academic service learning in the community. It will provide students in the Masters Entry Nursing program with an opportunity to utilize the knowledge and skills gained throughout the program and begin an analytical paper and presentation critically addressing a community health problem. The nursing process will be used to delve deeply into the community engagement experience, Health policy implications and integration of a theoretical framework will be included. Course includes 12 CbSL hours.

NSG 435 | COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT SEMINAR II | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

This course is designed to build on Community Engagement Seminar I. It will provide students in the Masters Entry Nursing program an opportunity to delve deeper into their community engagement experience with a focus on health intervention evaluation, dissemination and sustainability while finalizing their analytical paper and presentation. Course includes 12 CbSL hours.

NSG 440 | MATERNAL HEALTH NURSING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

The art of childbearing nursing: a didactic and clinical course as presented and discussed in class and implemented in the clinical setting. Focus is on the role of the nurse in caring for healthy newborns, and childbearing women who may be experiencing actual or potential educational needs, illness manifestations, or injury patterns. A variety of clinical settings, both inpatient and outpatient for maternity care will be utilized.

NSG 441 is a corequisite for this class.

NSG 441 | INFANT, CHILD AND ADOLESCENT NURSING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

The art of pediatric nursing: a didactic and clinical course as presented and discussed in class and implemented in the clinical setting. Focus is on the role of the nurse in caring for children ranging from newborns through adolescents. Levels of prevention, health promotion, health maintenance, and health restoration will be discussed. Emphasis is placed on the physical, psychosocial, and developmental needs of infants, children and adolescents within the family as well as the alterations that occur during hospitalization. Major causes of morbidity and mortality will also be covered. The influence of health policy, cultural, economic, and ethical issues on the child and family are also addressed. Course includes 60 clinical hours.

NSG 440 is a corequisite for this class.

NSG 442 | COMMUNITY HEALTH NURSING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The emphasis of this course is to provide a theoretical basis for nursing and public health sciences in the field of population health. Emphasis is placed on application of the principles of primary health care, strategies of health promotion, disease prevention and management across the life-span in home and community settings, and nursing practice of community-based families and population. Current trends and professional, legal/ethical, economic, cultural, and environmental issues are examined as they apply to community health nursing.

NSG 440 and NSG 441 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 443 | CLINICAL IMMERSION AND INTERNSHIP | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the capstone clinical course in which students, preceptors, and faculty collaborate in application and synthesis of the core concepts of caring, collaboration, communication, cultural sensitivity, community and environment as they relate to the nursing care of clients with complex health care problems throughout the life span. The students will also demonstrate competency in clinical skills, critical thinking, problem solving, and time management. The purpose of the synthesis course is to facilitate the integration of current and prior curricular content so that the student can become an active and productive member of the health care team.

NSG 442 and NSG 472 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 445 | NURSING PROFESSIONALISM, ADVOCACY, AND LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the capstone clinical course in which students, preceptors, and faculty collaborate in application and synthesis of the core concepts of caring, collaboration, communication, cultural sensitivity, community and environment as they relate to the nursing care of clients with complex health care problems throughout the life span. The students will also demonstrate competency in clinical skills, critical thinking, problem solving, and time management. The purpose of the synthesis course is to facilitate the integration of current and prior curricular content so that the student can become an active and productive member of the health care team. Course includes 12 CbSL hours.

NSG 446 | ETHICAL AND POLITICAL ENGAGEMENT IN NURSING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to explore the leadership and advocacy skills required of advanced nursing practice in a complex health care system. The course will focus on health law, ethics and policy in the context of social justice issues common in a diverse society. Students will integrate leadership and advocacy concepts and processes to all levels of healthcare with specific focus on health ethics and policy.

NSG 447 | COMMUNITY & POPULATION HEALTH NURSING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is to provide a theoretical basis and practical experiences for community nursing and public health sciences in the field of population health. Emphasis is placed on application of the principles of community based health care, evidence-based strategies of health promotion, disease prevention and management of the care of individuals and populations across the life-span, with an emphasis on vulnerable populations. Current trends and professional, legal/ethical, economic, cultural, and environmental issues are examined as they apply to community and population health nursing.

NSG 448 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-6 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is reserved for individuals who wish to do focused study at the graduate level. (variable credit)

NSG 450 | SELECTED TOPICS IN NURSING | 2-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is reserved for special seminars organized from time to time to accommodate the needs of groups interested in specific topics. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 451 | INTRODUCTION TO NURSING ADMINISTRATION AND LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the nursing leadership concentration as well as an overview of current issues and theory of nursing administration for all advanced practice nurses. As an introduction to the nursing leadership concentration, this course places emphasis on developing master's level skills of critical reading, scholarly writing, analytical discussion, and shared leadership. May also be taken as a health sciences management elective. The expected outcome of the course is a nursing research question and literature review that will form the basis of the students work in their concentration and the final research project.

NSG 452 | ORGANIZATIONAL AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT IN HEALTH CARE | 2-4.5 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides insight and reflection on the executive role in advanced practice and organizational administration. Concepts, models, and techniques used to manage systems in a variety of health care organizations or practices are analyzed. Organizational assessment, resource development, and product costing are emphasized. This course provides insight and reflection on the executive role in advanced practice and organizational administration. Concepts, models, and techniques used to manage systems in a variety of health care organizations or practices are analyzed. Organizational assessment, resource development, and product costing are emphasized. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 453 | CASE MANAGEMENT AND THE MANAGED CARE ENVIRONMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

In this course, students engage in analysis of concepts central to an in-depth understanding of the managed care environment and case management as a clinical care system. Emphasis is upon development of skill in organizational and population-based assessment and data analysis, clinical pathway development, and interdisciplinary collaboration. Students develop a database for a clinical project focusing on a client population from their work environment.

NSG 454 | INNOVATIONS IN HEALTH CARE DELIVERY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides the instruction and clinical experience for the development of the advanced practice nurse role as case manager and administrator. Learning activities focus on implementing contemporary data-based nursing practice models in a variety of health care settings, and the diffusion of innovation at the individual, family and organizational levels.

NSG 455 | CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT FOR HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Theories, principles and approaches to curriculum development are explored. Basic elements of curricular design are examined in relation to traditional and evolving paradigms, reflecting development in social and professional dimensions of health care.

NSG 456 | PRACTICUM IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION I | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

Practicum In Nursing Administration I (6 quarter hours)

NSG 451 and NSG 452 are a prerequisite for this class.NSG 457 | PRACTICUM IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION II | 6 quarter hours*(Graduate)

Practicum In Nursing Administration II (6 quarter hours)

NSG 456 is a prerequisite for this class.NSG 458 | TEACHING IN HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course prepares the registered nurse to apply theories, principles and strategies in education. Emphasis is on education as a vehicle for enhancing the health of populations and systems from an ecological perspective.

NSG 459 | PRACTICUM IN TEACHING IN HEALTH CARE SYSTEMS | 6-8 quarter hours(Graduate)

Practicum In Teaching In Health Care Systems (6 quarter hours)

NSG 455 and NSG 458 are a prerequisite for this class.NSG 460 | HEALTH ASSESSMENT II | 4 quarter hours*(Graduate)

This course emphasizes the knowledge and skills necessary for advanced health assessment of individuals and families across the lifespan. This knowledge will be incorporated with related pathophysiological processes in common health abnormalities, with integration of laboratory findings and physical exam findings. The course will focus on physical, psychosocial, sociocultural, environmental, and developmental elements of advanced assessment necessary for developing clinical data-gathering skills, diagnostic reasoning and clinical problem-solving. It will allow students to explore fully the human individual, holistically, without recourse to invasive technologies. Interviewing techniques and head-to-toe physical assessment will be reviewed. The course will concentrate on the focused systems assessment necessary for providing care to clients across the lifespan and assist the students in differentiating between normal, deviations from normal, and abnormal physical assessment findings. At the end of the course, students will be expected to perform an advanced physical exam upon a designated client and effectively communicate the findings. Course includes 25 lab hours.

NSG 302 (or status as an RN to MS student) is a prerequisite for this class.NSG 462 | ADVANCED WOMEN'S HEALTH ASSESSMENT | 2 quarter hours*(Graduate)

Lectures focus on the synthesis of scientific knowledge in performing integrated, comprehensive assessments of women from late adolescence through maturity. Emphasis is placed on the woman in the context of the family and community in health and illness. Laboratory practice includes taking the health history and performing the physical examination to evaluate primary and reproductive health care needs. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 422, NSG 424 and NSG 464 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 464 | HEALTH ASSESSMENT FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course builds on the skills acquired in health assessment and will introduce the skills and knowledge needed to perform a history and physical examination on patients of all ages. Lecture will focus on the synthesis of scientific knowledge in performing integrated, comprehensive assessments of individuals from infancy through maturity. Emphasis is placed on the child in the context of the family and community. Laboratory practice includes taking the health history and performing the physical examination to evaluate primary health care needs. Adult Nurse Practitioner students will not participate in the assessment of the infant and child, but instead will participate in more in-depth assessment of the older adult. Course includes 30 lab hours. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 472 | CRITICAL CARE NURSING | 8 quarter hours(Graduate)

This is a theory and clinical course with a focus on the roles and responsibilities of nurses caring for adults who are experiencing acute illness that may result in complex multiple system disorders. This course will emphasize the critical care concepts of oxygenation, perfusion, ischemia, pain, metabolism, and quality of life. In this course, students will synthesize knowledge and apply advanced skills to manage high acuity and critical care clients. An emphasis is placed on providing a strong theoretical foundation for the student to be able to apply critical thinking skills to clinical decision-making. In the clinical area utilizing the critical thinking techniques of the nursing process, students will assess, collect data, plan, implement, and evaluate the care of clients hospitalized in high acuity and critical care units.

NSG 440 and NSG 441 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 473 | PRIMARY CARE OF THE INFANT, CHILD, AND THE ADOLESCENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is designed to explore health promotion, health protection, and disease prevention dimensions in pediatric primary care. The focus is on common issues related to clinical, developmental and behavioral needs of children and adolescents and their families. The dynamics of the pediatric client and nurse practitioner relationship will be analyzed, focusing on life transitions and the impact of health and illness on infants, children, adolescents and their families. Clinical practice guidelines will be evaluated through epidemiological and research evidence of selected developmental and behavioral disorders, as well as acute and chronic health problems. Selected theory-based models relevant to primary care of children will be critiqued.

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 474 | PRIMARY CARE OF THE ADULT AND OLDER ADULT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for family advanced practice nursing in primary care. The emphasis of course content is on building advanced knowledge of chronic and complex health problems in the primary care management of adults. This course examines primary health care needs of adults across the life span, with a focus on health promotion and disease prevention. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized.

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 475 | WOMEN'S REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH AND GYNECOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This advanced practice course provides a comprehensive review of reproductive health and gynecology practice issues during a woman's childbearing years. Course content consists of contraceptive options, sexually transmitted illnesses, low risk obstetrical prenatal & postpartum and well woman gynecology. Clinical practice guidelines for the advanced practice nurse in a women's health specialty practice or in a practice devoted to the care of women in the family.

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 476 | WOMEN'S HEALTH, MATERNAL CHILD AND ADOLESCENTS | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is designed to explore health promotion, health protection, and disease prevention dimensions in Women's reproductive health and pediatric populations. The Women's Health and Maternal Child portion contains comprehensive review of gynecology practice issues during a woman's childbearing years. The dynamics of the pediatric client and nurse practitioner relationship will be analyzed, focusing on life transitions and the impact of health and illness on infants, children, adolescents and their families. Clinical practice guidelines will be evaluated through epidemiological and research evidence of selected pediatric developmental, growth and behavioral disorders; contraceptive options, sexually transmitted illnesses, low risk obstetrical prenatal and postpartum and well woman gynecology for women's health.

NSG 477 | CLINICAL MANAGEMENT OF WOMEN'S HEALTH AND ILLNESS | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for gynecologic advanced practice nursing. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 478 | CLINICAL MANAGEMENT OF ACUTE AND CHRONIC ILLNESSES IN PRIMARY CARE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Lectures focus on synthesis and application of scientific knowledge for adult advanced practice nursing. The integrated role of the advanced practice nurse in providing holistic care and collaborative practice is emphasized. The dynamics of the adult client and nurse practitioner relationship will be analyzed, focusing on life transitions and the impact of health and illness on adults, families, and communities. Clinical practice guidelines will be evaluated through epidemiological and research evidenced of selected acute, emergent and chronic health problems.

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 479 | ADVANCED GERONTOLOGICAL NURSING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines the biological changes of aging using a system approach and reviews selected clinical issues and health problems of older adults, particularly the common health conditions associated with geriatric syndrome. This course provides a foundation in advanced gerontological nursing theory and practice. Comprehensive geriatric assessment, changes in normal aging, geriatric syndromes and functional status of older adults will be explored. Students are expected to learn and apply evidence-based practice to promote wellness, maximize function, and enhance self-care of older adults.

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 481 | BIOSTATISTICS AND EPIDEMIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The application of biostatistics/epidemiology to clinical practice and research is the intent of this seminar. Initial discussions will focus on understanding biostatistics and epidemiological statistics as applied to health and disease in diverse populations. From considering the relationship between measurement and biostatistics to understanding the importance of insuring data integrity throughout the research process, students will examine existing data sets (federal, voluntary agencies, professional/specialty organizations). Then the focus will be on understanding epidemiological statistics (rates, proportions, relative and absolute risk), descriptive statistics, measures of differences, measures of relationships/prediction, and multivariate statistical models as applied to health and disease.

NSG 482 | INTRODUCTION TO EPIDEMIOLOGY | 2-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An investigative problem-solving process is used to study the personal and ecological determinants of health and disease frequencies in diverse populations. Data are manipulated to plan, implement and evaluate health promotion and disease control programs for a variety of health care settings. Infectious and chronic disease prevention are emphasized. Students electing to take the course for four credit hours will complete a project using the epidemiologic method. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 483 | PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students. The focus is on application of health assessment and examination skills in the clinical setting, identification of health risks, and learning how to manage common illnesses. Analysis and application of current research is used as the basis for decision-making in performing the health history and physical assessment, contributing to interdisciplinary treatment planning, and teaching for health promotion and illness prevention. Course includes 160 preceptor clinical hours.

NSG 484 | PHARMACOLOGY FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Provides the advanced-practice nurse with the knowledge base necessary to manage pharmacological therapy for acute and chronically ill clients collaboratively with other members of the health care team. Direct and indirect responsibility for clinical decision-making regarding the administration, management and evaluation of drugs are emphasized.

NSG 428 and NSG 464 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 487 | PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the second practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students in which students demonstrate increasing comprehensive practice of primary care in the context of specialty practice for selected populations. Nurse practitioner student readings, assignments, and clinical experiences in primary care: family, adult, pediatric, or women's health with an emphasis on health promotion and disease prevention. Course includes 160 preceptor clinical hours.

NSG 483 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 488 | PROFESSIONAL ISSUES & RESEARCH IN POPULATION-BASED ADVANCED PRACTICE NURSING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces the graduate nursing students to a variety of advanced practice nursing roles and the competencies needed for successful practice in those roles. The students explore the conceptual, theoretical, and empirical bases of population based advanced practice nursing. Critical thinking skills are developed through the student's debate of current local, state, and national laws and analysis of coding case studies. Communication skills are fostered through the use of class discussions and development of various assignments. Scholarly written and verbal presentations enhance the student's understanding of historical, economical, political, legal, and ethical perspectives of advanced practice nursing.

NSG 490 | PRACTICUM IN POPULATION-BASED NURSING PRACTICE III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the third clinical practicum in a sequence of supervised clinical experiences for nurse practitioner students in which students demonstrate increasing comprehensive practice of primary care in the context of specialty practice for selected populations. This course provides the opportunity to integrate the multiple professional roles of the advanced practice nurse while refining their skills in the comprehensive practice of primary care and/or specialty practice for selected populations. Emphasis is on health promotion and disease prevention with unitary human beings in mutual process with their environment in the management of health and illness, teaching and health counseling and organizational and role competencies. Students select sites and preceptors in family, adult, pediatric or women's health promotion according to their area of concentration and self-assessed strengths and weaknesses. Course includes 180 preceptor clinical hours.

NSG 487 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 493 | ADVANCED GERONTOLOGICAL NURSING & PHARMACOTHERAPEUTIC IMPLICATIONS | 5 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides a foundation in advanced Gerontological nursing theory, practice and Pharmacotherapeutic implications of the older adult. Comprehensive geriatric assessment, changes in normal aging, geriatric syndromes, functional status and the various factors that impact the pharmacokinetics and pharmacodynamics of drugs used in the care of the older adult will be explored. Students are expected to learn and apply evidence-based practice to promote wellness, maximize function, and enhance self-care of older adults along with the economic and policy issues regarding pharmacotherapy of the older adult population.

NSG 500 | CHEMISTRY AND PHYSICS OF ANESTHESIA | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

Review of principles of physics with emphasis on their application in the clinical practice of anesthesia. Nurse anesthesia residents (NAR) will engage in a comprehensive analysis of cell physiology and biochemistry with emphasis upon metabolism, enzyme function, and protein synthesis. Current research findings and their anesthetic implications will be discussed. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 501 | ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY I | 6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of advanced anatomy and physiology of the gastrointestinal, nervous and endocrine systems. The course is divided into three sections with emphasis placed on the structural and functional role of each system in maintaining homeostasis. Clinical implications of current research findings will be stressed. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 502 | ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY II | 6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of advanced anatomy and physiology of the cardiovascular, respiratory and renal systems. The course is divided into sections with emphasis placed on the structural and functional role of each system in maintaining homeostasis. Clinical implications of current research findings will be stressed. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 503 | PATHOPHYSIOLOGY | 6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An intensive 6 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of diseases and disorders of the nervous, endocrine, cardiovascular, respiratory, renal, GI/hepatic, and musculoskeletal systems. Implications for the design and implementation of an appropriate anesthesia care plan for individuals with specific system disease/disorders will be discussed in detail. Emphasis will be placed on system-specific diagnostic and therapeutic procedures that require anesthesia services. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 504 | PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Designed to introduce the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Emphasis is placed upon pre-operative patient assessment, anesthesia equipment and technology, airway management, intra-operative management, and postoperative care of patients undergoing general and regional anesthesia. Course includes orientation to clinical practice. Course includes 40 clinical hours and 30 lab hours.

NSG 505 | PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An intensive 4 quarter hour course designed to provide the nurse anesthesia resident (NAR) with current knowledge of special populations, including pediatric, obstetric, geriatric and trauma patients, as well as patients requiring pain management. Emphasis will be placed on the anatomical and physiological differences that characterize each population with a focus on the pathological disorders unique to each group. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be stressed.

NSG 506 | PRINCIPLES OF ANESTHESIA PRACTICE III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An in-depth course that places emphasis on perioperative anesthetic management of patients presenting for specialty surgical procedures or requiring management for chronic pain. Implications for the development, implementation, and evaluation of anesthesia care plans will be stressed. The ethical, legal and professional issues that influence the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia will be discussed. Course includes preparation for the Certification Examination for Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists.

NSG 507 | ANESTHETIC PHARMACOLOGY | 6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an in depth introduction to anesthetic pharmacology. It covers the pharmacokinetics, pharmacodynamics, and pharmacotherapeutics of drugs used in the administration of general, local, and regional anesthesia and provides the scientific basis for the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. (6 quarter hours)

NSG 508 | ADJUNCTIVE ANESTHETIC | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 4 quarter hour hybrid course (in class and on-line sections) includes the pharmacokinetics, pharmacodynamics, and pharmacotherapeutics of drugs used in the treatment of a variety of disease states. Implications of current therapy with these agents and use of selected agents as adjunctive therapy in the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia will be stressed.

NSG 509 | ADVANCED PHYSICAL ASSESSMENT FOR NURSE ANESTHETISTS | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide strategies that promote effective history-taking along with cognitive and psychomotor skills needed for the advanced physical assessment of the neurological, musculoskeletal, respiratory, cardiac, circulatory, and gastrointestinal systems across the lifespan. The assessment of body systems includes an overview of anatomy and physiology, techniques necessary to perform inspection, palpation, percussion and auscultation; and interpretation of physical findings and laboratory testing relevant to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 521 | INNOVATIONS IN HEALTH CARE DELIVERY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides the laboratory and clinical experiences for the development of the professional nurse role as case manager and administrator. Learning activities focus on implementing contemporary data-based nursing practice models in a variety of health care settings, and the diffusion of innovation at the individual, family and organizational levels.

NSG 522 | FINANCE AND COSTING IN HEALTH CARE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides learning experiences that focus on fiscal management and budgetary practices in health care institutions. Budget preparation, cost-benefit analysis, product costing, reimbursement, and analysis of financial status in organizations are emphasized. Health care finance is covered involving the major sources and uses of funds. Health care accounting is included which addresses financial reporting and cost measurement. An understanding of finance, accounting, policy and administration enables the advanced practice nurse to enhance the delivery of health care in a dynamic health care environment.

NSG 540 | CULTURE, ETHICS, AND POLICY ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This seminar is designed to explore cultural and ethical perspectives and their relationships to health policy. Health disparities based on social and cultural difference are linked to major diseases such as heart disease, cancer, diabetes, hypertension and stroke, as well as access to and outcomes of health services. Class discussions will focus on the past, current and future health policy needs of multicultural and multifaceted societies. The phenomena of cultural, ethnic, gender, class, and sexual variation in complex societies; notions of diversity and social justice; understandings of cultural conflicts and how cultural differences are managed in healthcare settings will be considered. Students will integrate concepts of all levels of prevention in health care, examine research in health ethics and health policy and discuss legislative processes for their potential to improve the health of the public. Course includes 12 CbSL hours.

NSG 550 | HEALTHCARE ECONOMICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on application of supply and demand theory to the healthcare industry as well as analysis of financing and healthcare delivery in the United States and other countries. The principles and tools of microeconomics and macroeconomics will be applied to the healthcare market. Applications particularly pertinent in economic climates include the supply and demand of healthcare, practice incentives, managed care, malpractice and pharmaceutical economics.

NSG 551 | LEADERSHIP AND ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course focuses on critical leadership characteristics that are necessary for transforming organizational behavior in healthcare organizations. Students will analyze leadership theories/styles and the interrelationship between leadership and management. Strategies for directing and managing successful change based upon an organization's vision and mission will be explored. Students will have an opportunity to assess their personal leadership style and to develop effective strategic leadership skills.

NSG 552 | PROGRAM EVALUATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will familiarize the student in different types of program evaluation, including objectives oriented evaluation, management oriented evaluation, consumer oriented evaluation, expertise oriented evaluation adversary oriented evaluation, participant oriented evaluation and alternative evaluation approaches. Students gain practical experience through a series of exercises involving the design of a conceptual framework, development of indicators, analysis of computerized service statistics, and development of an evaluation plan to measure impact.

NSG 553 | POPULATION HEALTH QUALITY AND SAFETY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course enables the advance practice nursing student an opportunity to build a foundation of insight and knowledge about key issues and concepts related to population health and support high quality care and outcomes. Emphasis is on transforming healthcare leadership to improve patient care quality and safety, decrease costs and improve population health.

NSG 554 | INFORMATICS AND TECHNOLOGY APPLICATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on information systems technology and its application for the improvement and transformation of patient-centered health care. Implications of informatics for advanced nursing practice and health care in general are explored. Impact on consumer-provider relationships, ethical and legal issues, global/future informatics issues and electronic health record issues are being examined. The course prepares the student to become proficient at selecting and using technology for organizing, analyzing, managing, and evaluating information in nursing administration, education, and clinical practice settings. The use of technology as an adjunct to inquiry and how it supports clinical and professional decision-making is explained and demonstrated.

NSG 555 | PHARMACOTHERAPEUTIC IMPLICATIONS FOR THE OLDER ADULT | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines various factors that impact the pharmacokinetics and pharmacodynamics of drugs used in the care of the older adult. The primary focus will be on drug therapy in the older person, ensuring the appropriate use of frequently prescribed medications. Economic and policy issues regarding pharmacotherapy of the older adult will be explored. Students are expected to develop nursing assessments skills and plan nursing interventions that can promote the appropriate use of medications in this complex older adult patient population. (2 quarter hours)

NSG 428, NSG 464, and NSG 484 are prerequisites for this class.

NSG 561 | EVIDENCE BASED MANAGEMENT | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides an introduction to the utilization of best evidence in managing healthcare issues. The curriculum is intended to prepare the student to identify management problems and develop a related path of focused inquiry, evaluate reliable databases and searching strategies to find evidence, and base management decisions on the best evidence available. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 564 | ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course in Organizational Behavior (OB), and Human Resources (HR), is designed to introduce organizational behavior theory; organizational communication, and human resource management principles to effectively lead and manage an organization. The OB Students will apply management and leadership techniques garnered from successful healthcare organizations to understand and practice management functions, including: understanding employee behavior and motivation, assessing performance, employing groups and teams, operationalize communication, evaluating conflict, and making appropriate business decisions. The HR functions of planning, recruiting, selecting, training, and appraising will be emphasized. Realistic case studies, collaborative discussions, practical research and peer reviews will be used to develop students' skills in organizational behavior and human resource management. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 565 | STRATEGIC PLANNING AND LEADERSHIP IN HEALTHCARE | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is intended to introduce the student to leadership skills and strategic planning in healthcare organizations. Creative, collaborative problem solving within the context of current strategic issues in healthcare will be explored. The course content provides an overview of the strategic planning process including the elements required to successfully develop and implement short and long-term plans. The course focuses on leadership skills and qualities necessary to succeed and thrive in the healthcare industry as well as assist the students in applying theories of leadership, motivation, communication and conflict management. Students will learn the construction of a strategic plan and analyze the state of strategic planning in the healthcare industry. Additionally, students will have the opportunity to analyze their own leadership skills and create an action plan for leadership development. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 566 | CURRENT TOPICS IN HEALTHCARE ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

Healthcare administrators and managers must be knowledgeable about current topics that face their profession. Using critical inquiry and research skills, students will explore current topics and controversies in the field of healthcare administration and management. The ability to analyze, research and apply the findings to contemporary issues will be stressed.

NSG 567 | HEALTHCARE POLICY AND DELIVERY SYSTEMS | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

The historical evolution of health services provides a backdrop for the core focus of this course: the study of the healthcare system. The curriculum includes an analysis of the current changes in the healthcare environment and the problems affecting the delivery of healthcare in the United States that create a demand for government action. A study of the process of policy formation underscores the complexity and difficulty of government action. Economic and political approaches to health policy analysis will be introduced with a particular focus on contrasting competitive and regulatory approaches to the resolution of health policy problems.

NSG 569 | TOPICS IN HEALTHCARE ADMINISTRATION | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 570 | LEARNING THEORIES | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will examine domains of learning and adult learning theories and how they apply to health professions students. Topics include best practices for motivation, adapting to various learning styles, teaching models/strategies, instructional paradigms, and interprofessional learning environments. The concept of lifelong learning is introduced and students will explore the role that higher education and corporate education/training play in instilling a desire for lifelong learning. In addition, students will develop statements of Teaching Philosophy and Philosophy on Interprofessional Education. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 574 | CLASSROOM ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will examine various tools to assess student learning in the classroom setting. Topics include annotated portfolios, concept maps, memory matrix, process analysis, rubrics development, and the use of reflective statements. Students will also discuss how to adapt assessment tools to include interprofessional students. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 575 | COURSE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will apply curriculum design techniques to develop a course in a health-related area of their own choosing. Activities will include writing learning objectives, planning and organizing content, selecting instructional methods and materials, and designing assessment tools. Students will also discuss how to adapt courses to include interprofessional students. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 576 | INSTRUCTIONAL PRESENTATION SKILLS | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will acquire classroom presentation skills as they explore effective teaching and learning strategies. Topics include effective speaking, use of technology in the classroom, creation of PowerPoint presentations, effective communication through posters, creating dynamic learning environments, and adapting presentations to interprofessional groups of students.

NSG 577 | ROLE TRANSITION FOR THE NURSE EDUCATOR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will engage in direct care clinical practice experiences integrating new knowledge gained from theory courses as they transition from baccalaureate prepared nurse to graduate level nurse educator. This pass/fail course requires a total of 120 direct care clinical practice experiences through mentorship from a graduate prepared nurse in an area of interest of the student's choosing. Emphasis is on immersion into advanced direct care clinical practice to integrate new learning and expand clinical expertise.

NSG 579 | EVALUATING CLINICAL COMPETENCE | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

Student will develop appropriate tools to evaluate student performance in a clinical setting. In addition, students will develop a clinical rotation manual in their area of interest. This course is offered through a consortium agreement with Rosalind Franklin University and follows the Rosalind Franklin calendar. (3 quarter hours)

NSG 580 | BIostatistics & RESEARCH METHODS FOR ADVANCED PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course provides an overview of the logical and appropriate use of epidemiological statistics (rates, proportions, relative and absolute risk), descriptive statistics, and most parametric and nonparametric procedures, including correlational and repeated measures analyses in the health profession as applied to health and disease in diverse populations. The course will develop the student's ability to apply and understand statistical and epidemiological concepts to guide evidence-based practice in a dynamic health care environment.

NSG 585 | PORTFOLIO PRESENTATION | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

Students will assemble and present their teaching portfolio. The portfolio documents student mastery of each core objective: facilitation of learning, curriculum design, student assessment and program evaluation, and educational leadership. Students will present an analysis of each item included in their portfolios along with reflections for each item. In addition, students will perform a self-evaluation regarding their teaching preparedness, including cultural competence and establishment of interprofessional relationships.

NSG 590 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN NURSING | 2-6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The student will work with a faculty mentor to develop an individualized plan of work involving in depth study in an area related to nursing and healthcare. This can include, but is not limited to, reviewing literature for evidence of best practices, developing a research project, collecting data on an ongoing project, coding or analyzing data, developing a research presentation, or working in the community on research or evidence-based intervention projects. (variable quarter hours)

NSG 596 | CAPSTONE IN NURSING ADMINISTRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a reflective synthesis of the coursework for Health Administration with an emphasis on the American Organization of Nursing Leaders competencies. This final Practicum will include a formal synthesis paper and oral presentation that documents achievement of the MS degree outcomes and the competencies in the selected area of specialization. The paper will provide evidence of students' achievement of the program outcomes and the competencies required to become a nurse administrator and to sit for the certification exam in Executive Nursing Practice. Critical concepts covered will include communication, relationship-building, healthcare environment, leadership, professionalism, and business skills. Requires 105 hours of practicum plus online lecture/seminar.

NSG 597 | CAPSTONE IN NURSING EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a reflective synthesis of the coursework for Nursing Education. This final Practicum will include a formal synthesis paper and oral presentation that documents achievement of the MS degree outcomes and the competencies in the selected area of specialization. The paper will provide evidence of students' achievement of the program outcomes and the competencies required to sit for the Certified Nurse Education Examination (CNE) and become a nursing educator. Critical concepts covered will include effective teaching strategies, evaluation, measurement, and educational processes, and psychometric testing for academic outcomes. Current pedagogical, ethical, social and legal aspects of nursing education will be included. Requires 105 hours of practicum plus online lecture/seminar.

NSG 598 | GRADUATE RESEARCH SYNTHESIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on a capstone experience synthesizing the science of professional nursing practice impacting quality and safety care of vulnerable populations. Leadership and advocacy skills occur through the translation of the critical examination of literature into quality improvement initiatives and policy recommendations for clinical practice.

NSG 401 and NSG 481 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 599 | THESIS RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students conduct supervised original research terminating in a completed and bound thesis. The study must be approved by the faculty advisor and the thesis committee approved by the School of Nursing prior to registration and must be completed during the term.

NSG 401 and NSG 481 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 600 | EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on the evidence based practice process, theories, concepts, and methods. This will include the synthesis and application of scientific evidence to nursing and healthcare practice within a systems framework. Students will develop a proposal for an evidence-based, scholarly leadership proposal, which will translate science into practice. In order to accomplish this, the student will focus on a specific aggregate population, and develop the program to make a positive impact on healthcare delivery. This proposal will be presented to a faculty committee consisting of three faculty members for their approval.

NSG 580 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 601 | EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE RESEARCH II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will submit individual objectives to the faculty advisor and committee who will guide the student through project implementation. Students will implement their evidence based Scholarly Leadership Project during this course.

NSG 600 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 602 | DNP PROJECT PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will implement and evaluate their evidenced-based DNP Project during this 100 hour practicum. Upon completion of this project the results will be presented to their DNP Committee with a publishable quality manuscript and oral presentation for their approval. Course includes 100 project hours.

NSG 601 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 603 | DNP PROJECT CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students who have completed their coursework but who are actively working on the requirements for implementation and evaluation of their evidenced-based DNP project. Students must enroll in candidacy continuation each quarter of the academic year until the DNP project requirements have been completed. The course carries the equivalent of less than half-time enrollment status. Course requires graduate program director approval and proof of work each quarter. Pass/No Pass grading. (0 credit hours)

NSG 610 | ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to the clinical practice of nurse anesthesia with an emphasis on the principles introduced in ANES 500-504, 507, and 508. Includes administration of anesthesia for select patient populations under direct instruction and supervision of a certified registered nurse anesthetist (CRNA) or anesthesiologist. The course content focuses on specific general surgical procedures, including intra-abdominal, gynecological, urologic, ear, nose and throat, orthopedic, and endoscopic procedure. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and written care plans Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments. Course includes 40 clinical hours/week and 20 lab hours/quarter.

NSG 504 and NSG 507 are a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 611 | ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Includes administration of general and regional anesthesia for patients undergoing a variety of elective and emergency surgical procedures and diagnostic procedures. Management of special populations, including pediatric, obstetric, and geriatric patients is emphasized with a focus on the anatomical and physiological differences and pathological disorders that characterize each population. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and written care plans. Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments. Course includes 40 clinical hours/week and 12 lab hour/quarter.

NSG 610 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 612 | ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Includes administration of general and regional anesthesia for patients undergoing a variety of elective and emergency surgical procedures and diagnostic procedures. In addition to anesthetic management of the trauma patient, the course includes acute and chronic pain management, and advanced regional anesthetic techniques. Content knowledge will be assessed through objective examinations. The preparation, implementation and evaluation of an appropriate nurse anesthesia care plan for these populations will be assessed through clinical performance evaluations and critically assessed topics (CAT assignments). Course includes Human Patient Simulation (HPS) assignments. Course includes 40 clinical hours/week and 12 lab hour/quarter.

NSG 611 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 613 | ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The first in a series of advanced practicums that provides the third year DNP student with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations with an emphasis on specialty surgical procedures, insertion of invasive monitoring and advanced airway management. Emphasis is placed on application, integration, and synthesis of knowledge, skills, and attitudes that are representative of the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to explore the professional aspects of nurse anesthesia practice, link policy making with clinical systems, and translate research into practice. Includes seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia and self assessment assignments. Course includes 45 clinical hours/week and 4 lab hours/quarter.

NSG 612 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 614 | ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Description: The second in a series of advanced practicums that provides the third year DNP student with the opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate comprehensive anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of diagnostic, surgical and therapeutic procedures. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to explore the professional aspects of nurse anesthesia practice, link policy making with clinical systems, and translate research into practice. Includes critically appraised topics, case narratives and seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia. Course also includes Crisis Resource Management in the Human Patient Simulator (HPS). Course includes 45 clinical hours/week and 4 lab hours/quarter.

NSG 613 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 615 | ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The third advanced practicum for DNP students provides an opportunity to develop, implement, and evaluate an anesthesia care plan for all patient populations undergoing a wide variety of surgical and therapeutic procedures. This advanced practicum provides the opportunity to opportunity to explore the professional aspects and link policy making with clinical systems, translate research into practice and serve as change agents for health care. Includes critically appraised topics, case narratives, seminar presentations on selected topics relative to the advanced practice of nurse anesthesia, and Crisis Resource Management in the Human Patient Simulator (HPS). Course includes 45 clinical hours/week and 4 lab hours/quarter.

NSG 614 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 616 | ADVANCED ANESTHESIA PRACTICUM IV | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The final advanced practicum in which the third year nurse DNP student demonstrates the advanced knowledge and skills that comprise a foundation for nurse anesthesia practice, the ability to work independently or as a contributing member of the anesthesia care team, adherence to professional standards as well as ethical and moral principles while providing care to a multicultural patient population, analysis and synthesis of current research that support evidence based anesthesia practice, an awareness of limited healthcare resources and cost containment strategies, the ability to perform a comprehensive self evaluation; and display of a professional attitude toward lifelong learning. The practicum includes completion of a final comprehensive exam, the Self Evaluation Exam (SEE) and professional portfolio, and presentation and dissemination of the Scholarly Leadership Project. Course includes 45 clinical hours/week.

NSG 615 is a prerequisite for this class.

NSG 700 | ADVANCED PRACTICUM FOR NURSE PRACTITIONERS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

First of a series of two clinical courses that focus on developing proficiency in advanced nursing assessment and management for health promotion and disease prevention, management of complex health conditions, and working with interdisciplinary teams to provide care and services for persons across the lifespan. Students will ground their studies in the science of nursing interventions, moral/ethical issues, and nursing research. Practicum experiences are arranged to meet the individual needs of students while also meeting accreditation and certification requirements. This practicum provides an in-depth clinical experience for students in assessing an aggregate population within the context of a clinical setting, and developing programs to creatively and cost effectively affect changes in health care delivery. The clinical residency experience is facilitated by an advanced practice expert clinician, and forms the setting and basis for the Scholarly Leadership Project. There is no lecture/discussion component to this course. The student will meet with his/her course instructor on a regular basis for individual discussion and guidance in this Practicum course. Course includes 150 residency clinical hours.

NSG 701 | ADVANCED PRACTICUM FOR NURSE PRACTITIONERS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Second of a series of two clinical courses that emphasizes incorporating current research and demonstrating increasing autonomy and proficiency in decision making and case management. This advanced practicum provides the student with the opportunity to link policy making with clinical systems, translate research into practice, and serve as change agents for health care. In addition, this course provides the student with an opportunity to demonstrate expert knowledge, and expert clinical assessment and diagnostic skills when working with various patient populations. This practicum provides an in-depth clinical experience for students in assessing an aggregate population within the context of a clinical setting, and developing programs to creatively and cost effectively affect changes in health care delivery, and to evaluate those programs. The clinical residency experience is facilitated by an advanced practice expert clinician, and forms the setting and basis for the Scholarly Leadership Project. There is no lecture/discussion component to this course. The student will meet with his/her course instructor on a regular basis for individual discussion and guidance in this Practicum course. Course includes 150 residency clinical hours.

NSG 700 is a prerequisite for this class.

Occupational Therapy (OT)

OT 200 | INTRO TO OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Broad over view of the profession of occupational therapy (OT). Students will learn about the wide variety of places occupational therapists (OTs) work and the diverse populations OTs work with. Particular focus will be spent on the occupational therapy practice areas: children & youth, health & wellness/adults, productive aging, rehab & disability, work & industry, intellectual disabilities, mental health, and assistive technology. This course will provide students an on-line shadowing experience and specific information for applying to OT graduate programs.

OT 411 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS OF OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will introduce students to core concepts within the profession of occupational therapy. Students will learn the history and philosophical base for the occupational therapy profession. Students will learn the theories, models of practice and frames of reference that guide intervention for persons, individuals, and groups. In addition, students will learn foundational skills for the practice of occupational therapy such as safety regulations, assessing and monitoring vital signs, activity analysis, and an introduction to the Occupational Therapy Practice Framework.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 412 | DISABILITY STUDIES | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course will introduce biological, social, cultural, political, and economic factors that have contributed to the social construct of disability. Students will learn how the disability rights movement came to be and helped to shape the American Disabilities Act. Students will learn how people with disabilities experience occupations in education, healthcare and community settings. Students will learn about diverse experiences of disability throughout the world.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 413 | MENTAL HEALTH AND WELL-BEING I | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this first course in a two course sequence, students will analyze the client factors, conditions, and contexts of individuals, groups, and populations that impact mental and behavioral health and well-being. In addition, students will learn the various service delivery models, inter-professional team roles & responsibilities, funding regulations and policies, and relevant legislation that impact mental health occupational therapy services in a range of practice settings.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 414 | MENTAL HEALTH AND WELL-BEING II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Students will build on the knowledge and skills learned in Mental Health and Well-Being I as they develop theory-driven, evidence and occupation-based evaluations and interventions that address mental and behavioral health to promote the health and well-being of individuals, groups, and populations. Therapeutic use of self, group process skills, and addressing health disparities among individuals with mental health challenges will be applied through case-based learning.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 415 | EVIDENCE BASED PRACTICE I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

In the first course of a 3 quarter course evidence-based practice sequence, students will develop necessary skills, attitudes and habits for implementing evidence-based practice informed by research, clinical expertise, and client values. Students will learn to develop researchable questions, locate and search databases, select articles relevant to answering a question, and analyze quantitative and qualitative research.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 416 | LEVEL I FIELDWORK A: MENTAL HEALTH AND WELL-BEING | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

In this fieldwork experience, students will be placed in clinical and/or community sites to gain an appreciation of how psychological and social factors impact occupational performance. By the end of the experience, students will be required to complete an occupational profile, discussion posts, and a critical reflection paper.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 417 | LEVEL II FIELDWORK A | 8 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first of two 12 week full time experiences in which students will be placed in a setting aligned with DePaul's curriculum design under the supervision of an academic fieldwork educator for an in-depth learning experience to prepare for entry level practice. During these 12 weeks, students will focus on gaining clinical skills inclusive of intervention planning, implementation, and review. In addition, students will be required to complete weekly discussion posts.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 421 | INTER-PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION AND TEAMS | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Inter-professional education is defined as occasions when two or more professions learn with, from and about each other to improve collaboration and quality of patient care. This course focuses on developing the core competencies that define the skills and inter-professional behaviors that health professionals across the continuum need in order to participate effectively in collaborative practice and team-based care. This course will afford students the opportunity to work with other health care students as well with simulation activities.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 422 | OCCUPATIONAL JUSTICE | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course students will be introduced to social, cultural, ethical, professional systems that impact occupational participation. Students will learn about health disparities through an occupational justice lens. Students will study experiences of occupational marginalization, deprivation, and isolation. Students will explore various delivery models of occupational therapy to address societal needs.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 423 | OT PROCESS WITH CHILDREN AND ADOLESCENTS I | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this first course of a two-course sequence, students will analyze the client factors, conditions, and contexts of youth who could benefit from or are receiving occupational therapy services. In addition, students will learn the various service delivery models, inter-professional team roles & responsibilities, funding regulations and policies and relevant legislation that impact occupational therapy services for children and adolescents in a range of practice settings.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 424 | OT PROCESS WITH CHILDREN AND ADOLESCENTS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will build on the knowledge and skills learned in Children and Adolescents I as they develop theory-driven, evidence and occupation-based evaluations and interventions to promote the health and well-being of children and adolescents. Interprofessional teamwork, use of technology, and addressing health disparities within the child/youth population across settings will be applied through case-based learning.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 425 | EVIDENCE BASED PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In the second course of a 3-quarter course evidence-based practice sequence, students will learn to analyze intervention related research and meta-analysis to identify and assess evidence-based interventions for individuals, groups, and communities. Students will ask researchable questions and use qualitative and quantitative evidence to develop Critically Appraised Topics. Students will learn to communicate relevant evidence to colleagues and clients.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 426 | LEVEL I FIELDWORK B: CHILDREN AND ADOLESCENTS | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

In this fieldwork experience, students will be placed in clinical and/or community sites to gain an appreciation for how environmental, social, and physical supports and barriers shape occupational performance among children, adolescents, and families. By the end of the experience, students will be required to complete an occupational profile, discussion posts, and a critical reflection paper.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 427 | LEVEL II FIELDWORK B | 8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is the second of two 12 week full time experiences in which students will be placed in a setting aligned with DePaul's curriculum design under the supervision of an academic fieldwork educator for an in-depth learning experience to prepare for entry level practice. During these 12 weeks, students will focus on gaining clinical skills inclusive of intervention planning, implementation, and review. In addition, students will be required to complete weekly discussion posts.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 431 | NEURO PROCESSING FOR OCCUPATIONAL PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course students will learn about the various systems that link to motor function, sensory function, behavioral-emotional function and perceptual- cognitive function. Students will be introduced to applied fundamentals and current advances in neuroscience that apply to occupational performance across the lifespan. Students will gain an appreciation of how neurological process impact the experience of health and well-being.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 432 | ETHICS AND ADVOCACY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Building on a strong sense of theory, students will demonstrate an ability to advocate for the profession as well as clients and the rights of persons with disabilities. Students will identify barriers and supports to occupational participation and develop strategies to advocate for increased satisfaction in occupational participation.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 433 | OT PROCESS WITH ADULTS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this first course of a two-course sequence, students will analyze the client factors, conditions, and contexts of adults who could benefit from or are receiving occupational therapy services across settings. In addition, students will learn the various service delivery models, inter-professional team roles & responsibilities, funding mechanisms, and relevant legislation that impact occupational therapy services for adults.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 434 | OT PROCESS WITH ADULTS II | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will build on the knowledge and skills learned in Adults I as they develop theory driven, evidence and occupation-based evaluations and interventions to promote the health and well-being of adults. Previous learning in orthotic selection and fabrication, neuroanatomy, ergonomics, and health disparities will be applied through case-based learning.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 435 | SCHOLARLY INQUIRY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, the third course in the evidence-based practice sequence, students will apply their skills in asking relevant questions and searching and locating relevant literature. Based upon the student's experiences in community sites and Level I fieldwork, and in conjunction with a community partner or Level I fieldwork educator (as possible), students will develop questions for inquiry and develop a proposal for searching the literature to answer one of the questions in preparation for the EBP Project Ready course.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 436 | LEVEL I FIELDWORK C: ADULTS & AGING | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

In this fieldwork experience, students will be placed in clinical and/or community sites to gain an appreciation for how environmental, social, and physical supports and barriers shape occupational performance among adults. By the end of the experience, students will be required to complete an occupational profile, discussion posts, and a critical reflection paper.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 441 | MOVEMENT AND FUNCTION FOR OCCUPATIONAL PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines how gross and fine movement support or act as a barrier to occupational performance. Students will apply biomechanical, ecological, and dynamic systems theories to support functional movement for participation in occupation. Students will learn related concepts relevant for occupational therapy practice such as force principles, ergonomics, posture, transfers, range of motion, and manual muscle testing. Students will be introduced to occupational therapy interventions for various muscle, tendon, bone, nerve, and joint conditions.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 442 | THINKING IN SYSTEMS | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on the contextual factors that impact occupational therapy practice such as government, private, and public structures, agencies, and policies. Students will explore various occupational therapy roles such as consultant, care coordinator, case manager within community, clinical, and primary care settings. This course will address reimbursement systems and funding mechanisms from a systems level perspective.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 445 | EVIDENCE BASED PRACTICE PROJECT READY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course requires students to integrate and apply the EPB reasoning processes and skills developed in the prior three EPB courses. In this course, students will analyze and critique evidence-based literature to support and inform the implementation of an occupation-based project in a clinic or community setting. Students will learn how to examine, select, and generate group level outcomes (program evaluation). Students will then develop a plan for implementation and evaluation of the project.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 451 | POSITIONING AND TECHNOLOGY TO ENABLE OCCUPATIONAL PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with the theoretical basis and practical applications for use of orthotics, prosthetics, assistive technology, and positioning systems. Students will also learn to use technology to support telehealth practice and documentation.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 452 | COMMUNITY PRACTICE WITH GROUPS AND POPULATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the culmination of the Community, Advocacy, and Justice thread within the curriculum. Students will demonstrate the skills, knowledge, and attitudes necessary for effective occupational therapy practice with groups and populations in the community. Students will learn to design programs to promote health and wellness through participation in occupations in community settings.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 453 | OLDER ADULTS & AGING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on occupational therapy practice with older adults in community and clinical settings. This course will explore various conditions, practice settings, service delivery models, and opportunities for inter-professional teamwork with older adults. Students will utilize theories, assessment tools and evidence-based intervention strategies to support the well-being of older adults at home and in community. Students will apply strategies for addressing health disparities that exist among different groups of older adults.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 455 | EVIDENCE BASED PRACTICE PROJECT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, students will implement a short occupation and evidence-based project in a clinical or community setting and evaluate the effectiveness of the project. The culmination of the project will be a scholarly presentation to the OT department at the end of the quarter. Students will learn how to examine and apply methods for presentation and dissemination of outcomes to diverse audiences.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 461 | MANAGEMENT AND LEADERSHIP ACROSS SETTINGS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course students will learn the theories and skills that support management and leadership roles. Students will understand political, regulatory, economic, and social dynamics that influence occupational therapy service delivery. Students will learn personnel management, leadership models, negotiation skills, conflict resolution, program development, entrepreneurship, fiscal management, advocacy, and marketing. Students will learn to manage people and resources effectively and responsibly.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

OT 471 | PRACTICE READY FOR FIELDWORK AND BEYOND | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on student readiness for fieldwork level II. Students will participate in clinical and community scenarios involving ambiguous situations, ethical issues, clinical reasoning, safety precautions, receiving and giving professional constructive feedback, and addressing what to do in uncertain situations.

Graduate standing in the occupational therapy program is a prerequisite for this class.

Peace, Justice and Conflict Studies (PAX)

PAX 101 | EVERYDAY CONFLICT: ANALYSIS, EVALUATION, AND PRACTICES FOR MOVING FORWARD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course investigates the types of conflict that we encounter throughout our everyday life—with friends, families, or co-workers. It begins with the thesis that not all conflict is immediately harmful, since some can become fruitful. The course takes an interdisciplinary approach to study the various sources of conflict value differences, personality styles, identity needs, etc. and viable strategies for approaching and even resolving them in a nonviolent way.

PAX 102 | CHICAGO AND STRATEGIC NONVIOLENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This introductory course explores active nonviolence as a multifaceted approach for challenging and overcoming violence without using violence in any of its manifestations, but particularly the forms of psychological, cultural, and structural violence that often undergird direct physical violence. The course investigates the many ways in which nonviolent approaches have been used strategically in Chicago by antiviolence organizations, religious institutions, and community development groups. The course will introduce some history and theory of active nonviolence and study two to three specific issues in Chicago.

PAX 112 | CHICAGO JUSTICE AND THE WORK FOR SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Using a multidisciplinary approach, this course investigates the variety of ways in which Chicago social and cultural changes result in a more just Chicago. The city has many agents working through multiple approaches using the ideas and tools from many institutions, such as religious, artistic, and educational ones, as well as community development and advocacy groups, which work to reduce the impact of historical oppression on, e.g., education, housing, and health care access. The course will introduce some history and theory of social justice and study two to three specific issues in Chicago.

PAX 200 | COMMUNITIES WORKING FOR SUSTAINABLE JUSTICE AND PEACE: SERVICE IN CHICAGO AND THE U.S. | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course introduces central concepts and strategies that can help U.S. society move toward sustainable justice and peace. A selection of issues relevant to students' service sites may include: a study of different forms of violence, such as structural and direct violence, an examination of nonviolent interventions for action and social change, and a recognition of the links with other parallel concerns (poverty, women's issues, social inequity). Students work 25 hours at community service organizations to provide a key learning resource.

PAX 201 | FRAMEWORKS FOR PEACE: PRACTICAL MODELS FOR SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introductory course to positive models for building a peace culture, addressing structural conflicts and injustice, and discovering viable resolutions.

PAX 202 | ACTIVE NONVIOLENCE: PRACTICAL AND CREATIVE APPROACHES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the practice of active nonviolence that investigates citizen diplomacy in the face of ongoing political conflict, the roles that individuals can take for intervening effectively in (especially) potentially harmful and violent situations, and the path to providing organizational support for all levels to learn strategies of active nonviolence, such as "Campaign Nonviolence."

PAX 206 | BOUNDARIES AND IDENTITIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores how identity formation is shaped by cultural, historical, and political construction of barriers, borders, and boundaries, and how such formations are intertwined with ethnicity, race, nationality, gender and class. Cross-listed with INT 206 and GEO 206.

PAX 210 | INTERNATIONAL CONFLICT AND PEACEBUILDING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This interdisciplinary course examines the basic questions of peace studies in different and "diverse" contexts, from personal relationships to societies and states, and addresses the consequences of conflict and conflict resolution in the contemporary world.

PAX 212 | SOCIAL JUSTICE AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of the mutual interdependence of social justice and non-violence, understanding it as a strategy for social change and a vision for social concord. Formerly PAX 230.

PAX 214 | CONFLICT: STORYTELLING, INTERVENTION, NEGOTIATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of theories of conflict and the intervention methods for dealing with conflicts at the interpersonal and group levels.

PAX 218 | HUMAN RIGHTS: PROMISE AND PROBLEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore the historical origins, foundational principles, and socio-political efficacy of human rights discourse in contemporary international relations, domestic politics, and ethical thought. It considers issues such as the religious and/or secular foundation of human rights; their universality in relation to particular cultural customs and norms; the relative priority of individual and collective rights; and the legitimacy of international humanitarian intervention in sovereign nations.

PAX 220 | SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT FOR PEACE AND JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will look at the various ways in which people across the globe become engaged in social issues of importance, particularly those dealing with achieving justice and peace. Examples are human rights, environmental protection, labor issues, sustainable development alternatives, political representation, and gender issues.

PAX 225 | TRANSNATIONAL GRASSROOTS SOCIAL MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an introductory course on that ways in which ordinary communities of people have promoted peace through nonviolent resistance and transnational connections. Each section of the course may take one specific situation of such collaborative efforts as the main case study or arena of action. Such situations will involve developing understandings of a history of the involvement of the United States with another country, whether through foreign aid or military interventions, and the efforts of citizens of both countries in working for a sustainable peace. The value of transnational solidarity and the complexities of power dynamics in both countries and between citizens will be studied. Formerly PAX 245.

PAX 228 | IDENTITY, PRIVILEGE, AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The course investigates the social impact stemming from disparities in social privilege and advantage. It asks which type of these help to achieve a true democracy and the equity of opportunity for that. It investigates those socially constructed disparities grounded in or producing failures in justice, yet existing as part of an institutional or structural background. Strategies for analyzing these in relation to social justice lead to discussions of the need for social change.

PAX 231 | ANALYZING POVERTY, ITS CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course investigates a variety of viewpoints on the causes and effects of poverty. Poverty is a complex and multidimensional condition often difficult to measure, comprehend and change. It includes lack of or limited access to material needs (food, water, shelter, health care, etc.), social relations (participation, inclusion, rights, etc.), income and wealth (unemployment, resources, etc.) and moral, psychological, or spiritual well-being. This course reviews the current poverty debates from the economic, policy, social, political, cultural and moral perspectives that influence the implementation of poverty reduction programs.

PAX 235 | THE ETHICS OF POVERTY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course reviews the current poverty debates from the economic, policy, social, political, and cultural perspectives that influence the implementation of poverty reduction programs, in order to bring an ethical analysis to bear on the degree of moral responsibility that can be argued for when seeking appropriate solutions to global poverty. Several ethical frameworks will be consider, allowing students to learn the critical application of arguments and evidence to a seemingly intransigent phenomenon.

PAX 238 | TOPICS ON HOMELESSNESS AND POVERTY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will investigate one topic touching on the intersections of those living in poverty and those living without a home, whether temporarily or chronically. It will locate its discussion by drawing on several disciplines, both in the humanities and the social sciences, that can contribute toward the chosen topic. It will evaluate both historical and recent interventions to address the unhoused and those living in poverty (such as housing first programs), in particular attending critically to the value issues that can underlie such interventions.

PAX 240 | VOICES OF WAR AND PEACE: ART, LITERATURE AND FILM | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray warfare and the attempts to end violence and build reconciliation and peace.

PAX 241 | HUMAN RIGHTS UNDER THE LENSES OF FILM AND OTHER ARTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray situations in the United States and globally that limit human rights. Analyses of both the theoretical literature on human rights and the cinematic and other artistic attempts to capture both violations of human rights and the restoration and protection of these will be central to the course.

PAX 242 | PICTURES OF INJUSTICE: NARRATIVE ARTS IN SOCIAL JUSTICE MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will critically examine social justice themes in documentary and feature films in order to consider the role film and filmmaking can play in social justice movements. Together, we will carefully analyze a wide variety of films with the goal of critically examining their representations of race, gender, class and their depiction of agency of their subjects. We will also examine the storytelling and technical techniques used by filmmakers and how those techniques support the goals of filmmakers. Finally, we will examine case studies of activists who are using film and film-making as a part of movements for social justice. Students will leave this course with a better understanding of the ethics of filmmaking and the use of film in social movements. They will be more critical consumers of media and more familiar with a variety of social justice issues. Cross-listed with CPL 242.

PAX 243 | VISUALIZING POVERTY THROUGH FILM AND NARRATIVES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Poverty is a complex and multidimensional condition often difficult to measure, comprehend and change. The use of film, literature and other arts allow for those who do not directly experience poverty to develop an understanding through their empathic responses to persons living in poverty. The course will use the lenses of film and literary analysis to measure the success of those uses, in light of a critical analysis of the need to alleviate poverty and its effects.

PAX 244 | ARCHEOLOGY OF POWER: TESTIMONIES FROM FILM, LITERATURE, AND NARRATIVES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an overview of the ways in which the arts, including literature and film, portray power and its effects, particularly where these are unjust and oppressive. Different theories of power are investigated, so that students can begin a critical analysis of both the benefits and the limitations of the use of power and its effects on those using it well and abusing it. The ability of the arts to aid our understanding of power will be central to the course.

PAX 250 | TOPICS: TOOLS FOR SOCIAL CHANGE | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A workshop covering practical instruction in mediation, conflict resolution, peace circles, the arts, meditative practices, critical pedagogy, and other strategies and practices for promoting social change with active nonviolence.

PAX 251 | TOPICS: TOOLS TO SUPPORT JUSTICE, HUMAN RIGHTS, AND PEACEBUILDING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A course giving practical training, along with theoretical and historical background, for practices that enhance work on nonviolent strategies for social change.

PAX 252 | FORGIVENESS AND RECONCILIATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course combines the perspectives of religious studies and peace, justice, and conflict studies to examine forgiveness and reconciliation and their role in conflict resolution and the creation of just and peaceful societies. The course explores: 1) religious and psychological understandings of forgiveness and reconciliation; 2) religious methods and approaches to the pursuit of reconciliation between individuals and groups; 3) the role of forgiveness and reconciliation in conflict transformation and peacebuilding; and 4) applications of these concepts, methods, and approaches to case studies from around the world involving both personal and group dynamics. Cross-listed with REL 252.

PAX 253 | DESPAIR AND HOPE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course draws upon a variety of disciplines to examine despair and hope from theoretical and applied perspectives. The course explores religious and psychological understandings of despair and hope using a number of case studies, with particular attention to how despair and hope function in global crises, the Bible and theology, and nonviolent struggle. Cross-listed with REL 253.

PAX 255 | LOVE, HATE AND RECONCILIATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Reconciliation between people when there is disagreement or other forms of conflict or violence is a crucial process to alleviate the negative side of conflict. Love and hate are two of the strongest emotions and consequently can generate conflict. A philosophical analysis of these aspects of human existence can uncover resources for creative approaches to the forms of peace-building that include reconciliation processes, as well as provide ethical arguments for their value.

PAX 256 | INNER PEACE: EXPERIENCE AND PHILOSOPHICAL APPROACHES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The idea of inner peace is a theme throughout the histories of many civilizations since recorded history. It provides a twin to the more obvious idea of outer peace, or peace in the environments surrounding us, whether the neighborhood, our tribes and social groups, our nation with other nations. This course will study theories of peace and how these correlate with the theme of "inner" peace. It will ask what practices have been used to promote or foster inner peace. It will bring a philosophical and critical lens to these theories and practices, whether they are found in religious texts, political understandings, personal narratives or fictional accounts, psychology, or phenomenological and other philosophical approaches to peace.

PAX 268 | DISABILITY JUSTICE STUDIES: AN INTRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course explores disability from an interdisciplinary perspective: first-person accounts, disability rights "theory," history, and institutional and legal frameworks. The course considers a number of related topics: What is disability? Is disability socially constructed? What history led to the disability rights movement? We will then turn to readings about power and control, oppression and freedom in relation to disabilities, as well as the challenges of identity, inclusion, and self-determination, and the wide variety of disabilities.

PAX 270 | PEACE MOVEMENTS THROUGHOUT HISTORY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An exploration using the tools of both peace studies and historical studies to understand the different attempts to bring about a peaceful solution to a conflictual situation, whether this involves citizen refusal to accept a governmental stance (e.g., for military dictatorship, laws such as those for immigration) or actual aggressive events (international war, civil strife, oppressions through structural situations). The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus on a single movement.

PAX 271 | GLOBAL REFUGEE CRISIS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This is a survey of global refugee crisis and internal displacement between 1945 and the present. The course will focus on the following issues and challenges: human rights, definitions and causes of crisis, internal/external displacements, 'environmental' refugees, protection and integration, refugee children, and conflict resolutions in post-war societies. Cross-listed with HST 241.

PAX 275 | MOVEMENTS FOR GENDER AND TRANS JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An exploration using the tools of both justice studies and historical studies to understand the different aspects to bring about changes in the lives of those affected by unjust social structures and persons acting to limit their freedom due to gender or transgender factors. The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus on a single movement.

PAX 278 | DISABILITY JUSTICE, RIGHTS, AND POLICY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An exploration using the tools of both justice studies and historical studies to understand the different aspects to bring about changes in the lives of those affected by disabilities and the ways in which a culture and its laws and persons limit the freedom and basic rights of those living with disability. The course will be comparative and interdisciplinary, but may focus one or several aspects of the disabilities movement.

PAX 290 | TOPICS ON JUSTICE AND PEACE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A topics course geared to introductory level discussions of the core elements of justice and peace-building as they occur in specific venues, such as religion.

PAX 299 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The student and faculty member will design a syllabus with readings and assignments appropriate for a lower division course in PJC.

Sophomore or above standing and at least one PAX course is a prerequisite for this class.

PAX 300 | TOPICS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A seminar on a key theoretical topic in the interdisciplinary fields covered by the Peace, Justice, and Conflict Studies Program, using a variety of theoretical positions.

(Two from PAX 200, 210, 212, 214, 220) or permission of the Program Director is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 301 | THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NONVIOLENT ACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover the basic theoretical groundwork on the practice of nonviolent action. As such, it will deal in depth with the subject matter of peace and justice making in the context of domestic and international conflict, specifically through a close reading and critical analysis of Gene Sharp's seminal The Politics of Nonviolent Action and other selected texts. Through this text, we will critically examine the philosophy and methods of nonviolent action, asking about their effectiveness and desirability in the context of real-world conflict situations, and analyzing their tactics as resources for thinking creatively about the practice of nonviolent action in the context of struggles for social change in the contemporary world.

One 200-level PAX course or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 303 | BORDER MATTERS: LITERATURE & CULTURE IN THE LATINO/A BORDERLANDS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, we will study the values and dynamic that is promoted in different Latino communities in the United States. In order to give context to the present situation of Latinos in the U.S. we will study some of the social issues in the countries of origin which have resulted in immigration and their encounter with borderlands. The notion of a Latina and Latino cultural "borderlands" has proven a ubiquitous and powerful conceptual paradigm in recent years, organizing distinct ethnic groups (Cuban American, Mexican American, Central American, Puerto Rican, etc.) according to the rubrics of pan-ethnic identity labels (Hispanic, Latina/Latino, etc.) and transnational geographies (Latin America, the Americas, etc.). This course will examine a wide range of Latino/a literary expressions produced in the Latina/Latino borderlands, particularly in areas of cultural contact and conflict. While the most obvious focus will be the Texas-Mexico border region, including ongoing efforts to establish the public meaning of the Alamo, additional borderlands, literal and figurative, will be considered. The Latina and Latino borderlands have also inspired critics and theorists to imagine postmodern, post-national subject formations, in which questions of ethnicity, gender, and sexuality are shifted from the margins to the center of critical discourse. We will therefore investigate the use and limits of recent "border theory". Cross-listed with LST 303.

PAX 304 | TOPICS IN MIGRATION AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the integral role that different processes of mobility play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, demographic, economic, and political variables. Students also look at the role of state and non-state actors and organizations.

PAX 306 | GLOBAL EMPIRES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students gain an acquaintance with theories of imperialism and post-colonial theory through historically situated studies. 'Power' serves as the generative concept for this course, to be understood as emergent at multi-scalar levels. Cross-listed with INT 306.

PAX 308 | NATURE, SOCIETY AND POWER | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary exploration of environmental issues pertinent to international studies. The reproduction of human societies occurs in a symbiotic relationship with the natural world, yet in the modern era nature has come to be increasingly conceptualized as a resource. This course explores the repercussions of this instrumental separation of nature from culture and society. Cross-listed with INT 308.

PAX 309 | CRITICAL DEVELOPMENT THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The uneven integration of the world economy has been shaped by a succession of policies and theories of development, modernization, and globalization. This course investigates how these theories and policies have contributed to centrally organizing concepts such as poverty, inequality, growth, and progress, which have been instrumental in ordering contemporary societies. Cross-listed with INT 309.

PAX 312 | TRANSCENDING COEXISTENCE: TRUTH, JUSTICE, AND RECONCILIATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course looks at a number of post-conflict situations and draws on a multi-perspectival series of reports concerning the processes and outcomes of them. It considers several of these questions: What happens after a ceasefire? What signifies peace: the signing of a peace agreement, or a free and fair democratic election, or a long-awaited atmosphere of calm? How do complex processes of reconciliation involve tending to the individual and societal needs associated with the transition from chaos and conflict to a new, shared, post-conflict future. How might a society's search for the "truth," its public grappling with justice and forgiveness, and the possibilities of accountability, (re-)building trust, and restoring relationships fortify a post-conflict area against the recurrence of conflict as well as empower all concerned (oppressed and oppressors) to pursue a collaborative, just, and peaceful coexistence? Examining multiple case studies through the lenses of theory, best practices, and primary source transcripts and footage of Truth and Reconciliation Commission proceedings, the course explores the possibilities and challenges of reconciliation.

PAX 210 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 313 | BEYOND CONFLICT RESOLUTION: THE EVOLUTION OF GRASSROOTS PEACEBUILDING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary inquiry that draws on learning from different disciplines as well as our experiences in service, activism, and other forms of civic engagement. Through readings, discussions, and research, students will deepen their capacity for critical inquiry and integrative analysis concerning the causes, sustaining factors, and possible resolutions of conflict, violence, and injustice. We will ask challenging questions about conflict resolution, investigate contemporary developments in grassroots peacebuilding, and assess the comparative advantages and distinct applications of various conflict resolution modalities.

PAX 210 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 316 | TOPICS IN CRITICAL THEORY, PHILOSOPHY, POLICY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course investigates how critical political and social theories, philosophy, and policies have contributed to centrally organizing concepts such as poverty, inequality, growth, and progress, which have been instrumental in ordering contemporary societies.

PAX 320 | TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: THEORY AND PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to transformative justice responses to violence that do not rely on state institutions. These include collective processes for support and healing, intervention, accountability, and prevention. The pedagogical praxis of learning will be through communal peacemaking circles and collective strategy sessions to create community responses to violence. Cross-listed with WGS 320.

PAX 321 | PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICES OF RESTORATIVE JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Together we will examine the principles of restorative justice in relation to a number of systems and sites of justice in contemporary society. The topics of our inquiries include: justice/injustice, peace, violence/non-violence, reconciliation, harm/accountability, traditional values and practices, rights, conflict, diversity, structural (social) inequality, and local-state-global initiatives. Importantly, we will practice peace circles throughout the semester as our mode of engagement in class.

PAX 330 | THE UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS: ORIGINS AND CONTROVERSIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This seminar will examine the intellectual origins and historical traditions of "human rights" that led to the formal development of the UN Declaration of Universal Human Rights in 1948. While we will address 18th and 19th century influences on human rights thinking and practices, we will concentrate on 20th century contexts of two world wars, revolution, and genocide as they created the imperative for an agreed-upon international statement on human rights. The seminar will also examine the debates and negotiations among the authors of the Universal Declaration, the significance of the declaration during the cold war, and contemporary controversies about human rights in the post-9/11 world.

PAX 218 or permission of the instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 331 | LIBERATION THEOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Liberation Theology focuses upon a radical movement for the transformation of Christianity that originated in the "Christian Base Communities" of Latin America and spread from there to North America and the Third World. Tested in the fires of civil wars in Central American and political repression in Brazil and other parts of Latin America in the 1970s and 80s, Liberation Theology today seeks to respond to the forces of globalization. Liberation theology and Christian base communities will be studied in comparison to other religious movements in Latin America such as Pentecostalism. This course is offered in conjunction with the Peace, Justice and Conflict Studies program, the Master of Arts in Liberal Studies program and the Catholic Studies Program. We will give special attention to the impact of the new global economic order on the poorest segments of Latin American societies and to the issue of global migration. Cross-listed with REL 351 and CTH 341.

PAX 340 | HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE GLOBAL CONTEXT: CHALLENGES AND INTERVENTIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The course investigates the ways in which the differing relations among nation-states, global nongovernmental organizations, and other groups of human rights supporters function to deal effectively with human rights protections and violations that are increasingly transnational in strategies and outcomes.

PAX 218 or permission of the instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 344 | TOPICS IN ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores a specific topic in environmental justice, such as advocacy. For example, the roles of individuals and organizations in advocacy are discussed, particularly how power arrangements facilitate or impede consensus building, how legislation is written, and how this process impacts communities of color. Special attention is paid to advocacy techniques such as lobbying, movement-building, public education and litigation.

PAX 345 | WOMEN, WAR, AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course aims to make feminist sense of contemporary wars and conflicts. It analyzes the intersections between gender, race, class, and ethnicity in national conflicts. The class traces the gendered processes of defining citizenship, national identity and security, and examines the role of institutions like the military in the construction of femininity and masculinity. The course focuses on the gendered impact of war and conflict through examining torture, mass rape, genocide, and refugee displacement. It analyzes the strategies used by women's and feminist movements to oppose war and conflict, and the gendered impact of war prevention, peacekeeping, and post-war reconstruction. The class draws on cases from Africa, the Americas, Asia, Europe, and the Middle East and North Africa. The class is interdisciplinary and gives equal weight to theory and practice while drawing on writings by local and global activists and theorists. Cross-listed with WGS 345.

PAX 348 | INDIGENOUS POLITICAL STRUGGLES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the struggles for social justice and the right to have rights by indigenous peoples. It emphasizes contemporary cases and the cultural contexts in which indigenous political strategies have developed and transformed. It uses historical data to understand the issues faced by indigenous peoples. Students conduct research on indigenous struggles and their connections to other social movements at the local, national, and international levels. Cross-listed with LST 348.

PAX 350 | CAPSTONE IN PEACE, JUSTICE & CONFLICT STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An integrative seminar drawing together students' theoretical work and hands-on expertise.

Three 200-level PAX courses or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

PAX 351 | GEOGRAPHY, FOOD AND JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

While the need for food is universal, geographies of food production, distribution and consumption are anything but even. This leads to multiple issues of food injustice at a variety of scales. This course critically examines the contemporary global food system with the goal of providing students with skills and knowledge to engage in food justice activism. Students study the development of food systems and how inequalities have emerged in production, distribution and consumption. The course then explores food justice movements including the emergence of alternative food networks in the U.S and internationally. Assignments may engage students in local food projects and or/advocacy campaigns. Cross-listed with GEO 351 and INT 329.

PAX 360 | TOPICS IN DEVELOPMENT STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A survey of the problem of endemic poverty in the Third World, together with a consideration of the various forms of public action designed to alleviate poverty. Considerable attention will be paid to the problems of rural poverty and the pitfalls and possibilities of industrialization.

PAX 362 | LANGUAGE AND THE POLITICS OF TERROR | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Politics is, among other things, the arena in which human bodies are broken. This course will concern itself with the breaking of human bodies through torture, genocide, war and poverty. Throughout, a focus will be maintained on the interface between bodies and language, on how bodies placed under extremes of pain and degradation lose their capacity for speech, and how language reaches its intrinsic limits in trying to represent bodies in pain. Cross-listed with INT 362.

PAX 364 | POLITICAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY: TRANSNATIONAL FEMINIST TALES OF HEALING AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class explores the interplay of political, social, economic and aesthetic factors in feminist autobiography from a transnational perspective. We examine the ways that women's autobiography is being used to write themselves into history. Story is integral in the process of healing and building solidarity and coalitions for gender based organizing. Further, autobiography creates a space for the "alter-history" to be told: the absence of testimony and experience is created for others to gain hope, strength, and deeper understanding of others and themselves. Various forms and critiques of feminist autobiographies are explored, and how each impacts the political possibilities for readers. Cross-listed with WGS 364.

PAX 365 | TOPICS IN WAR AND PEACE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will deal with one of many ways to discuss the large-scale conflict that is war and the different methods to prevent, delay, and conclude such conflicts, in order to have peace. Cross-listed with INT 365.

PAX 372 | TRAUMA, ART & RESILIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The goal of recovery from trauma response engages the natural resilience of individuals through a multimodal healing process that often engages in arts activities, both individually or through community efforts. This course will study recent theories on the biological, psychological, and social-cultural components of how human respond to extreme difficulties, whether natural disaster or accidents, or an ongoing environment of oppression, marginalization, and poverty. It will then enlist students in some of the modalities for resilience training that have been proven highly effective in multiple settings.

PAX 373 | LITERATURE OF WAR IN THE 20TH CENTURY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

For as long as there has been recorded history, there have been war...and literature of wars. Though a good deal of this literature has lauded the exploits and heroicism of individual warriors, much has also described the deprivations and destructiveness of war itself. The 20th century was one of the most violent epochs in world history and generated a rich literature of war, both starkly realistic and imaginatively symbolic. This course will examine the literature of war in the 20th century, beginning with the First World War, then touching on the Second World and Cold wars, as well as wars of repression and national liberation. We will explore memoirs, novels, short stories, poetry, and films of these conflicts to gain a deeper understanding of "the pity of war."

PAX 380 | TOPICS IN NONVIOLENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This advanced seminar will review historical, philosophical, and practical approaches to the use of nonviolence for addressing injustice and conflicts, including violent ones, as well as for enhancing life.

One 200-level PAX course is a prerequisite for this course.

PRF 619 | THE DIRECTOR AND THE NEW PLAY DEVELOPMENT PROCESS | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is offered every other year and explores the director's role in the development of new plays. MFA Directors work with professional playwrights on new work. Directors are introduced to the many ways they may be charged with presenting new work, including table readings, staged readings, workshops, designed workshops and world premieres. Over the course of the quarter, directors rehearse and present one sit-down reading and one staged reading. Additionally, students rehearse and present a staged reading in a professional situation. (3 quarter hours)

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 620 | GRAD MOVEMENT I: NEUTRAL MASK & CORPOREALEXPRESSION | 2 quarter hours*(Graduate)

At the same time students are studying the components of outer-expressivity, they explore how their slightest movement produces meaning. This is done through the study of neutrality or neutral mask and corporeal or full-bodied story-telling without text.

PRF 522 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 621 | GRADUATE MOVEMENT II: STORYTELLING & THE WORLD OF PLAY | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

Actors further their ability to tell the story of a specific person in a specific world by focusing on how that world is evidenced in movement behaviors and how that person abides by or breaks the movement rules. Students cultivate their physical imagination in order to dynamically inhabit the world of the play.

PRF 523 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 622 | GRADUATE MOVEMENT II: MASK/WHOLE BODY | 3 quarter hours(Graduate)

While wearing a mask to conceal facial expression, students learn to involve their whole body in telling the story. This furthers outer-expressivity, physical dynamics, and encourages play and creativity.

PRF 621 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 623 | GRADUATE MOVEMENT II: RED NOSE/FLYING | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

PRF 711 | GRADUATE ACTING III: COMPANY CREATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is a journey with toolbox through creating and producing ensemble-based theater. Students follow two pathways: creating theater and producing theater. The path of creating follows on the self-generated work of MFA I and II Workshops, empowering the class to imagine and rehearse an original piece of theater through an invented process. Weekly rehearsal meetings build the piece into a "producer's rehearsal" at the end of the quarter. The path of producing introduces the class to tools necessary for mounting theater in Chicago or elsewhere. Using the piece under construction as their example, the students delegate and coordinate work on mission statement, company structure/contracts, by-laws, board formation, not-for-profit/tax-exempt status, grant writing, fundraising, space rental, rehearsal process, press relations, advertising, audience development, festivals, transfers, documentation, and touring.

PRF 613 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 712 | GRADUATE ACTING III: PROFESSIONAL PREPARATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course follows on the Audition class from fall quarter bringing the students into simulated auditions for weekly guests including professional casting directors, casting agents, talent managers, artistic directors, and filmmakers from Chicago and beyond. Feedback will focus on empowering the actors to strengthen their approach, courage, effectiveness and flexibility in the casting process as felt in the "real world."

PRF 711 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 713 | GRADUATE ACTING III: ADVANCED IMPROVISATION | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This intensive course capstones the impulse work and Spolin-based work from MFA I Improvisation by updating the class to improvisational forms that extend beyond scenic and sketch. Mining the rich and still-unfolding history of Chicago improvisation, students flex their creative muscles by exploring long-form improvisational models and unique multi-scenic structures. (2 quarter hours)

PRF 712 and status as a Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 714 | AUDITION | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

This studio-based class introduces the student to multiple forms of audition practiced in professional theater as well as those forms practiced in film, television, and commercials. Students train rigorously with monologues, cold readings, callback scenes, copy reading, and reader-style auditions in weekly class simulations. The course will cover methods for researching and attending auditions, finding and preparing suitable material, as well as handling the audition process professionally and successfully. Discussions of "type," "color-blind casting," manager/agent relationships, and ethical concerns of auditions will be included. (3 quarter hours)

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 715 | MFA INDEPENDENT PROJECT | 5 quarter hours (Graduate)

The actor is inspired to create, collaborate or study in an area of interest within acting or theatre for twenty or more contact/practice hours in consultation with a Faculty Advisor resulting in a 15-page paper.

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 716 | GRADUATE SHOWCASE | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

Through the rehearsal process, graduate acting majors prepare monologues and scenes, culminating ultimately in a showcase for an invited audience of casting directors, agents, and directors. (3 quarter hours)

Status as Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRF 720 | GRADUATE ON-CAMERA II: AUDITIONING FOR THE CAMERA | 3 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course engages selected readings to acquaint students with different approaches to ethics. Those typically covered include virtue ethics, Stoic ethics, Kantian ethics, utilitarianism, existentialism, nihilism, and rights ethics. Organizing questions are: How are we to live? What kind of people should we become? How do we distinguish right from wrong? What is most just? What characterizes a good life? The course will equip students with useful tools and frameworks for making moral judgments and identifying the motivations and principles that shape ethical decision-making.

PHL 202 | PHILOSOPHY OF GOD | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines theoretical approaches to determining the existence and nature of God. Readings are selected from seminal figures in the history of philosophy describing God as, for example, all-knowing, creator and the ultimate source of moral goodness. Issues of concern for both philosophy and religion are possible topics-free will, the reality of evil, the afterlife. Atheism, the denial of God's existence, may also be critically reviewed.

PHL 204 | EXISTENTIAL THEMES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course we study the principal ideas regarding the human condition, such as birth, death, responsibility, absurdity, alienation, freedom, God, and authenticity. Offering a careful examination of the "big questions" of philosophical inquiry, the course equips students with tools to critically reflect on themselves and their place in the world.

PHL 206 | TOPICS AND CONTROVERSIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class is an exploration of questions that have awakened interesting and controversial discussions in the history of philosophy, and/or of topics that have been particularly challenging for philosophical inquiry. Students will broach such controversies from multiple perspectives and are encouraged to develop their own views after careful reflection and examination of differing standpoints. Comparative and critical analysis are central to this course.

PHL 208 | WHAT IS A PERSON? | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines how our selfhood and identity are shaped by ethical, political, and aesthetic values. Possible topics include: human existence and the personhood of animals; singularity and community; the standpoint and situatedness that shape our knowledge as persons and of persons; relationality and vulnerability; the human conditions of birth and death; consciousness and self-consciousness; the relationship between the body and the soul; the role that colonial, sexist, and racist assumptions have played in determining personhood; and reflections on selfhood in the context of modern technology, artificial intelligence, or discourses about the post-human.

PHL 209 | CRIME AND PUNISHMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the nature of crime and the justification of punishment. Through historical and contemporary readings, basic issues such as what crime and punishment actually are, how punishment has been and continues to be justified, and the various forms that penal practices have taken will be explored. The course will also examine the question of social justice as it relates to punishment and the vexed problem of whether any forms of crime can ever be morally justified.

PHL 228 | NEUROETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines moral standards and issues as these arise in the practice of neuroscience. Advances in this field have developed unprecedented ways of understanding, predicting, and even, influencing and controlling the human mind and, through this, human behavior. Neuroethics considers the ethical dilemmas that emerge in such research and the technologies that it fosters as well as the challenges these advances pose to some of the fundamental underlying concepts of moral theory: human nature, personal identity, and moral responsibility itself. Cross-listed with NEU 228.

PHL 229 | BIOMEDICAL ETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines moral standards as they apply to the various dimensions of medical institutions and practices. It reviews the major ethical theories, and discusses the ways in which the moral principles of nonmaleficence, autonomy, beneficence, and justice ought to govern the delivery of health services, as well as how they are to serve as the ethical framework for the various kinds of social structures in which these services are provided.

PHL 230 | CONTEMPORARY TOPICS IN ETHICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines a range of ethical issues of contemporary concern, such as abortion, euthanasia, and capital punishment. Students develop the tools to make moral judgments about complex and pressing issues with reference to moral theories and key figures engaging these issues. Comparative and critical analysis are central to this course.

PHL 231 | PHILOSOPHY AND RACE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores a set of topics and issues having to do with the construction of race, racial identity, and racial difference, in the United States and beyond. Philosophical analysis and inquiry into issues such as racism, anti-Semitism, and genocide are also central to the course objectives. Students might reflect on the intersection between racial dynamics and other identity categories, such as gender, class, and sexuality.

PHL 232 | WHAT IS FREEDOM? | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course investigates various conceptions of freedom and what it means to ask such questions as "What is freedom?" in different historical times and cultural settings. Topics that might be covered include: free will vs. determinism; hard vs. soft determinism; the role of science in our conception of freedom; political notions of freedom; existential conceptualizations of freedom; and the difference between freedom and "doing or saying whatever you wish'.

PHL 233 | ISSUES IN SEX AND GENDER | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the relationship between, and the making of, sex and gender. It tackles the question of how we are and become sexuated, and critically explores the fluid boundary between the biological and the social. Topics that might be covered include: the social construction of masculinity and femininity; the nature of sexism and how it can be challenged and resisted; the ways in which intersex and trans experiences have shaped current discourse about sex and gender; binary vs. non-binary models of sex and gender; the materiality of bodies; and the policing of non-conforming bodies and identities. Students might reflect on the intersection between sex, gender, and other identity categories, such as race, class, and sexuality.

PHL 234 | PHILOSOPHY AND MODERN SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will consider such issues as the relation between society and the state, the connections between work, leisure and poverty, and the social effects of prejudice and resentment.

PHL 235 | ENVIRONMENTAL PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers an introduction to environmental philosophy and the philosophical significance of environmental questions. Topics that might be covered include: philosophical conceptions of nature and the precarious boundary between nature and culture; the legacy of ancient cosmology; the development of a scientific view of nature; environmental crises such as global warming, the extinction of species, or toxic waste; environmental justice; eco-feminism and indigenous conceptions of nature; the role of technology in our relating to nature; and ethical considerations around sustainability, our treatment of animals, or deforestation.

PHL 236 | PHILOSOPHY AND THE CITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the meaning of the city for philosophy and the meaning of urbanization for the formation of values. At its inception, philosophy concerned itself with questions having to do with community and the political organization of city-states (the Greek polis). These early concerns reverberate into our own times as philosophers across the world reflect on issues such as the modernization of cities; the dynamics of city life; urbanization in relation to globalization; the public sphere and our access to public spaces; the aesthetics of urban environments; and political concerns such as gentrification, racial justice, and zoning. Students might reflect on their own situatedness in the city of Chicago as it pertains to assigned readings and to the philosophical analysis of urban spaces.

PHL 237 | PHILOSOPHY, CONFLICT AND PEACE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course engages in philosophical reflection upon the causes of war and the possibilities for peace. Emphasis will be placed on both revealing the lived realities of conflict and in situating that lived reality in terms of both local and global structures of power and oppression. Topics and perspectives that may be considered include: epistemic perspectivism; structural violence; hierarchical and lateral power relations; colonialism, neocolonialism and decolonial approaches; revolution; positive and negative peace; and strategies of humanitarian engagement.

PHL 238 | FEMINIST PHILOSOPHIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers an examination of diverse feminist philosophies and their development throughout the 20th and 21st centuries. Feminist approaches that may be considered are: existential feminism; egalitarian feminism; feminisms of sexual difference; radical lesbian feminism; queer and trans feminisms; feminisms of color; and intersectional and transnational feminisms. Possible topics include: feminist readings and critiques of canonical philosophical texts and ideas; debates around biological determinism and social constructivism; feminist ethics, aesthetics, or philosophies of science; questions having to do with the relationship between sex, gender, and sexuality; the "woman" problem and the place and role of women in feminist thought; the coloniality of gender; women of color critiques of white feminisms; and debates around materiality and embodiment.

PHL 240 | LOVE, HATRED, AND RESENTMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines love, hatred, and resentment through various philosophical texts and methods. Questions addressed may include: What are emotions or affects? How do they arise? Are emotions such as love, hatred, and resentment legitimate and/or rational responses to particular situations? How do social conditions influence our emotions and how do emotions influence social conditions and/or actions? Do emotions play a role in forming knowledge? How have love, hatred, and resentment influenced culture, politics, aesthetics, and literature? How has philosophy treated these emotions historically and within contemporary work?

PHL 241 | ETHICS AND PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of the ways in which ethics can assist us in thinking about matters of public policy.

PHL 242 | PHILOSOPHY AND TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course raises classic philosophical questions within today's world of technological objects, systems, and thinking. Ethics, epistemology, aesthetics, and other philosophical frameworks are used to help understand the co-existence of humanity, nonhumans, and technologies. Specific topics of discussion may include: robots; social media; digital life; algorithms; weaponry; the "singularity"; genetic engineering; and geoengineering. Traditional and contemporary works of philosophy are supplemented by critical commentaries on techno-culture and an exploration of a variety of relevant creative work.

PHL 243 | PHILOSOPHY AND FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines philosophical themes that arise in films, and/or the philosophical significance of film. The course seeks to achieve a fluency not only in philosophy (its history, objects of concern, and critical practices), but also in the language of film interpretation (based primarily in an understanding of the practical and symbolic function of the medium).

PHL 244 | PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course broaches the significance of religion and religious phenomena for philosophy. Central issues of inquiry may include: religious skepticism; pluralism in religion; arguments for the existence of God; the impact of science on religious beliefs; the place of ritual and symbolism in human life; and religious language.

PHL 245 | REASON AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study not aimed at the production of particular skills but at understanding of the proper role of reason in social institutions and the formation of public opinion.

PHL 246 | BLACK AESTHETIC THOUGHT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course we examine the contributions to aesthetics made by black intellectuals in the United States and globally. The philosophical importance of black aesthetics in the areas of music, literature, and visual art will be considered as we address the historical circumstances of oppression and injustice that shaped the lives and work of the thinkers we shall study. Cross-listed with ABD 234.

PHL 247 | PHILOSOPHY AND THE VALUE OF MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, we will explore the role of music in philosophy, in particular, the value of music as a tool of social critique. Topics of investigation might include: an examination of the value of music as presented by various philosophers, the role of music in our cognitive development, and the culturally transformative power of music.

PHL 248 | BUSINESS ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of various ethical and moral issues arising in contemporary business and its activities, which affect our society and the world. Topics may include choice distortion of various sorts at the individual level: ethically better and worse corporate cultures; ethical business leadership; larger macro-economic and social trends, including developments within global capitalism; and capitalism as an ideology.

PHL 250 | PHILOSOPHY AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is based upon the premise that students can learn more by actively forming their own understanding. In this community engagement course students will assume a leadership role in the investigation of theories and concepts and in the interpretation of real-world experiences with the assistance of the instructor as a guide. Besides class assignments and class discussions, students will attend an array of community meetings, informational on-site sessions, and perform productively in a community setting. Course content and community engagement activities are geared to be comprehensive and thus will call on students to bring their intellect and prior experience to the forefront while working on specific tasks and providing tangible benefits for their community partner. Students will be encouraged to synthesize academic knowledge, community engagement experience, and their particular individual abilities with the aim of promoting the goals of their service site community as well as their classroom community. This course fulfils the Junior Year Experiential Learning requirement of the Liberal Studies Program.

PHL 263 | GENDER, RACE, AND CLASS: PHILOSOPHICAL PERSPECTIVES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class takes intersectional analysis as a fundamental premise for examining a range of philosophical perspectives on issues surrounding gender, race, and class, and the relationship between them. Drawing from diverse bodies of work, the course focuses most extensively on Black, Latinx, and decolonial feminisms, and their impact on contemporary philosophical discourse on these issues.

PHL 264 | PHILOSOPHICAL CRITIQUES OF COLONIALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the philosophical roots and significance of colonialism, as well as the logics of coloniality that still pervade our world today, both in the United States and globally. Possible topics include: the coloniality of time and space; epistemic violence and erasure; indigenous knowledge; Eurocentrism; the coloniality of gender and race, and the structures of oppression that result from it; liberation movements; non-violent and violent resistance; and globalization.

PHL 280 | CRITICAL THINKING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course has as its main purpose the exploration of ways of argumentation and critical skills that can be applied in everyday life experiences, professional settings, and media and advertising, among others. What makes one argument acceptable and another unacceptable? What makes one inference reasonable and another unreasonable? Philosophers employ a variety of methods to address such questions, and this course introduces students to some of those methods. Students will come away with a better understanding of the nature of argumentation and our capacity for reason, along with strong skills in critical thinking that can be applied to personal, political, and intellectual pursuits.

PHL 281 | BASIC LOGIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to logic for students of philosophy and related fields, such as mathematics, computer science, political science, social and cognitive sciences, and the health sciences. It is intended for beginners and covers fundamental logical concepts and techniques, methods of argument, and ways of detecting formal fallacies. The key outcomes are a clear understanding of rule-based reasoning, a tool that can be effective in a wide number of disciplines, and a practice of deductive reasoning, especially as used in legal professions, policy development, and exams such as the LSAT.

PHL 282 | SYMBOLIC LOGIC I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)
Symbolic Logic.PHL 283 | SYMBOLIC LOGIC II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

PHL 339 | BIOETHICS IN SOCIETY CAPSTONE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This seminar is an interdisciplinary study of the function of bioethics in society. As a discipline and as a profession, bioethics stands as a distinctive barometer of our evolving and shifting conceptions not only of health and well-being, but of the world, society, and even ourselves. The seminar explores the history of bioethics, bioethics as a clinical practice, and the various questions that arise at this crossroad from health science, medical humanities, religious studies, sociological, and philosophical perspectives. Cross-listed with REL 339 and SOC 339.

PHL 229 or HLTH 229 or REL 229 is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 341 | AESTHETICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course engages in a study of philosophical aesthetics as well as of the philosophy of art, as taken up by modern thinkers such as Kant, Schiller, and Hegel. Questions to be explored might include: the meaning of concepts such as beauty and the sublime; the role of art in our way of approaching and understanding the world, and its relationship to philosophy; the role of beauty and art in education; and the philosophical analysis of aesthetic judgments. Contemporary conceptions of art and beauty from perspectives such as feminism, decoloniality, black and Latino aesthetics may be included too.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 342 | PHILOSOPHY OF LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

One of the most important contemporary legal theorists, H.L.A. Hart, begins The Concept of Law by pointing out that "few questions concerning human society have been asked with such persistence and answered by serious thinkers in so many diverse, strange, and paradoxical ways as the question 'What is law?'" This course focuses on this question by considering various issues in the conception and practice of law such as the purpose and limits of law, the nature of judicial reasoning, property law, international law, and the relationship of law to morality and politics. The course examines different theories of law, including legal positivism, legal realism, critical race legal theory and critical feminist legal theory, asking how these different theories offer different conceptions of human rights, legal duties, liability and legal responsibility.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 377 | PHILOSOPHY AND DECONSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course is intended to be an introduction to the issues and methods of deconstruction. It begins with a look at the origins of deconstruction in thinkers such as Nietzsche, Kierkegaard, Heidegger, and Benjamin, before turning to the work of Jacques Derrida, the thinker most closely associated with the philosophical notion of "deconstruction." Through readings of Derrida and those who came to be identified with him (e.g., Blanchot, De Man, Kofman, Lacoue-Labarthe, Nancy, etc.), the course considers how deconstruction challenges such traditional philosophical notions as time as a series of linear presents, subjectivity as self-presence, representation as mimesis, and so on.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 378 | ANALYTIC PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours

PHL 383 | PHILOSOPHICAL THEMES IN LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course examines the philosophical themes raised by great works of literature. It does so by means of both close readings of these works and analyses of them through the lens of philosophy. Whether it be the Greek tragedies of Aeschylus and Sophocles being read alongside Aristotle and Nietzsche, or Proust being read with Bergson and Deleuze, the intention is to read literary and philosophical works side by side so as to see both how literary works develop or demonstrate certain philosophical concepts and how philosophical works can help illuminate literature.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 388 | TOPICS IN COMPARATIVE PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Draws on philosophies from different cultures to explore philosophical issues from a comparative perspective. Topics and areas will vary according to instructor.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 389 | LATIN AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

What does it mean to speak of Latin American philosophy? What is the difference between merely doing philosophy in Latin America and doing Latin American philosophy? These are issues that some thinkers in Latin America grapple with. This course explores the history and nature of Latin American philosophy. Moreover, it examines some of the reasons why, in sharp contrast to the European and Anglo-American philosophical traditions, questions of the very existence of an autochthonous Latin American philosophical tradition are heatedly debated both in Latin America and beyond. Subjects may also include decolonial approaches to philosophy from a Latin American perspective, and connections between art, literature and philosophy in Latin America.

(PHL 100 or HON 105 or any 200-level PHL course) is a prerequisite for this class.

PHL 529 | THE PHILOSOPHICAL FOUNDATIONS OF BIOETHICS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course examines and critically assesses the conceptual foundations of various theoretical approaches to bioethics. It is divided into three parts. Part I reviews the main Western ethical traditions 'Utilitarianism, Kantianism, and Virtue Ethics' and discusses how they lay the foundation for as well as challenge the canonical principles of bioethics, biomedical ethics, and medical ethics: autonomy, beneficence, justice, and non-maleficence. Part II examines the core concepts that define, in many ways, the field of bioethical inquiry: health, death, and dying as well as the concepts that frame the practice of healthcare itself and thereby shape and mold the ethical issues arising from it: race, class, gender, disability, and culture. Part III seeks to contextualize critically the conventional account of the discipline of bioethics by exploring a number of theoretical approaches derived from the European philosophical tradition and beyond. Specifically, it investigates the use and significance of such methods as phenomenology, deconstruction, feminism, and biopolitical analyses for rethinking the clinical encounter, the meaning of new medical technologies, and the relationship between scientific knowledge and social and political power.

PHL 661 | TOPICS IN FEMINIST THEORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Includes such themes as feminist ontologies, theories of discourse and writing, science and technology, etc.

PHL 697 | GRADUATE TEACHING PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examination of teaching method concepts.

PHL 698 | MASTER'S THESIS RESEARCH | 8.00 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent investigation of a philosophical problem for the thesis/dissertation.

PHL 699 | DISSERTATION RESEARCH | 1-12 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent investigation of a philosophical problem for the thesis/dissertation. Variable credit.

PHL 700 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

INDEPENDENT STUDY.

PHL 701 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to PhD candidates who have completed all course requirements and are actively working on a dissertation. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires dissertation advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

PHL 799 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to PhD candidates who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

Physical Education (PE)

PE 170 | ADVANCED AEROBIC CONDITIONING | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced instruction in appropriate conditioning techniques and daily participation in monitored strenuous levels of aerobic exercise. (2 credit hours)

PE 060 or PE 160 is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 181 | FLAG FOOTBALL | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Fundamental skills, group drills, strategy, and styles of offensive and defensive team play will be covered. Physical education majors will focus on teaching, officiating and assessment. (2 credit hours)

PE 206 | PERSONAL AND COMMUNITY HEALTH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to assist students in gaining insight into their health/wellness attitudes, behaviors, and choices. Health/wellness experiences and topics examine the total wellness concept, as a self-designed, dynamic style of living which focuses on optimal functioning and quality of life. Emphasis is placed on the physical, emotional, intellectual, social, occupational and spiritual dimensions of health/wellness.

PE 273 | HEALTH AND NUTRITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide students with an introductory background in nutrition throughout the life span. The study of foods and their effects upon health, development and performance of the individual will be emphasized. Software analysis of dietary intakes will facilitate an individual reflective approach to an application of the content.

PE 276 | TENNIS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Instruction and practice on basic patterns of movement of tennis skills. Knowledge of rules, etiquette, playing instructions and teaching methods for application of skills stressed. (2 credit hours)

PE 277 | GOLF | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic patterns of movement for a controlled golf swing with woods and irons; chipping, pitching and putting skills. Golf course rules and playing instructions. Teaching methods for application of skills stressed. (2 credit hours)

PE 278 | GOLF: FULL-SWING CLINIC | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide the student with advanced knowledge and practice of the full swing motion in golf. As a hybrid, it will allow the student to meet the professor and design the individual learning steps that will best meet the needs of each student. Course modules will include videotapes, handouts, support materials, and a quiz. Students will work through the modules independently to complete the course. Independent practice of the full swing outside of DePaul will be necessary for success in the course. Students must attend 4 1.5-hour classes per quarter. The first day and last day of class, as well as two additional 1.5-hour sessions arranged with the professor. (2 credit hours)

PE 302 | FIRST AID: RESPONDING TO EMERGENCIES | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide instruction, demonstration, and practice in application of basic emergency first aid skills. Students will learn to recognize the signs and symptoms of specific life threatening injuries and how to properly care for these injuries as citizen responders. Students will also have the opportunity to achieve Heartsaver CPR, AED, and First Aid Certification by the American Heart Association (2 credit hours)

PE 303 | ATHLETIC INJURIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Principles and techniques of prevention, recognition, treatment, care including adhesive strapping and wrapping and rehabilitation of common athletic injuries. Attention given to role of coach-trainer for emergency field procedures.

PE 304 | THE SCHOOL HEALTH PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to cover the scope of health services that could be provided through a comprehensive school health program. The school environment, community involvement, and legal/ethical considerations will be emphasized.

PE 311 | MOTOR DEVELOPMENT THROUGHOUT THE LIFE SPAN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Through lecture, film analysis, direct observation and instruction of children, and class discussion, students will gain a greater understanding of the maturational and environmental factors that affect human growth and motor development. Since this development is a process that continues throughout our life span, prenatal through adult characteristics will be examined.

PE 317 | PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course is designed to promote an understanding of the contribution that physical education makes to the elementary school curriculum and the development of the whole child. Lesson planning, instructional delivery, assessment of learning and classroom management will be focused as students engage in 15-20 hours of supervised field experience teaching whole classes of children in local schools. This course is for Physical Education majors only; however, EE majors will be considered if the course is needed for student teaching in the subsequent quarter. A Physical Education major in Advanced Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 325 | LANGUAGE AND LITERACY IN THE PHYSICAL EDUCATION SETTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This survey course explores the roles of language and literacy in the physical education setting and the teacher's responsibility for fostering them in all students. Through guided examination of prevailing theories of language acquisition and development that currently influence classroom practices across the K-12 continuum as well as across disciplinary and content areas, this course enables future teachers of physical education to grow in their understanding of the varied literacy-learning contexts that students bring to their physical education experiences. Issues that emerge in planning and conducting literacy instruction in programs with diverse student demographics are discussed and deliberated through University classroom sessions as well as required field experiences (10 hours, minimum; Level I). Course participants enjoy multiple opportunities to apply and analyze theories; to observe, critique, and practice planning as well as instructional strategies; to make informed curricular and instructional decisions; and to use assessment in conjunction with knowledge of child development to inform their planning. This course is designed to assist future teachers in producing students who are strategic readers, skilled speakers and writers, effective communicators, active listeners, independent and critical thinkers/learners, and problem solvers. Such teachers will exhibit awareness of their own metacognitive processes, respect for diversity, necessary social skills, and an ability to develop, set, and strive for professional goals. Candidates enrolled in this course will be encouraged to become education advocates, positive role models for their students, effective colleagues and collaborators, and lifelong learners.

PE 341 | HISTORICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL FOUNDATIONS OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will review the history of sport, fitness, and physical education; the impact that events have had on their development; and how physical education, fitness and the use of sport is influenced by society. Emphasis will be placed on philosophical perspectives and ethical values of this profession, both for the educator and the exercise science professional. Content is devoted to the study and understanding of sport and physical activity within numerous cultures throughout history to support diversity and help students consider the multiple perspectives expressed through the incorporation of sport and physical activity.

PE 346 | ORGANIZATION/ADMINISTRATION OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION, SPORTS & FITNESS PROGRAMS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Organization and Administration of Physical Education, Sports, and Fitness Programs. Emphasis is placed on understanding the management process: functions, application to various settings, program development, budget, facilities, marketing/promotion, and risk management.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as an Exercise Science student is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 351 | KINESIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Biomechanical analysis of the human body and how the human body moves. Scientific principals and their application to human movement are included. Application is made to fundamental and specialized motor skills. Development and maintenance of the human structure through intelligent selection of activities and efficient use. Lecture is supplemented with in class laboratory activities.

BIO 201 and BIO 202, Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or students in BS-EXR-SCI plan, are prerequisites for this class.

PE 352 | PHYSIOLOGY OF EXERCISE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Effects of muscular activity on the systems of the body. Nature of neuro-muscular activity, circulatory and respiratory adjustments during exercise, metabolic and environmental aspects of exercise, fatigue and training fitness. Lecture is supplemented with in class laboratory activities.

BIO 201 and BIO 202, Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or students in BS-EXR-SCI plan, are prerequisites for this class.

PE 360 | EDUCATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY AND MEASUREMENT OF LEARNING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course presents those principles of educational psychology specifically related to the psychomotor learning domain, the selection of tests to measure learning of physical skills for all populations, administration of tests, data collection, and the statistical analysis needed to evaluate the learning process. Specifically, measures of central tendency, variability and correlation statistics; and standard tests of health and skill related components of fitness, motor performance, anthropometry, and specific sport analysis will be included in this course.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as an Exercise Science student is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 362 | FITNESS TESTING, ASSESSMENT AND PRESCRIPTION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide theoretical knowledge of and select practical skills in fitness assessment, exercise program design, and client instruction in preparation for a national certification exam in personal training. Topics include guidelines for instructing safe, effective, and purposeful exercise, essentials of the client-trainer relationship, conducting health and fitness assessments, and designing and implementing appropriate exercise programming.

PE 372 | METHODS AND MATERIALS FOR PHYSICAL EDUC CURRICULUM/INSTRUCTION-SECONDARY SCHL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide an understanding of physical education curriculum planning, teaching methods, classroom management, unit and lesson plans in a secondary school setting. Students will engage in 20-24 hours of field work to observe and participate in whole class instruction, in an attempt to integrate theoretical classroom content with on-site experiences.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 374 | ADAPTED PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Diversified program of development activities, games, sports and rhythms suited to the interests, capacities, and limitations of students with disabilities who may not be able to participate in the general physical education program.

BIO 201 and BIO 202, Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or students in BS-EXR-SCI plan, are prerequisites for this class.

PE 378 | PHYSICAL EDUCATION STUDENT TEACHING IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Five school days a week of supervised teaching in a cooperating elementary school for half an academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Application and approval required. Open to only DePaul students. (6 credit hours)

PE 379 | PHYSICAL EDUCATION STUDENT TEACHING IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 6 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Five school days a week of supervised teaching in a cooperating secondary school for half an academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Application and approval required. Open only to DePaul students. (6 hours)

PE 380 | INTERNSHIP IN EXERCISE SCIENCE | 10 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Four hundred hours of supervised training in a health, fitness, sport, or exercise setting will be completed through this course. Students will receive practical experience in fitness testing, individual and group training, class instruction, program planning, and other facets of exercise science programming. Students will complete a project that will relate their educational background to the practical setting they have chosen to work in, and present their work to the internship site. Special interests of students will be addressed based on the internship site. Open only to students who have applied and been accepted by the exercise science program advisor and must have completed all coursework and clinical hours for the exercise science degree). (10 credit hours)

PE 384 | PHYSICAL EDUCATION CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The senior capstone course is designed to help students integrate the central emphases of their liberal learning studies curriculum into their professional behavior. It will provide prospective physical education teachers with opportunities to engage in activities requiring them to be reflective, to consider value commitments, to use critical and creative thinking, and to examine their practice from a multicultural perspective as they discuss issues specific to early childhood education. The course is grounded in the College of Education's framework for an Urban Professional Multicultural Educator, which also reflects the goals of the Liberal Studies program.

PE 387 | CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION & EXERCISE SCIENCE | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help candidates integrate the central emphases of their Liberal Studies curriculum with their professional knowledge and behavior. It provides opportunities and activities to prospective professionals that engage them in being analytic and reflective upon their major and related disciplines; guide them in further considering their value commitments and how they relate to their chosen profession; apply critical and creative thinking in addressing 'real-time' professional issues and needs; and examine extant practices from multicultural perspectives. Candidates develop a professional portfolio that reflects the standards of the various guiding professional organizations and/or the Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE). The course is grounded in the College of Education's framework for an Urban Professional Multicultural Educator as well as the goals of the Liberal Studies program. The course is taken simultaneously with student teaching or internship. COREQUISITE(S): PE 378 and PE 379, or PE 380. (2 credit hours)

PE 390 | PSYCHO-SOCIAL ASPECTS OF EXERCISE AND SPORT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Psycho-Social Aspects of Exercise and Sport. Principles of human behavior, psychology, sociology, and motivational theory are covered as they relate to exercise fitness and sport. Students are introduced to personality factors, leadership skills, psychological skills training, and group dynamics which play important roles in the psychological development of individuals involved in exercise and sport programs. Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as an Exercise Science student is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 391 | THEORY AND TECHNIQUES OF COACHING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to introduce areas from which basic coaching theories and techniques of various sports can be developed, to expose students to situations which place the coach in a decision making position and encourage students to examine practical problems which will influence the quality of an athletic program.

PE 392 | ADVANCED ATHLETIC TRAINING TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is an advanced course dealing with the principles and techniques of prevention, recognition, and treatment of athletic injuries.

PE 303 is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 393 | THERAPEUTIC EXERCISE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the application and theory of specific exercise guidelines and program design for individuals with chronic illnesses, orthopedic conditions, and major athletic injuries. Special populations will also be addressed such as children, pregnant women, the elderly, blind, and deaf individuals. Emphasis is placed on planning and teaching techniques based on the basic FITT principle, and modifying programs to meet the needs of the specific individual. Students will learn specific modifications for all domains of exercise: cardiorespiratory, muscular strength and endurance, flexibility, and balance, with the focus on rehabilitation and health promotion.

Advanced Teacher Candidate Standing or status as an Exercise Science student is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 394 | SPORT AND EXERCISE NUTRITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide the student with advanced knowledge of all areas of nutrition as they relate to the different types of exercise and sports. Prior basic nutritional knowledge is required for successful completion of this course. Topics will include but not limited to substrate utilization during different types of metabolic processes, hyper-hydration and nutrient loading prior to activity, nutrient maintenance during various types of exercise, recovery nutrition, nutrition planning for weight management, sport specific nutrition and consumer issues related to sport supplementation.

PE 273 is a prerequisite for this class.

PE 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Permission of Department Chair and Associate Dean are required. (1 credit hour)

PE 400 | INTRODUCTION TO THE SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION LEADERSHIP PROGRAM | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide an overall introduction to the Sport, Fitness and Recreation Leadership online graduate program (MSFRL). Coursework, pillars of knowledge, expectations, potential employment, and management concepts in sport, fitness, and recreational will be covered. Acceptance into the MSFRL program is a prerequisite for this course.

PE 410 | ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine concepts in administration and communication specific to supervisory relationships. Students will understand the function and application of administrative theory within the fields of sport and fitness.

PE 420 | FACILITY AND RISK MANAGEMENT IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will be introduced to the planning, designing and management of sport, recreation, and fitness facilities. Students will identify strengths and weaknesses of major facilities and will design their own facility upon completion of this course.

PE 430 | ADVANCED HEALTH AND SCIENCE CONCEPTS IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will present advanced concepts in health for the individual interested in Health Education or the Allied Health Professions. The content will include health principles related to individual athletes throughout the life span, wellness concepts, and strategies for coping with potentially dangerous behaviors. The students will reflect on how to incorporate knowledge of health into their physical education and health classes in schools or community settings.

PE 435 | ADVANCED CARE OF THE ATHLETE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is designed to expand the student's knowledge of athletic injuries, incorporating hands-on experience. Topics will include current issues in anatomy and physiology; athletic first aid and emergency situations; standard procedure for diagnosis and treatment; conditioning, pre-habilitation and rehabilitation; heat stress injuries; nutrition and eating disorders; taping, wrapping and bracing; and other related topics in sports medicine.

PE 440 | STRATEGIC COMMUNICATION AND MARKETING IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will examine communications tools such as advertising, sales, and publicity, social media, media relations and public relations to examine how they are vital to an organization's marketing plan. Students will create a marketing plan specific to a chosen area of study. This course also will focus on leadership and communication skills vital in building professional relationships. Relationships between sport and fitness organizations and consumers will be examined.

PE 442 | ON-CAMPUS SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will provide 1st year students with the opportunity to network with their peers and professionals in the field. They will also attend presentations by local professionals in sport, fitness, and recreational fields, as well as presentations of 2nd year students' research projects. (2 credit hours)

PE 445 | PROGRAM AND SPECIAL EVENTS MANAGEMENT IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course also will introduce students to planning, operating, funding, and evaluating events within their chosen area of sport or fitness. Principles of hospitality and public relations also will be studied. Students will plan a hypothetical event upon the completion of this course.

PE 450 | PSYCHOLOGY OF SPORT BEHAVIOR AND ATHLETIC PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A study of the philosophical and psychological concepts pertaining to sports, in general, and competitive athletic programs specifically. Students will analyze the various coaching and administrative techniques in sports programs. Emphasis will be given to intercollegiate sports. Elementary, secondary and professional sports programs will be examined and discussed. Motivation to exercise socially, recreationally, and in sport will be examined.

PE 452 | EXERCISE SCIENCE AND SPORT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A study of the advanced concepts and theory pertaining to analysis of human movement. Application will be made for the teaching of fundamental motor skills as well as the specialized analysis made by the coach. Discussion of the various techniques, sophisticated equipment, and empirical evidence will support the conclusions determined in the seminar. The course will be designed for professional physical educators and individuals involved in the coaching profession.

PE 455 | LITERATURE REVIEW FOR CAPSTONE PROJECT | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is included in the MS in Sport, Fitness, and Recreation curriculum as a pre-requisite for PE 555: Research in Sport, Fitness, and Recreation. Prior to beginning the research for capstone projects, students must complete a review of the literature related to their topic. This review must be approved by their faculty capstone advisor and the program director. The course can be taken at any time and a grade of PASS must be received prior to registering for PE 555 during spring of their second year.

PE 457 | ADVANCED COACHING THEORIES & TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is designed to cover a review of basic coaching theories and techniques of various sports and then cover advanced theories and application of these theories. The goal of the course is to expose students to situations that will place the coach in a decision making position and encourage students to examine practical problems that will influence the quality of an athletic program. (Cross-listed with PE 391)

PE 460 | ETHICS AND DIVERSITY IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will examine current issues and challenges related to the sport, fitness and recreation environments. The examination will focus on ethical behavior and decision making and ultimately to improve risk management in these area. Major consideration will be given to issues relating to development of goals and objectives, preparation of program budgets, financial considerations, media input, and legal ramifications of the various programs.

PE 470 | LEGAL ISSUES IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will develop a student's ability to apply legal principles to sport and fitness management situations. Students will examine legal liability of coaches, administrators and fitness professionals, negligence, constitutional and administrative law, product liability, and risk management. There also will be an analysis and study of the governing structure, rules, and legislative processes within the NCAA.

PE 480 | FINANCE AND REVENUE GENERATION IN SPORT AND FITNESS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will understand basic concepts of financial management and managerial economics relevant to recreation and sport settings, emphasizing financial analysis, short- and long-term financing, fundraising, sponsorship, financial troubleshooting, capital structuring and budgeting, fundraising, revenue and cost-control.

PE 490 | ON-CAMPUS SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will provide 2nd year students with the opportunity to network with their peers and professionals in the field of sport, fitness, and recreation. They will also attend presentations by local professionals, as well as present their final research projects. (2 credit hours)

PE 500 | CAPSTONE IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION LEADERSHIP | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The capstone experience will support the student during their last quarter in the program while completing program research and preparation for seminar presentation. (2 credit hours)

PE 541 | INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will review the history of sport, fitness, and physical education; the impact that events and cultures have had on their development; and how physical education, fitness and the use of sport is influenced by society. Emphasis will be placed on philosophical perspectives and ethical values of this profession, both for the educator and the exercise science professional. Content is devoted to the study and understanding of sport and physical activity within numerous cultures throughout history to support diversity and help students consider the multiple perspectives expressed through the incorporation of sport and physical activity. Diversity, equity, and inclusion issues and theories from general education will be applied to kinesiology settings and practices within this course.

PE 555 | RESEARCH IN SPORT, FITNESS AND RECREATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Under the guidance of an advisor, students will complete a culminating research project for completion of the degree.

PE 455 is a prerequisite for this class.

Physics and Astrophysics (PHY)

PHY 104 | THE SUN & ITS PLANETS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the development of our knowledge about the Solar System with an emphasis on the origin, structure and motion of the planets and the Sun. Topics include both historical astronomy and our current understanding based on information from spacecraft sent to other planets. Cannot receive credit for both PHY 104 and PHY 114.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 110 | BASIC ELECTRONICS: PRINCIPLES & TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to analog electronics that develops the basic principles needed to understand consumer electronics. Emphasis is given to audio applications, but the same basic principles are the foundation of modern computer technology.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 114 | EXPLORING OTHER WORLDS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Activity-based course that compares the local environment of Earth in the Solar System to worlds and environments elsewhere in the Universe. Cannot receive credit for both PHY 104 and PHY 114.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 120 | HOW THINGS WORK | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will develop an understanding of the physics of everyday objects, such as electric motors, solar cells (photovoltaics), or heat engines (e.g. car engines or refrigerators). Each course will focus on three different objects, demonstrating principles from different sub-fields of physics. In addition to conceptual understanding, students will learn how scientific discoveries were necessary to make these devices, and how continued scientific exploration is related to their further development.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 150 | GENERAL PHYSICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides a comprehensive, non-calculus introduction to physics. Vectors, forces, Newtonian mechanics of translational and rotational motion. This course is intended for life science and health science majors.

MAT 131 or above is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 151 | GENERAL PHYSICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Continuation of PHY 150. Topics include heat, thermodynamics, sound and light.

PHY 150 or PHY 170 is a prerequisite for this class

PHY 152 | GENERAL PHYSICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Continuation of PHY 151. Topics include electricity, magnetism and modern physics.

PHY 151 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 155 | GENERAL PHYSICS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A combination of Physics 150 plus half of 151. Summer only. (6 quarter hours)

MAT 131 or above is a prerequisite for this class.

PHY 156 | GENERAL PHYSICS | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A combination of the last half of Physics 151 plus 152. Summer only. (6 quarter hours)

PHY 155, PHY 151, or PHY 171 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 170 | UNIVERSITY PHYSICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides a comprehensive, calculus-based introduction to Newtonian mechanics. Topics include vectors, Newton's laws, linear and rotational motion. Course intended for majors in a physical science, required for the physics major. Offered in autumn quarter.

MAT 147 or MAT 150 or MAT 160 is a co-requisite for this class.

PHY 171 | UNIVERSITY PHYSICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of PHY 170. Topics include heat, sound and light. Offered in winter quarter.

MAT 148 or MAT 151 or MAT 161 is a co-requisite for this class.

PHY 172 | UNIVERSITY PHYSICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of PHY 171. Topics include electricity and magnetism. Offered spring quarter.

MAT 149 or MAT 152 or MAT 162 is a co-requisite for this class.

PHY 190 | MATLAB PROGRAMMING FOR SCIENTISTS AND MATHEMATICIANS | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the Matlab Programming environment with an emphasis on applications of interest to science and mathematics students. Topics include basic operations, functions and scripts, arguments and scope, and graphics. Applications include curve fitting, visualization of data, root finding, and solving systems of equations. (2 quarter hours)

PHY 200 | LIGHT AND ATOMS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A conceptual treatment of light and matter, which emphasizes the counter-intuitive behavior of atoms, electrons and photons. Topics covered include the electrical nature of matter, wave-particle duality, the uncertainty principle, and philosophical implications. Some applications to technology will also be discussed such as lasers, fiber optic communication, superconductivity, and magnetic storage of data. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 204 | FRONTIERS OF THE UNIVERSE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Focuses on the tremendous increase in our understanding of the universe beyond the Solar System that has occurred in recent years. Topics include stellar evolution, the properties of stars, supernova explosions, black holes, galaxies, and the origin of the universe. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 205 | EINSTEIN'S PECULIAR IDEAS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A conceptual treatment of Einstein's groundbreaking ideas about space, time, and the nature of reality. Topics covered include special relativity, Einstein's contributions to quantum physics, including his criticisms of its orthodox interpretation, and some aspects of his theory of gravity. Aspects of Einstein's thoughts on social issues will also be briefly discussed. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 206 | SOUND AND ACOUSTICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Sound waves, their production, transmission and detection; applications to music, acoustics and noise pollution. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 220 | OCEANOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Develops the concepts of physical oceanography. Topics include the chemical and physical properties of seawater, the dynamics of ocean currents and circulations, the physics of water waves and tides, the interaction of the ocean with the atmosphere, the formation of coastlines, and the effects of pollution on the ocean. Cross-listed with GEO 220. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 223 | LIGHT, COLOR, AND PHOTOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Principles of image formation with lenses and mirrors. Discussion of color, interference, polarization, and diffraction. Introduction to cameras and film, lasers and holography. Cross-listed with ART 223. MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 225 | EARTH'S CHANGING CLIMATE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Develops the physical concepts needed to understand the atmosphere, the oceans, and their interactions with the aim of building a conceptual model of weather and climate. Long-term climate variability and climate related environmental issues are also discussed. Cross-listed with GEO 225.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 231 | LINEAR ELECTRIC CIRCUITS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Frequency response and feedback, operational amplifiers as linear amplifiers, active filters, oscillators, communication circuits and data conversion circuits.

PHY 110 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 232 | INTRODUCTION TO DIGITAL ELECTRONICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Principles of combinational logic circuits. Boolean algebra and Boolean function simplification. State diagrams and sequential logic circuits, and MSI devices. Digital circuit prototyping using SSI components.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 236 | THE SCIENCE OF DIGITAL AUDIO | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the physics and mathematics of digital audio, including the conversion of sound energy into electrical signals, the digitization of the signal, conversion of the signal to a standard format, storage of the signal on a hard disk or a CD, and manipulation of the digitized signal. Also includes a discussion of the ethics and legality of downloading digitized audio, in the context of intellectual property rights. This course assumes familiarity with trigonometric mathematical functions.

MAT 120 or HON 180 or (MAT 130 or above) or consent of instructor is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 270 | UNIVERSITY PHYSICS IV | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to 20th-century physics. Topics include special relativity, quantum mechanics, and statistical analysis of data.

PHY 172 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 300 | METHODS OF COMPUTATIONAL AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Computational and theoretical methods in ordinary differential equations, complex numbers, systems of equations, phase plane analysis, bifurcations. Applications to damped, driven oscillators, electronics. COREQUISITE(S):MAT 261.

PHY 301 | METHODS OF COMPUTATIONAL AND THEORETICAL PHYSICS II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Fourier series, Fourier transforms, partial differential equations, Legendre polynomials, special functions. Applications to wave motion, electricity and magnetism, modern physics, optics. Spring.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 310 | MECHANICS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Newtonian motion in a one-, two-, and three-dimensional motion, conservative systems, variational principles, Lagrangian and Hamiltonian mechanics, central-force problems.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 311 | MECHANICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Continuation of PHY 310. Topics include systems of particles, collisions and scattering, motion in rotating frames, rigid body motion.

PHY 310 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 315 | CHAOS IN PHYSICAL SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Motion in phase space, characteristics of chaotic systems, Lyapunov exponents, stability of equilibrium solutions, strange attractors, bifurcations, discrete dynamics, and applications to lasers, fluids, and other physical systems.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 320 | ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Solutions to electrostatic, magnetostatics, and boundary-value problems. Introduction to Coulumb's law, Gauss's law, Biot-Savart law, and electric and magnetic potentials.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 321 | ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of PHY 320. Topics include Maxwell's equations, time varying fields, electromagnetic waves, and radiation.

PHY 320 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 325 | LASER PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Interaction of radiation and matter, pumping mechanisms for lasers, optical resonators, cw and transient laser behavior, laser types, current topics in optical physics. Cross-listed as PHY 425.

PHY 300 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 330 | SENIOR CAPSTONE PHYSICAL SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Senior Capstone in the Physical Sciences. Topics in the physical sciences and their social, political, environmental and economic impact.

Student standing of at least junior level is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 335 | NON-EQUILIBRIUM PHYSICS AND SELF-ORGANIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The spontaneous formation of structure is one of the most interesting phenomenon in nature and arises in fields as diverse as physics, chemistry, biology, management, economics, and sociology. Many self-organizing systems show similarities in the way the structure arises, indicating that there are underlying general principles that govern these systems. This course will investigate these principles. PHY 340 or consent recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 340 | THERMAL PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Statistical interpretation of the fundamental concepts of thermodynamics and its physical applications.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 342 | COMPUTATIONAL PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Computational solution and simulation of physical systems; applications chosen from nonlinear dynamics, optics, central-force motion, fluids, condensed matter.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 350 | OPTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Matrix methods for image formation, diffraction, interferometry, coherence, scattering, polarization, holography, Fourier transform spectroscopy. PHY 320 recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 356 | FIBER OPTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Solution of Maxwell's equations for dielectric waveguides, optical communications, nonlinear effects in dielectric waveguides, and current research. PHY 321 recommended. Cross-listed with PHY 456.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 360 | QUANTUM MECHANICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to quantum mechanics, including the solution of the Schrodinger equation in one and three dimensions for a variety of potentials. Applications to atomic systems and solids.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 361 | QUANTUM MECHANICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Continuation of PHY 360. Applications of quantum mechanics, including time-independent and time-dependent perturbation theory, the variational principle, and an introduction to scattering theory.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 365 | NUCLEAR PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theoretical and phenomenological approaches to nuclear structure and strong, electromagnetic, and weak interactions of nuclei. Topics of study include the theory of scattering and decay of nuclei, resonances, nuclear models.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 366 | RADIATION PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Radioactive decay processes, interactions of radiation with matter, general properties of radiation detectors, and applications to basic nuclear spectroscopy, health physics and medical physics. Cross-listed w/ PHY 466.

PHY 270 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 370 | ELECTRONICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A laboratory course covering analysis and construction of analog and digital circuits used in experimental research.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 373 | STAR FORMATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover various topics related to Star Formation and the Interstellar Medium. Topics include: Molecular Line Radiation, Molecular Cloud Observations, Radiative Transfer, The Interstellar Medium, Physical Processes in Molecular Clouds, the Star Formation Rate: Galactic and Extragalactic, Magnetic Fields: Theory and Observations, Stages in Low Mass and High Mass Star Formation, Disks and Outflows.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 374 | STELLAR ASTROPHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover the foundational concepts of the astrophysics of stars and stellar remnants. Topics include: Interaction of Radiation and Matter, Astronomical Instruments and Detectors, Solar Atmosphere and Magnetic Activity, Properties of Stars, Stellar Atmospheres, Stellar Interiors, Stellar Evolution and Stellar Remnants.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 375 | INTRODUCTION TO COSMOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Provides a foundation to the core concepts of cosmology, with an emphasis on developing physical insight. Discusses recent major developments in cosmology, such as the cosmological constant and accelerating universe, and key future developments, including details of the cosmic microwave background and gravitational wave detection. PHY 310 recommended.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 376 | ASTRONOMICAL DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover various topics related to data analysis in astrophysics across a multitude of wavelengths. Topics include: Ground-based and space-based optical observations, infrared, and X-ray observations, single-dish and interferometric radio observations, multi-wavelength data processing.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 378 | TOPICS IN PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Current topics in applied physics, as determined by the interests of the instructor and students.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 380 | EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Experimental techniques in optics, atomic and nuclear physics. Approved for Experiential Learning Credit.

PHY 270 and PHY 301 are a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 381 | EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Experimental techniques in solid-state and high-vacuum physics. Laboratory.

PHY 380 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 382 | EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Experimental Physics III (laboratory)

PHY 381 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 384 | ADVANCED LABORATORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Variable credit Laboratory experience in techniques selected in consultation with instructor.

PHY 385 | INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICS EDUCATION RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course covers effective teaching methods for physics, findings from physics education research, and the use of technology in physics classrooms. Course is required to serve as a Teaching Assistant within the department. Cross listed with PHY 485.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 390 | APPLIED COMPUTATIONAL PHYSICS LABORATORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Project-based computational laboratory of problems in modern applied physics. Numerical modeling of experiments, computer interfacing of experiments, computational techniques in data analysis.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 391 | ELECTRONIC PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The free-electron gas model, energy band theory, theory of metals and alloys, transport phenomena, dia- and para-magnetism, ferromagnetism, and antiferromagnetism, superconductivity.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 392 | STRUCTURAL PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Periodicity, symmetry and classification of crystal structure, X-ray diffraction, reciprocal lattice, crystal binding, Debye theory of heat capacity, anharmonic interactions, point defects, surfaces.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 395 | METHODS OF THEORETICAL PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Special functions, complex integration, calculus of variations, coordinate transformations.

PHY 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 398 | READING AND RESEARCH | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Undergraduate research participation. (variable credit)

Student standing of at least junior level is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent Study. (variable credit)

PHY 400 | CLASSICAL MECHANICS FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Concepts and materials for teaching mechanics as part of high school physics. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 401 | ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The principles of electricity and magnetism, including electric circuits. This level is appropriate for regular and AP high school Physics teachers. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 402 | ATOMIC AND NUCLEAR PHYSICS FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a broad perspective for teachers. It includes atomic, nuclear and some particle physics. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 403 | TOPICS IN PHYSICS TEACHING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Selected topics for high school teachers. May be taken more than once. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 404 | OPTICS FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Geometrical and physical optics from the perspective of high school teaching. Applications to photography and holography. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 406 | VIBRATIONS, WAVES AND SOUND FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Techniques for teaching high school science including musical acoustics and sound reproduction. Only offered by arrangement.

PHY 410 | CHAOS IN PHYSICAL SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Motion in phase space, characteristics of chaotic systems, Lyapunov exponents, stability of equilibria, strange attractors, bifurcations, discrete dynamics, applications to lasers, fluids, and other physical systems.

PHY 411 | ELECTRODYNAMICS I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Electrostatics and magnetostatics in vacuum and in media; electromagnetic induction; Maxwell's equations; the Poynting vector; electromagnetic wave propagation.

PHY 412 | QUANTUM MECHANICS I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Schrodinger equation, operators, eigenvalues; series of eigenfunctions; physical interpretation; one- and three-dimensional applications.

PHY 420 | ELECTRODYNAMICS II | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Further studies of electromagnetic wave propagation; scattering; dispersion; bounded structures and guided waves; electromagnetic radiation, including multipole radiations and radiation from systems of radiators.

PHY 411 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 425 | LASER PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Interaction of radiation and matter, pumping mechanisms for lasers, optical resonators, cw and transient laser behavior, laser types, current topics in optical physics. Cross-listed with PHY 325.

PHY 435 | NON-EQUILIBRIUM PHYSICS AND SELF-ORGANIZATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The spontaneous formation of structure is one of the most interesting phenomenon in nature and arises in fields as diverse as physics, chemistry, biology, management, economics, and sociology. Many self-organizing systems show similarities in the way the structure arises, indicating that there are underlying general principles that govern these systems. This course will investigate these principles. PHY 340 or consent recommended.

PHY 440 | CLASSICAL MECHANICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Variational principles; Lagrangian and Hamiltonian mechanics; small oscillations; canonical transformations; Hamilton-Jacobi theory.

PHY 442 | COMPUTATIONAL PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Contemporary Topics in physics are examined via numerical solutions. Calculations using an interactive approach and graphical representation are used extensively.

PHY 445 | STATISTICAL MECHANICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Principles of statistical mechanics; applications to weakly interacting systems such as the classical plasma and Fermi gas; strongly interacting systems; transport theory; fluctuations and irreversible processes, phase transitions.

PHY 450 | PHASE TRANSITIONS & CRITICAL PHENOMENON | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Applications of equilibrium statistical mechanics to the study of phase transitions and critical phenomena. Topics include the Ising model of magnetism, critical phenomena in fluids, mean field theory, Landau-Ginzburg theory, and the renormalization group.

PHY 340 and PHY 445 are prerequisites for this course.

PHY 454 | FOURIER OPTICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Fourier Optics and optical processing of information. Topics include diffraction theory, optical transfer functions and holography. The Fourier Transform and Fast Fourier Transform are used extensively.

PHY 456 | FIBER OPTICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

(Cross-listed as PHY 356) Solution of Maxwell's equations for dielectric wave guides, optical communications, nonlinear effect in dielectric wave guides, and current research.

PHY 460 | QUANTUM MECHANICS II | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Review of basic quantum theory; vector spaces; linear operators; observables; commutators; projection operations; representations; angular momentum theory; systems of identical particles; invariance.

PHY 412 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 465 | NUCLEAR PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Theoretical and phenomenological approaches to nuclear structure and strong, electromagnetic, and weak interactions of nuclei. Topics of study include the theory of scattering and decay of nuclei, resonances, nuclear models.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 466 | RADIATION PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Interactions of X-rays, nuclear radiations, etc. with matter; radiation detectors; dosimetry; shielding; applications to medical physics. Cross-listed with PHY 366.

PHY 470 | ADVANCED GRADUATE LABORATORY TECHNIQUES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Advanced laboratory techniques and measuring devices are used to study optics, atomic and nuclear, and condensed matter physics. Advanced data analysis techniques are also introduced. Emphasis is on individual research projects. Physics Graduate standing is a prerequisite.

PHY 473 | STAR FORMATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will cover various topics related to Star Formation and the Interstellar Medium. Topics include: Molecular Line Radiation, Molecular Cloud Observations, Radiative Transfer, The Interstellar Medium, Physical Processes in Molecular Clouds, the Star Formation Rate: Galactic and Extragalactic, Magnetic Fields: Theory and Observations, Stages in Low Mass and High Mass Star Formation, Disks and Outflows. (Cross-listed with PHY 373.)

PHY 474 | STELLAR ASTROPHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will cover the foundational concepts of the astrophysics of stars and stellar remnants. Topics include: Interaction of Radiation and Matter, Astronomical Instruments and Detectors, Solar Atmosphere and Magnetic Activity, Properties of Stars, Stellar Atmospheres, Stellar Interiors, Stellar Evolution and Stellar Remnants. (Cross-listed with PHY 374.)

PHY 475 | INTRODUCTION TO COSMOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Provides a foundation to the core concepts of cosmology, with an emphasis on developing physical insight. Discusses recent major developments in cosmology, such as the cosmological constant and accelerating universe, and key future developments, including details of the cosmic microwave background and gravitational wave detection.

PHY 476 | ASTRONOMICAL DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will cover various topics related to data analysis in astrophysics across a multitude of wavelengths. Topics include: Ground-based and space-based optical observations, infrared, and X-ray observations, single-dish and interferometric radio observations, multi-wavelength data processing.

PHY 478 | TOPICS IN PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course number is reserved for Individual study at the graduate level. Special seminars organized from time to time to accommodate the needs of groups of students in specialized subjects of topical interest.

PHY 480 | THESIS RESEARCH | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course number designates research performed to gather thesis material. Up to two registrations are allowed. No less than four quarter hours; no more than eight quarter hours total credit.

PHY 485 | INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICS EDUCATION RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course covers effective teaching methods for physics, findings from physics education research, and the use of technology in physics classrooms. Course is required to serve as a Teaching Assistant within the department. Cross listed with PHY 385.

PHY 490 | STRUCTURAL PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Periodicity, symmetry and classification of crystal structure; X-ray diffraction; reciprocal lattice; crystal binding. Debye theory of heat capacity; anharmonic interactions; point defects; surfaces.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 491 | ELECTRONIC PROPERTIES OF MATERIALS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The free-electron gas model; energy band theory; theory of metals and alloys; transport phenomena; dia- and para-magnetism, ferromagnetism, and antiferromagnetism; superconductivity.

PHY 360 is a prerequisite for this course.

PHY 495 | METHODS OF THEORETICAL PHYSICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

PSC 212 | LATINO POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the political experience of Latino/Latinx/Hispanic populations in the United States. It approaches Latino Politics by tracing the development of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Dominican, and Central American groups in this country from historical to contemporary times. What does it mean to be Latino? How are Latinos socialized to the U.S.? Are Latinos a distinct group in American politics? This course explores how U.S. intervention abroad and discrimination at home form a basis for shared political identity.

PSC 213 | POLITICAL SOCIALIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course considers the social institutions important for the political development of individuals. The political significance of institutions such as the family, the school and the work place will be examined. (Please note that the catalog number for this course was changed from PSC 219 to PSC 213 effective Autumn, 2001)

PSC 215 | LIVED CIVICS, SOCIAL CONTRACT & PUBLIC LIFE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Civics is the exploration of the rights and duties of people living in a political society. This interdisciplinary course aims to provide the groundwork for embracing, challenging, and grappling with the important and contentious issues that lie at the heart of American contemporary civic culture and democratic life. We will discuss and interrogate the social contract in the United States, examining the implicit agreement among members of a society to follow certain rules in exchange for the benefits of living together. The course will center the lives of students through the "lived civics" approach, which embraces the experiences of each student in their various communities as examples of "lived civics." These experiences will be used to explore key tensions within American political and civic life, along with historical context and founding documents. Students will explore questions such as how to balance individualism with the needs of a community, or what rights and responsibilities are needed in American political and social society today. While all sections of the course share foundational elements, instructors will tailor the application of this course material to their areas of expertise. Students will gain knowledge and skills to help them engage in thoughtful dialogue around meaningful and often controversial topics and empower them to be more active members of their communities.

PSC 216 | AMERICAN POLITICAL CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of the shared symbol systems that provide meaning and structure for political life. Key historic cultural concepts, such as individualism, materialism and mobility will be considered, and their connections to contemporary popular culture explored.

PSC 217 | WOMEN AND POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the ways in which women interpret, gain access to, and use political power. It focuses on sex- and gender-based differences in the political socialization process, and their implications for the participation and organization of women. Gender-related legislation and "women's" political issues are also evaluated. Particular attention is given to women and politics in the United States.

PSC 218 | AFRICAN-AMERICAN POLITICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course discusses the nature and scope of African-American politics. Major topics include the radical, liberal, moderate and conservative wings of African-American political discourse, the civil rights movement and its aftermath, the rise of African-American mayors, and presidential politics. An historical survey of African-American politics, and the factors that have shaped them, may also be included.

Pre-Law (PRELAW)

PRELAW 150 | THE PRACTICE OF LAW | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

What do lawyers do? Why and how do they do it? What does it mean to be an ethical lawyer? This exploration of the legal profession will engage students in a broad-ranging discussion of lawyers and their work, in both historical and contemporary perspectives. Students will examine the portrayal of the legal profession in popular culture, including in film and literature, and will explore the concept of ethics in the legal profession. The course will also include field trips to key sites where lawyers work throughout the city of Chicago.

Status as a 3+3 BA/JD student is a prerequisite for this class.

PRELAW 151 | RECENT CONTROVERSIES IN THE LAW | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course for students enrolled in the 3+3 program addresses a timely topic of significant legal interest, such as gay marriage, affirmative action, campaign finance, etc. The topic varies according to current events and instructor interest. Students will use current topics to explore the broader theme of the relationship between law and society, particularly law's relationship to social change. Readings each term will include multi-disciplinary perspectives, such as law, political science, philosophy, economics, history, etc. The course is designed to further develop students' critical thinking skills.

Status as a 3+3 BA/JD Student and PRELAW 150 are prerequisites for this class.

PRELAW 152 | THINKING ABOUT THE LAW | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will explore the concept of jurisprudence, helping students to understand traditions of legal thought in the American legal system. What are the major theories of law and how are they reflected in today's courts and congressional chambers? Students will explore the law from different vantage points, including those of judges, lawmakers, lawyers, philosophers, and clients. Major themes of the course will vary each year, but will typically include reflections on justice, punishment, rule of law, and other key foundational topics. Students will engage in significant writing assignments in the course that will help them develop the advanced writing skills necessary for success in law school.

Status as a 3+3 BA/JD Student and PRELAW 151 are prerequisites for this class.

Professional Communication (PROCMN)

PROCMN 500 | PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION ORIENTATION AND RESIDENCY I | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This multiple day immersive residency is held in late summer before the start of fall quarter classes. This residency orients the new incoming cohort of students to university, college and program resources, faculty, and staff, including the Vincentian mission and the professional communication program vision, goals, and curriculum. During the residency, students will engage in peer-to-peer cohort-building activities, including engaging with and learning from the prior cohort about succeeding in grad school. Incoming students will also learn from and network with a diverse range of professional communication leaders from Chicago-area organizations and beyond, faculty and staff, as well as with alumni. Students will be introduced to the program final project expectations and will complete a paper on "how to succeed in grad school" based on a reciprocal mentoring relationship (aka co-mentoring) established across cohorts.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 501 | THE FUTURE OF PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides an introduction to the field of professional communication, examining communication roles, organizational environments, and changing workforce dynamics driven by business and societal trends, issues, and events. The instructor and students will peer together into the "crystal ball" and look at where professional communication is today and where it may be going in the future, based on major business and societal trends, issues, and events. Students will engage with senior communication leaders from diverse backgrounds and lived experiences; the class will critically reflect upon these conversations on the future of professional communication. Students will also share and discuss as a shared learning community their own "trendspotting resources" for succeeding as professional communicators.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 510 | DIGITAL MEDIA SKILLS FOR PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will introduce techniques and tools for communication professionals to effectively communicate creative ideas, organize and facilitate online meetings, create digital and multimedia products, and devise strategies suitable for social media engagement and event planning. The course topics include but are not limited to presentation design, virtual meeting management, podcast and short video interview creation, social media strategy, and event coverage.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 520 | WRITING FOR PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION CAREERS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A key goal of good writing is to inform and persuade the target audience in any format. This course aligns with the demands on communications professionals to produce clear, clean, concise copy quickly and efficiently. Students will acquire an appreciation of the art and practice of good writing by diagnosing their own writing challenges, recognizing and analyzing what makes writing "good," and acquiring the necessary tools to become a better writer and a sharper editor. We emphasize both process and product. Students will read relevant material on writing best practices, and work through a series of exercises to troubleshoot their own work. They will learn to deconstruct their writing process and rebuild it with a renewed focus on credibility and professionalism in all their written work.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 530 | PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION LAW, POLICY AND ETHICS | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will provide an overview of key areas of law and policy relevant to Professional Communication, including analysis of the ethical issues that permeate those legal issues.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 540 | RESEARCH METHODS AND INSIGHTS FOR PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Communication professionals rely on internal and external research to guide communication strategy. This course will overview applied quantitative and qualitative research methods, including (but not limited to) secondary data acquisition and analysis, in-depth interviews, focus groups, and surveys. Students will practice techniques in measurement and sampling, statistical analysis, thematic analysis, data visualization, and effective research reporting in a professional context.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 550 | EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION IN TEAMS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Effective Communication in Teams will offer communication practitioners the skills they need to build, manage, and evaluate team projects within an organizational context. The course draws on insights from research, best practices, and real-world scenarios. Students will utilize a communicative lens to explore diversity, define roles, build culture, manage conflict, and improve performance in a team context. Coursework includes individual and group projects.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROCMN 560 | TOPICS IN PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines a broad range of topics related to professional communication. The course may address such topics as digital communication, corporate social responsibility, strategic communication for advocacy, the use of Virtual Reality, Augmented Reality, and metaverse in professional communication, global communication, social media, influencer marketing, brand communities, artificial intelligence and communication, or fashion public relations and advertising.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROC MN 570 | EFFECTIVE COMMUNICATION WITH EMPLOYEES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will offer communication practitioners critical insights and skills for effective communication with employees. More specifically, the course reviews best communication practice for effectively recruiting, selecting, onboarding, and integrating new employees; examines current research and practical advice on effective supervision, feedback and performance appraisal activity; explores communication strategies for diffusing common workplace relationship dysfunctions and conflicts; and reviews effective communication practices for building community and inclusive cultures at work.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROC MN 580 | DIVERSITY, EQUITY AND INCLUSION IN PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to equip professionals with a comprehensive foundation and applied skill set for fostering diversity, equity and inclusion in the contemporary workplace. The course focuses on the role of concrete communication practices, the centrality of words and actions, in competent and inclusive performance and leadership. Furthermore, the course offers best practices and specific tools for proactive change in—the recruitment, retention, and promotion of—diverse talent in the workplace.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROC MN 590 | CHIEF COMMUNICATIONS OFFICER: ADVISING AND COUNSELING LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the roles, responsibilities and competencies of the Chief Communications Officer (CCO) and other senior communications professionals, with a focus on serving as a trusted advisor and counselor to organizational leadership (i.e., C-suite leaders and boards of directors) and bringing stakeholder perspectives to the table. Students will develop their business acumen as communication managers through learning the key language, thinking and issues of the organizational leaders that CCOs and their communications teams help advise in the creation of business and social value. As part of the final class project, students will learn directly from and network with senior communicators of leading organizations.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PROC MN 599 | PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION FINAL PROJECT AND RESIDENCY II | 6 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this capstone course, students will exhibit their learnings through producing a professionally oriented final project plan that addresses a professional communication challenge or opportunity in the workplace. Various types of final projects will be offered as options. Students will complete a final project where they develop actionable recommendations in response to an approved partner organization's real-world communication challenge or opportunity. Through collaboration in this course and the Pro Comm Final Project Showcase event, students will come together as a learner community to discuss their work and network through a culminating residency activity, in which they share their projects (e.g., via small group discussions) with faculty/staff, communication professionals and the incoming cohort.

Status as a Professional Communication student or department consent is a prerequisite for this class.

Project Management (PM)

PM 430 | FUNDAMENTALS OF IT PROJECT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 334 | ADOLESCENT PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Biological, cognitive, emotional and social development. Covers theories and research on normal and abnormal development during adolescence.

PSY 105 or PSY 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 340 | STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to advanced statistical techniques such as analysis of variance and regression models.

A grade of C- or better in PSY 240 (or BIO 206 or ENV 260 or MAT 137 or MAT 242 or SOC 279) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 342 | RESEARCH METHODS III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced research methods; topics will vary by instructor. In addition to the prerequisites, completion of PSY 340 is highly recommended.

A grade of C- or better in PSY 240 (or BIO 206 or ENV 260 or MAT 137 or MAT 242 or SOC 279) and PSY 242 Research II are prerequisites for this course.

PSY 343 | INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGICAL MEASUREMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Measurement in psychology; emphasis on standardization, reliability, validity; test and scale development.

A grade of C- or better in PSY 240 (or BIO 206 or ENV 260 or MAT 137 or MAT 242 or SOC 279) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 345 | CULTURAL ISSUES IN PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Culture, race and ethnic relations in the U.S. and across the globe are a dynamic ever-changing pattern of relationships. This course is designed to assist students in understanding the diversity, heterogeneity and complexity of culture in America and globally from a psychological perspective.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 346 | PSYCHOLOGY OF THE AFRICAN-AMERICAN CHILD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Development and socialization of the African-American child from infancy to adolescence. Emphasis on psychological and cultural factors which influence these processes. Understanding the child, family and the child, language and IQ, education and learning styles, and cultural identity are all emphasized. Cross-listed with PSY 521.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 347 | SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of social psychological theory and research on how individual behavior, thoughts, and feelings are influenced by the social context in which they occur.

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 348 | SOCIAL COGNITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theory and research addressing major aspects of social cognition, including how people subjectively understand and mentally represent themselves and others (e.g., in terms of unique attributes versus applicable stereotypes), and how these representations influence self-regulation, person and group perception, and social behavior. Recommended prerequisite: PSY 347.

PSY 242 or NEU 301 is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 351 | THEORIES OF PERSONALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of major personality theories with separate emphasis on clinically-derived and research-derived theories. Freudian psychoanalysis is especially emphasized in the clinical area. Personality research philosophy is presented separately and as part of the research-derived theories.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 353 | INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOPATHOLOGY AND CLINICAL SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Description of the nature, symptoms, treatment applications, and cause of psychological disorders.

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 354 | COMMUNITY PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Focus on systemic and ecological theories of human behavior, diversity, social support, community intervention and evaluation, empowerment, social change, and working with underserved populations. Cross level with PSY 654.

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 355 | GROUPS AND ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Issues related to how groups, small and large, function. Includes group formation, relationships, decision-making, performance, and conflict. Also, discussion of organizations as examples of large groups. Students in the I-O concentration are strongly advised to take PSY 380 before taking this course.

PSY 105 (or PSY 106) is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 356 | PRINCIPLES OF FIELD RESEARCH AND ACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basic knowledge of program development, program evaluation, consultation, human diversity, ethics, group dynamics, and interpersonal skills.

PSY 105 or 106 and PSY 354 are prerequisites for this class, and admission into the community psychology concentration.

PSY 357 | APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Overview of behavioral principles, strategies, and system approaches to individual, organizational, and community change. Generally taken in junior year.

PSY 358 | APPLIED PSYCHOLOGY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Approaches to counseling, psychotherapy and helping relationships. Generally taken in junior year.

PSY 357 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 359 | FIELD WORK IN COMMUNITY RESEARCH AND ACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Field work in community research and action.

PSY 356 and senior standing are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 360 | THEORIES OF LEARNING AND COGNITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Explores classical and modern theories and research in the science of learning and cognition.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 361 | HISTORY AND SYSTEMS OF PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Historical development of psychology and its fields.

(PSY 105 or 106), (PSY 240 or equivalents), PSY 241 and PSY 242 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 363 | SUBSTANCE USE DISORDERS AND RECOVERY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Survey of major research findings in the area of alcoholism and drug addiction. Description of treatment programs for recovery and explorations of drug free ways to alter consciousness.

PSY 105, PSY 106 or the equivalent of Introduction to Psychology is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 364 | HEALTH PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an overview of such topics as psychosocial factors in disease etiology, health behaviors and behavior change, stress and coping, adjustment to illness, social relationships and health, mind-body interactions and intervention, and patient-provider interaction.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 366 | BEHAVIOR PROBLEMS OF CHILDREN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Factors associated with deviance in children and adolescents.

Examination of personal and social consequences. Review treatment programs for children.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 367 | PSYCHOLOGY OF EXCEPTIONAL CHILDREN | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Comprehensive introduction to the study of special children—those children who do not reach their fullest potential because of physical, social, cognitive, or behavioral factors.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 369 | ADVANCED LIFESPAN DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Overview of cognitive, emotional, and social development across the lifespan. This course will take a topical approach to the study of development.

PSY 105 or 106 (or the equivalent) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 370 | SOCIAL AND EMOTIONAL DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the development of emotions, social relationships and social interactions. Both theoretical perspectives and research findings are present and analyzed. Topics to be covered may include primary emotions and their development, nonverbal communication of emotion, socialization within the family, friendship and peer relations, aggression, moral development, sex role development and attachment.

PSY 105 or 106 and PSY 333 are prerequisites for this class.

PSY 371 | PSYCHOLOGY OF TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for psychology majors as well as students from a variety of fields interested in careers working with children and adults who have experienced trauma. Students will learn about the psychological sequelae of different traumatic experiences, with emphasis on violence and victimization, as well as assessment methods and interventions aimed at reducing violence and addressing post-traumatic stress symptoms. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the central psychological theories of trauma and issues that need to be addressed to advance this field. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues.

PSY 105 or 106 (or the equivalent) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 372 | PSYCHOLOGY OF DISASTER AND CRISIS INTERVENTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for psychology majors as well as students from a variety of fields interested in careers related to crisis intervention. Students will learn about the psychological sequelae of natural and man-made disasters, terror, and war, as well as different models for crisis interventions. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources, and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the state of this field and the central issues that practitioners face when working with vulnerable disaster survivors. Multiple assessment methods will be used to evaluate student learning and application of course material.

PSY 105 (or PSY 106 or instructor consent) is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 373 | HAPPINESS, JUDGMENT AND DECISION MAKING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to research in judgment and choice behaviors. Judgment refers to how people evaluate information and make predictions. Choice concerns how people select a course of action among alternatives.

PSY 105 or PSY 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 374 | DEVELOPMENTAL TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for psychology undergraduate students in addition to students from a variety of fields interested in understanding the sequelae of trauma across the lifespan. In addition to learning about various trauma-related concerns across various developmental stages, the course will also review research on multi-generational trauma topics. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of historical and current developmental theories of trauma. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues. Cross level with PSY 474.

PSY 376 | SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY OF TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for psychology undergraduate students in addition to students from a variety of fields interested in understanding the social effects of trauma. Students will consider the ways in which social identities and meaning narratives can be impacted by trauma but also be sources of resilience. The course will consider trauma at intrapersonal and interpersonal levels as well as the effects of collective and systemic traumas. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of historical and current social psychological theories of trauma. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues. Cross level with PSY 476.

PSY 377 | PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Nervous system and endocrine functions as related to behavior.

A grade of C- or better in PSY 240 (or BIO 206 or ENV 260 or MAT 137 or MAT 242 or SOC 279) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 379 | COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the neuroscience of human behaviors such as emotions, attention, executive function, language, learning, memory, and social interaction by exploring both the underlying biological mechanisms and the psychological theories behind these behaviors. Cognitive Neuroscience is an emerging field of study that attempts to help one gain an understanding of the interdisciplinary nature of the human mind.

A grade of C- or better in PSY 240 (or BIO 206 or ENV 260 or MAT 137 or MAT 242 or SOC 279) and NEU 201 (or BIO/NEU 339 or BIO 340 or PSY 377) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 380 | INDUSTRIAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Application of theories and methods of psychology to the study of human behavior in business, industry, and other organizations. Cross-listed with PSY 680.

PSY 105 or 106 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 381 | PERSONNEL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Application of concepts from differential psychology and measurement to employee selection, performance appraisal, placement and training in business and other organizations.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 382 | ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theories in learning, personality, work motivation, job attitudes, and organizational culture, and application to employee behavior.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 385 | TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT IN ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Issues related to training in industry and other organizations. Such topics as needs assessment, training program design, and program evaluation will be covered, along with relevant ethical, social and economic issues.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 388 | TOPICAL SEMINAR IN INDUSTRIAL - ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Current topics and issues in I-O Psychology beyond the introductory course with particular emphasis on recent developments and research. Topics vary.

PSY 380 or consent is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 389 | PSYCHOLOGY SENIOR SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Senior Year Capstone course provides an opportunity for students to actively reflect and consider the relationships between their specialized experiences within their major, the more general learning experiences they have received, and the impact that their career choices may have on the broader society.

Junior or Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 390 | INDEPENDENT RESEARCH IN PSYCHOLOGY | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent Research in Psychology. Student will work with a faculty mentor to develop an individualized plan of work involving some aspect of research. This can include, but is not limited to, reviewing literature, developing a research project, collecting data on an ongoing project, coding or analyzing data, developing a research presentation, or working in the community on research or intervention projects. Students taking the course for 4 or more units must produce a graded project at the end of the quarter. (variable credit)

PSY 391 | DEPARTMENT HONORS THESIS | 4.00 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Original investigation of a specific research problem. Successful application to department honors program required. Four credits required. (variable credit)

Junior or Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 394 | ADVANCED TOPICS IN PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 395 | FIELD WORK/INTERNSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Supervised experience in selected off-campus settings and associated readings. Generally taken in senior year.

PSY 357 and PSY 358 are a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 396 | HONORS IN PSYCHOLOGY | 4.00 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Required monthly Honors Seminar to accompany Honors thesis completed during the student's senior year. 4 credit hours required. (variable credit) Successful application to department honors program required.

Senior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 397 | EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING/PSYCHOLOGY RESEARCH | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Experiential Learning/Psychology Research. (variable credit)

PSY 398 | TUTORING AND MENTORING IN PSYCHOLOGY | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Tutoring and mentoring in psychology. (variable credit)

PSY 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent study. (variable credit)

PSY 402 | PERCEPTUAL PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Analysis of the variables involved in the determination of perception with particular attention to the problems of space, motion, distance, size, form, aftereffects and constancies.

PSY 404 | PERCEPTION AND COGNITION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Survey of classical and instrumental conditioning, biological constraints, attention, memory, cognition, and practical applications. Major theoretical approaches include stimulus-response, early cognitive theories and information processing theory.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 406 | PHYSIOLOGICAL PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The functional role of neural systems important for the processes of motivation, emotion, sleep, memory, and cognition.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 409 | STATISTICS FOR THE BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applied inferential statistics.

PSY 240 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 410 | ADVANCED STATISTICS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Brief review of introductory statistics, followed by a focus on Analysis of Variance and related techniques for data analysis. One way, factorial, repeated measures and ANCOVA with a priori and post hoc tests. Nonparametric alternatives to mean-comparison tests.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 411 | ADVANCED STATISTICS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Overview of commonly applied regression techniques in psychological research. Discussions include simple linear regression, multiple linear regression, moderated linear regression with continuous and categorical predictors, mediation via linear regression, and logistic regression.

PSY 410 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 412 | ADVANCED STATISTICS III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced Statistics III.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 413 | ANALYSIS OF LONGITUDINAL DATA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Analysis of changes and time - dependent data.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 414 | CATEGORICAL DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Analysis of contingency tables and count data logit, probit and loglinear models.

PSY 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 416 | METHODS IN QUALITATIVE RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

History and paradigms of qualitative research, the strategies and data collection methods used, and how to make sense of qualitative data once it is collected.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 418 | MULTIVARIATE STATISTICAL ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Multivariate regression, principal component, cluster analysis and multidimensional scaling. Canonical correlation, multivariate analysis of variance, linear discriminant function analysis.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 419 | FACTOR ANALYSIS AND STRUCTURAL EQUATION MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theoretical foundations, methods of analysis, and comparison of various factor analytic models. Structural equation and measurement models using the Mplus program.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 420 | QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Design and analysis of basic and applied psychological research with an emphasis on experimental and quasi-experimental design, and basic issues of measurement.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 421 | APPLIED RESEARCH DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Graduate research design and methods in psychology and behavioral sciences from topic identification through data collection, with a focus on application. The course includes qualitative and quantitative research design methodologies, ethical considerations in research, needs assessment, and program evaluation.

PSY 410 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 422 | COMPUTING FOR THE BEHAVIORAL SCIENTIST | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to computer programming, web development, and other computer-intensive techniques as applied to behavioral science research.

PSY 425 | COGNITIVE PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Cognitive Processes.

PSY 426 | LANGUAGE AND COGNITION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An overview of research in the psychology of language, including such topics as speech perception, sentence processing, discourse comprehension, and pragmatics. Classic and contemporary models and research paradigms are examined.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 427 | SENSORY PROCESSES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Sensory Processes.

PSY 430 | SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY OF THE SELF | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and research addressing the social psychology of the self. The self is a central theme in psychological theory and research in many domains and on different levels of analysis. This class will explore the self as a basis for organizing and integrating information, as well as for guiding behavior in social contexts.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 432 | ATTITUDE ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and research in attitude formation and organization, communication and persuasion, resistance to persuasion, and measurement techniques.

PSY 433 | SOCIAL JUDGMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and research in judgment of social stimuli, perceiving and evaluating persons, and social comparison processes.

PSY 434 | SMALL GROUP BEHAVIOR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and research in goal formation, conformity, power and communication structures, cohesion, and task performance. The emphasis is on the behavior of persons within groups.

PSY 435 | SPECIAL SEMINAR IN PSYCHOLOGICAL SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This class will focus on theory and research pertaining to a selected topic in psychological science to be determined by the instructor.

PSY 437 | ADVANCED PERSONALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Critical analysis of research in personality with emphasis on the development and testability of major constructs in contemporary research.

PSY 439 | COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a graduate course in advanced developmental psychology, with a focus on cognitive and social-cognitive development in infancy through childhood. Example topics include children's early thinking about number, morality, and social relationships, as well as how early environments inform children's cognitive and social-cognitive development. Where appropriate, this class will make links to both philosophical inquiries into the nature of the human mind and to practical inquiries concerning education and public policy.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 440 | PSYCHOLOGY OF WORK AND MOTIVATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Current research and theories in organizational psychology relating to motivation, job satisfaction, work attitudes, employee withdrawal, and counterproductivity.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 441 | PSYCHOLOGY OF LEADERSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Current research and theories in organizational psychology relating to leadership, supervision, job performance, and managerial training. Emphasis is on theoretical development and empirical evaluation of constructs in contemporary research.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 442 | PERSONNEL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Major issues in the Human Resource area. Topics include personnel selection methods, focusing on recruitment, biodata, references, testing, interviews. Discussion of psychometrics, validity generalization, utility. Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 443 | PSYCHOLOGY OF DESIGN | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course helps students understand how theoretical principles of psychology can be applied to the design of human-centered organizations, environments and technologies. Prior familiarity with psychology and experimental design is strongly recommended. Cross-level with PSY 383.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 444 | PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL AND PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory of criterion development, the evaluation process, and measurement in performance appraisal. Emphasis on design and development.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 445 | ADVANCED TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT IN ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In-depth exposure to issues related to training in industry and other organizations. Such topics as needs assessment, training program design, program evaluation, and relevant social and economic issues will be covered.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 446 | PSYCHOLOGICAL THEORIES OF ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Theory and research in the psychology of organizations relating to organizational design, analysis, systems, processes and change.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 447 | ORGANIZATIONAL CONSULTATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applies behavioral science and managerial theories and methodologies to organizational consultation and change processes.

PSY 446 and PSY 448 are prerequisites for this class.

PSY 448 | CONCEPTS, METHODS, AND ETHICS FOR INDUSTRIAL-ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Major concepts and techniques relevant to I-O Psychology. Topics include job analysis, job evaluation, basics of regression, legal issues, affirmative action, and ethics.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 449 | ADVANCED SEMINAR IN WORK TEAMS AND COLLABORATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Work is often collaborative and organized in teams. This reading-intensive seminar increases students' understanding of team and group phenomena in organizations, including unique methodological and statistical considerations when researching these phenomena. The course primarily focuses on intrateam phenomena. Students must be second or third years in the industrial-organizational psychology doctoral program, or obtain special permission from the instructor. Topics are covered assuming students have in-depth knowledge of pertinent statistical, methodological, and psychometric issues; and foundational psychological theories taught in previous courses of the doctoral course sequence.

PSY 448 is a prerequisite for this class.

PSY 450 | PSYCHOLOGICAL MEASUREMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Logical and mathematical principles underlying test construction with emphasis on evaluating the reliability and validity of scores.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 451 | APPLIED STATISTICAL PREDICTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Applications of statistics and psychological measurement to the problems of predicting human performance. Several computer programs will be used to analyze data.

PSY 454 | BEHAVIOR MODIFICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Analysis of principles, practices and research related to learning theory and the modification of human behavior.

PSY 461 | ETHICS & HISTORY OF PSYCHOLOGY SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A review of the history of modern psychology, including various theoretical systems and American Psychological Association ethical principles for psychologists. Topics covered will include contributions of important leaders in the field, specific trends throughout the history of psychology, and the major philosophical questions underlying psychological science. Students will learn the historical context from which ethical codes have emerged and how to apply them in a competent manner.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 469 | EMOTIONS AND EMOTIONAL DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Emotions And Emotional Development.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 471 | PSYCHOLOGY OF TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed for students from a variety of fields interested in careers working with children and adults who have experienced trauma. Students will learn about the psychological sequelae of different traumatic experiences, with emphasis on violence and victimization, as well as assessment methods and interventions aimed at reducing violence and addressing post-traumatic stress symptoms. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the central psychological theories of trauma and issues that need to be addressed to advance this field. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 472 | PSYCHOLOGY OF DISASTER AND CRISIS INTERVENTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed for students from a variety of fields interested in careers related to crisis intervention. Students will learn about the psychological sequelae of natural and man-made disasters, terror, and war, as well as different models for crisis interventions. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources, and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the state of this field and the central issues that practitioners face when working with vulnerable disaster survivors. Multiple assessment methods will be used to evaluate student learning and application of course material. Cross-listed with PSY 372.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 473 | THE PSYCHOLOGY OF JUDGMENT AND DECISION-MAKING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An introduction to research in judgment and choice behaviors. Judgment refers to how people evaluate information and make predictions. Choice concerns how people select a course of action among alternatives.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 474 | DEVELOPMENTAL TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed for students from a variety of fields interested in understanding the sequelae of trauma across the lifespan. In addition to learning about various trauma-related concerns across various developmental stages, the course will also review research on multigenerational trauma topics. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the developmental theories of trauma and issues that need to be addressed to advance this field. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues. Cross level with PSY 374.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 476 | SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY OF TRAUMA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed for students from a variety of fields interested in understanding the social effects of trauma at intrapersonal and interpersonal levels. The course will also review research on the effects of collective and systemic traumas. Students will review a combination of book chapters, scientific reviews, and primary empirical sources. Lecture and class discussion will be used to advance students' understanding of the social psychological theories of trauma and issues that need to be addressed to advance this field. A variety of evaluation activities will be used to assess student learning and application of key concepts to real life issues. Cross-level with PSY 376.

PSY 481 | CHILD ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to the clinical assessment of children and adolescents using formal and informal tests of cognitive, social, and emotional functioning.

Status as a Clinical Psychology graduate student is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 482 | ADULT ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to the clinical assessment of adults using formal and informal tests of cognitive, personality, and emotional functioning.

PSY 481 and status as a Clinical Psychology graduate student are prerequisites for this course.

PSY 483 | ADVANCED ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced study of neuropsychological, developmental, forensic, and other assessment methods, with emphasis on analysis, interpretation and integration of all pertinent clinical data, and report writing.

PSY 481 and PSY 482 are prerequisites for this class.

PSY 484 | BEHAVIORAL ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Behavioral observation and recording. Self-report measures.

Physiological measurement. Evaluation of behavioral measures and areas of research.

PSY 485 | NEUROPSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to theory and assessment techniques related to adult and child neurological functioning.

PSY 486 | ADVANCED PSYCHOPATHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Review of the major diagnostic categories as outlined by the current Diagnostic and Statistical Manual. Current issues in psychopathology and related research are reviewed.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 487 | PSYCHOPATHOLOGY OF THE CHILD | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduction to the many categories of psychopathology affecting children and adolescents. Emphasis on the developmental and environmental contexts.

PSY 488 | PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOTHERAPY AND BEHAVIOR CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Analysis of theoretical approaches to psychotherapy.

Status as a Psychology graduate student (or permission of instructor) is a prerequisite for this course.

PSY 489 | ADVANCED TOPICS IN PSYCHOTHERAPY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the theories and models of public policy-making. It highlights how public policy is made and who participates in the process. It explores the important role of politics in public policy-making. American institutions and groups are highlighted as well as the unique role the media plays in the process. Students will also have a chance to analyze a public policy based on the diversity of public policy models.

PPS 302 | ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT AND POLICY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Students will explore the different environmental programs and policies. A portion of the course will examine the management of environmental programs and the role of regulations, adjudication, and policy tools available for making policy and managing the implementation of environmental programs. Students will analyze a specific environmental program in the government and evaluate its management. This course prepares students with a background for working in the environmental management field.

PPS 318 | PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT AND EVALUATION NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Every nonprofit organization (NPO) should measure its progress in fulfilling its mission, its success in mobilizing its resources, and its staff's effectiveness on the job. What about a program implemented by an NPO works? How does it make a difference? Who benefits most? And in what context? Program Development and Evaluation is a course that will introduce students to practical program planning, implementation and evaluation skills applicable to nonprofit organizations engaged in a variety of policy areas including emergency relief, service delivery, and policy & rights advocacy. The topics include identifying the problem, planning, implementing and evaluating a program. The course will examine both formative and summative evaluation, and why these components are so critical to measure the real success of an NPO in achieving its mission.

PPS 308 or CSS 300 is a prerequisite for this class.

PPS 319 | FUNDRAISING FOR NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course teaches students the theories and techniques of resource development and fundraising for nonprofit organizations. We discuss the fundraising tradition in the U.S., principal donor types, theories of donor behavior, and the organizational, legal and ethical contexts of fundraising. PPS 329 | STRATEGIC MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students learn how to apply strategic management and planning concepts and tools to public and nonprofit organizations to achieve goals and objectives in meeting service delivery missions, both domestically and internationally. The course focuses on analyzing the interaction of trends, market forces, stakeholders, and core competencies in developing visions and strategies for alternative scenarios.

PPS 330 | SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Sustainable development has become a crucial concept in international initiatives worldwide. It attempts to foster policies that balance the need for economic development with practices that promote healthy communities and ecosystems. This course is based on the instructor's theoretical and practical experience gathered in developed and developing countries under market and command economies conditions. Special emphasis is placed on the role of institutions, both governmental and non-government, in shaping economic policies that are compatible with environmental health. The course pursues the objective of preparing students to understand main environmental problems and to generate solutions for these problems from a multidisciplinary perspective.

PPS 332 | NATIONAL PARKS POLICY AND GOVERNANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the interrelationship between public policy, human values, and nature as displayed through environmental policy governing our national parks. Special attention is given to the cultural dynamics (including political and legal) that are demonstrated in how public policies have been created and implemented over time in regards to our national parks. The course reviews the policy literature and theories associated with the management of the national parks as it reflects our societal values of the time period. These policies have dramatically changed over time, so it is an ideal venue that demonstrates a significant change in how we view nature. The role of tourism, economic development pressures and property owners (takings) concerns will be included. Also, critical thinking about national parks policy will be required. This is taught as a hybrid course.

PPS 333 | GREEN CITIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course looks at public policies pertaining to urban sustainability. Low-carbon transportation, green building policies, locally produced renewable energy, and storm water management policies are among the topics discussed.

PPS 334 | SUSTAINABLE LAND REVITALIZATION AND BROWNFIELDS DEVELOPMENT POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is focused on environmental public policy issues associated with Brownfields, Superfund sites, and an assortment of state and local land revitalization programs. PPS 352 | ISSUES IN URBAN EDUCATIONAL POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the politics, history, and social context of urban education. Special attention is devoted to emerging policy alternatives such as the use of school vouchers and the formation of charter schools.

PPS 353 | INEQUALITY AND PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Many recent studies have detailed the significant growth in economic inequality in the United States, showing a level not seen since the 1920s. Others have focused on the consequences on significant inequality for a society and its politics. Often this inequality is seen as a necessary (and even desirable) consequence of a free market. This course focuses, however, on policy aspects of our current inequality: the public policies that have contributed to current levels of inequality, reasons for reducing inequality, and public policies that may reduce inequality. U.S. inequality and public policies will also be contrasted with those of similar nations, such as Germany and Nordic countries.

PPS 358 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN NONPROFIT STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an in-depth examination of various issues in nonprofit management. It may be taken multiple times, each on a different topic.

PPS 359 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN PUBLIC POLICY STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an in-depth examination of various public policy issues and be taken multiple times for each topic offered.

PPS 360 | GREAT LAKES GOVERNANCE POLICY AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Great Lakes of the United States are a significant natural resource. This course will give an overview of the discovery, history, and policy development associated with the management and governance of the lakes. Students will research the different organizations involved with public policy of the lakes, as well as learn the legal framework in how they interact. This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to understanding the lakes.

PPS 361 | PUBLIC SPACES AND SOCIAL CONTROL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Several contemporary trends have led city governments to emphasize policies to attract middle class residents, tourists, and conventions back to the city. These policies often include means of increasing social control over public spaces so that these users feel safe. Also, given fiscal constraints, many local governments see privatization of some public spaces, including neighborhoods, as a means of stretching limited dollars while providing needed services. Many commentators and scholars, however, are greatly concerned about the resulting changes in public spaces of urban areas. They write about Disneyfication of urban areas, commodification of culture, the city as spectacle or theme park, the city as fortress or panopticon, the restrictions of certain behaviors and publics in urban areas—in other words, the loss of public space. These issues and policies raise questions about the differences between public and private spaces, the role of public spaces in democratic governance, the definition/identification of "the public" and citizens, the use of private governments for social control, police strategies for social control, and the equity of social control efforts in and current use patterns of public spaces. Those issues are the focus of the course.

PPS 368 | ENVIRONMENTALISM AND DISABILITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course looks at the emerging research on how broadly the environmental movement (from transcendentalism through conservation and sustainability) has framed humans' interaction with nature and protection from pollution from an ableist lens. Case studies will be used on the wilderness lands policy, use of national parks, the environmental justice movement on public health, the current climate change and energy justice efforts to demonstrate the importance of framing that has generated exclusionary policies and built structures dislocating the disabled person. Concepts of eco-crip theory, and the notion of the "ecology of other" from the scholarship are explored as well as under the UN Sustainability Goals (SDG4) on disability.

PPS 370 | THE ENERGY SECTOR AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

PRAD 388 | AAF STRATEGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The National Student Advertising Competition is the premier college advertising competition that provides more than 2,000 college students the real-world experience of creating a strategic advertising/marketing/media campaign for a corporate client. Students enrolled in PRAD 388 and 389 will compete in this national competition and have a unique opportunity to create like a real pro with a real client. This class is the strategy section of the American Advertising Federation's (AAF) National Student Advertising Competition (NSAC). We will work together to solve a real marketing problem with a real client. The client will brief us just as they would their agencies in the real world. In this class, students will work together as one team. We will create an inspiring creative brief starting with understanding the client business challenge. We will then set campaign goals, define the consumer mindset, and determine a messaging and communications strategy that will inspire the integrated creative campaign. (Developed in Winter Quarter class.) We will use quantitative and qualitative research and data to make the case for our strategic direction. Lectures, in-class discussions, readings and speakers will help facilitate this process. Your ability to work together as a team (both inside and outside of class) will be critical in developing a successful strategy/creative brief. Your final project will be a first-class pitch presentation delivered to a group of faculty members and industry professionals. This presentation will also be foundation of presentation submitted to the competition.

PRAD 389 | AAF CAMPAIGNS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The National Student Advertising Competition is the premier college advertising competition that provides more than 2,000 college students the real-world experience of creating a strategic advertising/marketing/media campaign for a corporate client. Students enrolled in PRAD 388 and 389 will compete in this national competition and have a unique opportunity to create like a real pro with a real client. PRAD 389 is when your insight and strategy from PRAD 388 inspire the Big Idea and its creative campaign. Now, armed with that insight and strategy you will develop the Big Idea, then the creative execution and final presentation. So, simply put, in the Winter quarter of this two-quarter class you will develop 1. the creative idea 2. create the "advertising" that will tell the brand story and engage the target consumers across the platforms determined by the communication plan developed in PRAD 388. From print and TV to social media to streaming video, experiential marketing to promotions, from influencers to events, you will actually execute the campaign for presentation to the client for the competition. Your ability to work together as a team (both inside and outside of class) will be critical to the success of this part. Your final work will consist of the strategy and research presentation developed in Autumn Term, plus a separate creative presentation delivered live to the judges. At that point, we will find out if we pass the first regional round and go on to the semifinals.

REL 239 | RELIGION AND FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the idea of religion as a human cultural construct. Even though religions seem to be diminishing, human beings continue to attempt to answer their existential questions of meaning. Using films as frameworks, we will review the basic constructs of the Abrahamic essentials as enculturated in Western Euro-American culture and we will attempt to answer the question, "Has popular culture and film replaced institutional or organized western religions?" In other words, are movies answering the human existential questions once answered by organized religious traditions in Western cultures?

REL 241 | RELIGION IN CHINESE HISTORY, SOCIETY AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of the Chinese religious landscape, focusing on social and practical dimensions of Chinese religion, such as state rituals and private cults, liturgies and individual practices of Taoist priests and adepts, politico-religious ideas that inspired popular messianic movements throughout Chinese history, and interrelations of Buddhist and Taoist clerics and institutions in the state. Cross-listed with AAS 241.

REL 242 | HINDU THOUGHT AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Hinduism is one of the world's oldest religions, but it is also the world's most diverse religion. Despite its variety, certain themes have remained throughout the ages—karma and ethical responsibility, liberation from the bonds of worldly existence through yoga and devotion, communication with the divine through ritual, and the many forms, male and female, that God can take. This course traces the development of Hinduism from 5000 years ago to the present, with emphasis on change and continuity in those themes. Cross-listed with AAS 224.

REL 243 | BUDDHIST THOUGHT IN CULTURAL CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of the Buddhist tradition, using original sources, from its beginnings in ancient India to a world religion with strong roots in the US. Students will discover how Buddhism interacts with cultures from Sri Lanka and Thailand to China, Japan and Tibet. Although this course is online, students in the region will have the opportunity to practice meditation at a Chicago zendo and tour the Buddhist art at the Chicago Art Institute. Cross-listed with AAS 243.

REL 244 | RELIGION AND ETHICS IN JAPANESE FOODSCAPES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

What would be your last meal?" We may all have to reflect on this question once or twice in our lives. The potential diversity of our responses to this question suggests that our relation to food can be quite personal and intimate, as well as cultural and social. In this regard, investigating food is a powerful analytical tool for understanding ourselves and our relations with our surroundings. In particular, in Japan, many TV programs on food, including quiz shows, dramas, and documentaries, have been produced and have garnered attention. Thus, the course equips students with a grasp of the Japanese culture from the vantage point of food, and the benefit of a personal self-reflection and understanding. Studying food in Japan, with particular attention to the underpinnings of religious doctrines, spiritual sensibilities, and ethical implications will inform students not only of the cultural ethos of Japan, but also of its social and political orders. Students will explore the relations between religion and food by examining the ways in which food is used in religious rituals, in which religious beliefs dictate dietary habits and thereby fortify the adherents' identity and reinforce their membership. But the function of food is not to bring people together, but also to divide them. The course also investigates how religious proscriptions on foods render them either sacred or taboo, thereby fostering a corresponding social hierarchy in which status is closely linked to what one consumes and produces; certain foods (e.g. salt, rice, sake) are consecrated and used for rituals, while other foods (e.g. meat) are forbidden.

REL 245 | RELIGION IN JAPANESE HISTORY, SOCIETY, AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Explores the specific interplay between religion and culture in Japan. Taking historical and cultural factors into account, it considers prehistoric Japanese religion, ancient imperial myths, the assimilation of Buddhism, Confucianism, and continental (Chinese/Korean) culture, the religious and aesthetic worlds of the court nobility and the warrior class, popular mountain cults, the revival and systematization of Shinto, the impact of western culture, Japanese ultranationalism, and the religious situation in the post-war period. Cross-listed with AAS 245.

REL 246 | TRADITIONS OF CHINESE POPULAR CULTURE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Most of the Chinese, throughout history, did not subscribe to one exclusive belief system or belong to a single institutional religion. They, instead, participated in a web of popular religious practices, held multitudinous popular beliefs, and shared with each other imaginaires of heroes, monsters, ghosts, and gods. This course focuses on what has been popular and provides an understanding of Chinese religions from the perspective of the common people. Students are expected to learn aspects and elements of religion-related Chinese culture, such as mythology, ancestor veneration, divination, demonology, hero cults, festivals, local deities, and drama while paying attention to the internal logic of religious practices and imagination.

REL 247 | LITERATURE AND RELIGION IN JAPAN | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Focuses on the pervasive influence of religious thought and sentiment on Japanese literature from ancient to modern times and explores the intricate relationship between religion, aesthetics, and the arts in Japanese culture. Considers original works including ancient Japanese mythology and poetry, the memoirs of court ladies and Buddhist hermits, romance, epics, folktales and social satire, with attention to their historical, social, religious and social dimensions, as well as to the individual experience expressed in them. Cross-listed with AAS 247.

REL 248 | LITERATURE AND RELIGION IN CHINA | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the interpretation of renowned Chinese literary works, with attention paid to the intersections between literature and religion. Students are expected to acquire skills of literary appreciation and basic religious literacy by engaging with both texts and their contexts. This course explores major literary genres, such as revealed texts, rhapsody, lyrics, regulated verse, popular tales, plays, and novels, and discusses related thematic topics, such as the religious themes, mythological contexts, literariness, aesthetics, and individual experiences.

REL 249 | RELIGION IN MANGA AND ANIME | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Because of manga and anime's global popularity, growing market size, and artistic qualities, they become a window on Japanese history, culture, and society. The religious dimensions of manga and anime have deep roots in the history of Asian religion, visual arts, and literature, and they are key to a nuanced understanding of many important works. This course will address and discuss topics of religious significance in connection to manga and anime, such as death, afterlife, spiritual purity, personal cultivation, nature, among others. This course intends to help students understand various aspects of Japanese religions through manga and anime, where religious elements abound.

REL 250 | MYSTICISM IN RELIGIOUS TRADITIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will look at the phenomena of mysticism, its doctrines and practices, in various religious traditions. It will also look at how various forms of mysticism have influenced the religious traditions with which they associated, (e.g. how Sufism has impacted Islamic religion, civilization and society.) The course will then look at the present situation of mysticisms in regard to religious traditions and to broader societies.

REL 251 | THE IDEA OF "EVIL" | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will try and answer the question what is evil? In religious traditions is evil a relative term? Or is it a universal absolute? Does evil exist independently, or is it a result of the absence of good? How do religious traditions deal with the notion of evil? After we look at the religious, philosophical, historical, conceptualization of evil and how different religious traditions deal with it, the class will look at evil in popular culture (anthropological understanding of evil). How does the popular imagination understand evil? How do they depict and imagine evil (in film, and in literature)? Are these universalities or are they cultural relativism? How has popular culture dealt with evil? Finally the course tries to see if there is any connection with the popular imagination and religious traditions when it comes to evil.

REL 252 | FORGIVENESS AND RECONCILIATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A study of various understandings of "forgiveness" and "reconciliation" in several religions and cultures. The nature and dynamics of forgiveness and reconciliation will be examined both theoretically and in relationship to specific conflicts. Cross-listed with PAX 252.

REL 253 | DESPAIR AND HOPE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course addresses the important religio-ethical concepts of despair and hope from both theoretical and applied perspectives. The course explores: a) various religious, ethical, and psychological understandings of these concepts and b) applications of these concepts, along with various methods and approaches, to a number of case studies involving personal and/or societal challenges. Cross-listed with PAX 253.

REL 257 | DEATH AND ITS BEYOND: EXPERIENCE, MYTH AND RITUALS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Religious attitudes and practices responding to the phenomena of death and dying, studied cross-culturally, conceptually and ethically.

REL 259 | RELIGION AND SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An investigation of the ways in which various religious traditions engage the social order. Traditions, persons and movements that form the focus of the course will vary from section to section. The course will integrate theory and practice in studying forms of religious engagement. All students will perform some service to a community or within a community organization or agency.

Sophomore standing or above is a prerequisite for this class.

REL 260 | RELIGION AND POLITICAL CONFLICT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of the role of religions and religious movements in political conflicts. Particular sections will examine the relationship of religions to violence and peacemaking in different areas of the world.

REL 261 | RELIGION AND CONFLICT IN SOUTH ASIA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Religion has become central to conflict in contemporary South Asia. This course examines the relationship between religion and conflict both within and between nations in South Asia. It will examine how religion fuels conflict as well as how religion is used to find a nonviolent resolution to conflict. It will also analyze how religion is used to challenge and resist victimization, marginalization, silencing, and indeed violence during conflict. Finally, the course will examine how the cultural politics of class, gender, ethnicity, and sexuality constitute and are constituted by religion.

REL 262 | RELIGION AND GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of the moral, religious, and social dimensions of the phenomenon of globalization. Through a critical assessment of both the positive and the negative dimensions of globalization, students will seek to understand more fully the ethical implications of globalization for economics, culture, and society.

REL 263 | RELIGION AND POLITICS IN THE MIDDLE EAST | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An exploration of Judaism, Christianity and Islam as they develop and interact in the Middle East, historically and in terms of contemporary religious and political issues. Includes a study of personal narratives of people from Jewish, Christian and Muslim communities. Cross-listed with IWS 263.

REL 264 | COLONIZATION, RELIGION AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will explore the religious traditions and cultural identities of some of the peoples native to the Americas, Africa, Asia and Oceania; problems they have with the "civilized" world and their potential solutions to them.

REL 265 | ISLAMIST POLITICAL MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will introduce the student to Islamic political movements around the globe. The course will look at their history as well as their intellectual and theological underpinnings. Cross-listed with IWS 265.

REL 266 | ISLAM IN THE UNITED STATES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will explore Muslim cultures in Canada and the U. S. While the course may also investigate histories, ethnicities and religious ideologies, the organizing focus will be on struggle, contestation, maturity and change. Although Canadian provinces and U.S. states claim that religion should present no bar to full participation in the public square and religious discrimination is illegal, Muslims, in fact, are challenged as citizens. Living in religious Diasporas as minorities, communities north and south of the Canadian border, Muslims have found themselves contesting notions of integration, pluralism and acculturation. Often labeled "as the enemies within," Muslims have laid their claims as productive citizens, determined to contribute to the security, welfare and advancement of their home. Cross-listed with IWS 266.

REL 268 | MODERN JUDAISM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of central features of the modern Jewish experience including the transition from traditional to modern religious life and practice, American Judaism, the Holocaust, and the establishment of the State of Israel.

REL 270 | WOMEN IN THE BIBLE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An examination of the historical role of women in the Bible and the contemporary concerns of feminist theology, women's spirituality and ethical issues arising from the contemporary application of these biblical texts to women's experiences.

REL 272 | GENDER AND SEXUALITY IN MUSLIM CULTURES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Explores historical and contemporary trends in writing on Muslim women along modern and contemporary narratives on gender and sexuality in Muslim majority and minority cultures. Cross-listed with IWS 272.

REL 273 | JESUS ACROSS CULTURES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

A study of the multiple and diverse (primarily theological, but also literary, artistic and philosophical) historical and contemporary images of Jesus, as a way of understanding the diversity of this tradition and of its impacts on society, and of understanding the issue of plurality or diversity itself in religious traditions. Cross-listed with CTH 270.

REL 274 | IRELAND: RELIGION AND THE CONTEMPORARY "TROUBLES" | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an examination of the role of religions and religious movements in political conflicts. We will be working on understanding the modern conflict in Northern Ireland, a region in which history, memory, culture, religion, and politics have frequently collided to produce resentment and suspicion at best and brutal violence at worst. The period known as the "Troubles," roughly the late 1960s to the late 1990s, was notable for its frequent spasms of viciousness between and among people who divide themselves according to which of the Christian traditions, Catholic or Protestant, they claim as their own. Cross-listed with CTH 274 and IRE 103.

REL 275 | COMMUNITY AND AUTHORITY IN MEDIEVAL JUDAISM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An introduction to the history, religion and culture of the Jewish people under Christendom and Islam from the fourth through the end of the fifteenth centuries.

REL 278 | GENDER IDENTITIES, SEXUALITY AND RELIGION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A study of the historical and contemporary complexities of gender identities and sexuality within major religious traditions.

REL 280 | ROMAN CATHOLIC THEOLOGICAL THINKING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of the Roman Catholic tradition of "faith seeking understanding" examining the content and the process of emergence of Catholic beliefs about such matters as God, sin, Jesus Christ, revelation, the church and eschatology. Cross-listed with CTH 243.

REL 281 | ROMAN CATHOLIC LITURGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of the emergence, meaning and dynamics of ritual in the Roman Catholic tradition. Cross-listed with CTH 231.

REL 283 | ROMAN CATHOLIC SOCIAL THOUGHT IN CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of Roman Catholicism's understanding of its relation to the social world, including such matters as the relation between Church and State, the moral authority of the Church, and of its teaching on such issues as social ethics, politics and economics. Cross-listed with CTH 247.

REL 284 | CATHOLICISM AS A SPIRITUAL PATH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An experience-centered study of the relationship between contemplation and action, prayer and service, liturgy and social justice, personal religious experience and the wider experience of Catholics. Both historical and contemporary spiritualities will be explored. Cross-listed with CTH 229.

REL 287 | ROMAN CATHOLIC MORAL THOUGHT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines various moral topics within a Roman Catholic framework. Papal pronouncements, Magisterial statements, Episcopal texts, the works of influential theologians, and critical voices both within and beyond the Church will be critically examined. Special attention will be paid to the method of moral argumentation.

REL 290 | LATINX LIBERATION TRADITIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

What does liberation mean in the context of the Americas today? How have people of Latin American descent – both in Latin America and the United States – connected conceptions of liberation to related ideas of liberty and freedom, as well as to notions of political revolution, cultural identity, and prophetic forms of religious faith? This course examines how these questions have been theorized across the Latino/a Americas, especially as they relate to questions of religion. Topics include liberation philosophy, critical pedagogy, prophetic religion, cultural praxis, Latina feminism, and decolonial thought. Cross-listed with LST 290.

REL 291 | LIBERATION THEOLOGIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of religious traditions such as Catholicism, indigenous religions, and Protestantism in Latin America, with special focus on how these traditions have been transplanted and reshaped upon entry into varied Latino communities in the United States. Historical analyses of the Latin American roots of these traditions will provide contextualization for the ongoing examination of transnational religious cultures in the U.S. Cross-listed with LST 291.

REL 295 | SHI'ITE ISLAM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will look at the history and the various divisions of Shi'i Islam. Cross-listed with IWS 295.

REL 298 | THEORY AND METHOD IN THE STUDY OF RELIGION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the history of the discipline of religious studies with special attention to its emergence in the contexts of colonialism and the Enlightenment. The first goal of this course is for students to acquire a beginning understanding of how the field was constructed as a discipline of study and to explore the connections of its foundational methods of inquiry to the particular historical contexts in which those methods were developed. The second goal of this class is to expose students to important contemporary conversations within the discipline through the exploration of selected areas of inquiry and methods of analysis.

Any 100-level REL course is a prerequisite for this class.

REL 299 | RELIGIOUS STUDIES, OFF-CAMPUS | 4-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Religious Studies credits earned off-campus. Topics vary.

REL 300 | THEORIES OF CULTURE AND RELIGION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This seminar explores contemporary approaches used to study religion as a cultural phenomenon. Drawing on scholarship from a variety of disciplines that has shaped the academic study of religion, we will explore the relationship among religion, culture, and power in the contemporary world. We will examine some of the key issues that confront scholars in the field as they grapple with the politics of knowledge production and representation in the contemporary world.

REL 301 | THEORIES OF RELIGION AND SPIRITUALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An interdisciplinary investigation into the nature of religious experience drawing on the fields of anthropology, psychology, sociology, and theology.

REL 302 | THEORIES OF RELIGION AND ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This seminar explores the intersection between religion and ethics, centering on the question of how the study of religion contributes to contemporary academic discourse on ethics and, in turn, how the discipline of ethics helps to deepen understanding of the roles of religion in society. To this end, the course prepares students not only to grapple with religious and ethical theories, but also to analyze modern economic, political, social and environmental structures with critical attention to the religious worldviews and ethical frameworks that emerge out of, and at once underwrite, those structures. The course is therefore designed to enable students to bring familiar norms, traditions, and cultural behaviors under critical scrutiny. Consequently, the nature of this seminar is comparative, proceeding through comparisons both within and among diverse religious traditions.

REL 305 | TOPICS IN RELIGION AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Examines particular issues in the relationship between religion and culture. Specific topics for current offering are noted in the current class schedule.

REL 322 | FEMINIST ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An investigation of theoretical issues regarding women's moral experiences and of feminist ethical arguments combatting various forms of oppression.

Various topics within the comparative study of religions. Specific topics for current offering are noted in the current schedule.

REL 342 | ZEN MIND | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Mind, due to its purported ability to achieve enlightenment, is at the center of Zen theories and practices. This course explores several aspects of Zen in relation to the discourse of mind in East Asia and features three main components: Buddhist meditation (dhy/na/chan) in India and China, how Chan developed into Zen in Japan, and the possible dialogue between Zen and contemporary philosophy. The topics include, but are not limited to the nature of mind, meditative experiences, intuition, koans, and Zen aesthetics.

REL 344 | YOGA AND TANTRA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An examination of the history, philosophy and cultural meaning of body-oriented liberative techniques as they developed on the Indian subcontinent and Himalayan region in Hinduism and Buddhism. Students registering for this course are expected to have studied one or both of these traditions in courses such as REL 142, 143, 242, or 243, or in other courses. Background in theory is also useful. Cross-listed with AAS 344.

REL 351 | LIBERATION THEOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Focuses upon the ideas and practices of a radical movement for the transformation of Christianity and for social justice that originated in the "Basic Christian Communities" of Latin America and spread from there to North America and the Third World. Entails either an Applied Research or Service Learning component. Cross-listed with CTH 341 and PAX 331.

REL 362 | JEWS AND THEIR MESSIAHS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to the history of messianic beliefs in Judaism from biblical times to the present. It is often assumed that "messianism," i.e. the belief in a savior figure destined to come in the future to usher in a new age of redemption and moral goodness, has always been central to Judaism. The course will examine whether our modern concept of "messianism" can be used as a valid tool to describe Jewish religious experience. The course will also analyze the extent to which Jewish messianic beliefs varied over time by examining major messianic texts and movements in their historical, literary, and cultural contexts.

Sophomore standing or above is a prerequisite for this class.

REL 370 | FEMINIST THEOLOGIES | 4 quarter hours

RUS 212E | PROJECTION, REVOLUTION, DREAMS AND NIGHTMARES:
INTRODUCTION TO RUSSIAN AND SOVIET CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

THIS COURSE IS TAUGHT IN ENGLISH. This course is a survey of Russian and Soviet film, beginning with the origins of film itself and how it was received in Russia. From there, we will explore the first films of the late Russian Empire, the early avant-garde works of revolutionary cinematographers who sought to create the "New Soviet Man (and Woman)" by means of altering their perception through montage, editing, and documentary footage, the Socialist Realist films of high Stalinism, newly personalized themes found in films of the "Thaw" era, the works of Andrei Tarkovsky and Sergei Parazhanov (legendary Soviet film auteurs) against the backdrop of the subsequent "Stagnation," the cultural revolt of the "Perestroika" era, the gritty films of Alexei Balabanov shot during the "wild nineties," and the dreamlike and nightmarish offerings of the new Russian millennium. We will interpret these films through the lens of contemporaneous cultural developments in Russia and the Soviet Union. As part of the course, students will be challenged not only to recognize how Russian and Soviet culture has informed the development of the cinema but, likewise, how, since the turn of the twentieth century, cinema has been a profound engine of cultural innovation and evolution throughout Russian and Soviet history.

RUS 213E | TEMPLARS OF THE PROLETARIAT": ESOTERIC TRADITIONS
IN RUSSIA AND THE SOVIET UNION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

TAUGHT IN ENGLISH. This course explores the primary traditions of the 'esoteric' or the 'occult' in the Russian imperial and Soviet eras. Topics range from occultism in the Soviet secret police to apocryphal and heretical interpretations of religion(s). As we examine each tradition, our task will be to understand the importance of the 'esoteric' as a category of societal meaning and cultural production.

RUS 215E | THE BODY AND SEXUALITY IN MODERN RUSSIAN DRAMA | 4

Recent research in leadership with analysis of psychological systems, interpersonal relations, and the relationship of rewards to performance are addressed through case studies, practical application, and readings throughout the course. The course contains special attention to leadership theories and practices that students use to assess and develop their own most effective leadership styles including value-based leadership models such as servant-leadership, "The Leadership Challenge" of Kouzes and Posner, and emerging theories within the field of leadership studies.

MPS 522 | FUNDAMENTALS OF HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course explores human resource issues facing employees with supervisory responsibilities in public service organizations, including those working in the volunteer, non-profit, religious, government, and education sectors. The course considers human resource planning, employee recruiting and selection, and the motivation and evaluation of staff personnel and managers both individually and in teams. Topics include recruiting and selecting employees and managers, fostering team development, managing employee stress, preventing workplace violence, and handling issues pertaining to termination, training, and development. The course also explores progressive discipline and, improving performance management of employees and volunteers.

MPS 523 | GROUP DYNAMICS FOR LEADERS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This interactive course will explore the relevant theories and methods for understanding the structures and processes of groups. The course will also consider how leaders and managers function effectively within groups. An emphasis is placed on role and function, status, power, leadership, communication, decision-making, problem solving, conflict management, negotiation, and coalition.

MPS 524 | MARKETING FOR SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides a broad understanding of marketing nonprofit, governmental, and advocacy organizations. Students learn how to analyze and develop a wide range of marketing plans and campaigns. Content includes the key theories, principles, and techniques of marketing and the differences between for-profit and non-profit efforts. The associated aspects of marketing—public relations, communications, advertising, and fundraising—are explained and compared. Students learn all aspects of the marketing process from identifying and defining the preferred target segments, crafting the key messages, and developing, executing, and measuring effective marketing campaigns.

MPS 525 | WORKING WITH NONPROFIT BOARDS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the legal and philosophical reasons that nonprofit organizations are governed by an external board of directors. Membership, structure and process for this body are examined, as well as the relationship of employees to the individual board members and the policies established by this group.

MPS 526 | LOCAL GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course analyzes decision-making processes used in local government from the perspective of the chief executive officer such as city manager, township supervisor, special district administrator, or park superintendent. It includes operational aspects of municipal administration including the effect of intergovernmental relations on local government, the role of the local government administrator in policy implementation, chief executive and elected official interactions, and regional governance of the delivery of services that cross political boundaries.

MPS 527 | BEHAVIORAL STRATEGIES FOR PUBLIC SERVICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Using insights from psychology, economics, sociology, and consumer behavior can help policymakers, program administrators, and fundraisers to predict and influence how individuals will behave in response to public and nonprofit initiatives. Individuals often respond in ways that are not expected by policymakers, influencing the efficiency and effectiveness of government and nonprofit programs. Insights about actual individual behavior can influence how policies and administrative requirements are designed in education, health, taxation, bureaucratic administration, and nonprofit fundraising. In this course, students will review the principles of behavioral public administration, the successful use of "nudges" by government agencies and nonprofit organizations, and the ethical and practical considerations when designing behavioral interventions to support policy.

MPS 528 | FOUNDATION MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines the concepts, functions and practices of organized philanthropy, with a primary emphasis on corporate, private and community foundations.

MPS 529 | STRATEGIC MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students learn how to apply strategic management and planning concepts and tools to public and nonprofit organizations to achieve goals and objectives in meeting service delivery missions, both domestically and internationally. The course focuses on analyzing the interaction of trends, market forces, stakeholders, and core competencies in developing visions and strategies for alternative scenarios.

MPS 530 | ANALYSIS OF NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course explores the art and science of nonprofit management. Students analyze nonprofits holistically, combining perspectives from law, governance, resource development, and finance. Students learn through hands-on analysis of existing nonprofit organizations and the analysis of historical case studies.

MPS 515 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 531 | HEALTH CARE ADMINISTRATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course focuses on practical examples of financial management of health care institutions. It examines the financial system supporting health care institutions and the financial tools providers and insurers use to administer their programs and keep medical costs in check. Students learn financial management, third party payment methodologies, Medicare and Medicaid, cost accounting, rate setting, budgeting and financial analysis. The impact of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act will be evaluated.

MPS 532 | GRANTS AND CONTRACTS IN PUBLIC MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This class will cover the grant and contracting components of emergency preparedness. Students will learn about government and non-government grants, including how to search for Federal grants. In addition, the class will learn about the role contracts plays in emergency preparedness.

MPS 533 | APPLIED STATISTICS FOR PUBLIC SERVICE (USING EXCEL) | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Using Microsoft Excel software, this course introduces students to the use of quantitative data in policy, public management, and nonprofit decision-making. Topics include: causal inference, descriptive statistics, data visualization, probability, statistical inference, and regression analysis. Students gain hands-on experience managing and analyzing large datasets and critically reviewing quantitative research conducted by others. Special attention is given to best practices for presenting quantitative findings to diverse stakeholders.

MPS 500 (or SUD 401) is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 534 | MEDICAL SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Overview of social systems of health care in the United States, including the health-seeking behavior of patients, relationships among health care providers and organizational settings in which services are delivered. Cross-listed with SOC 431.

MPS 535 | HEALTH CARE POLICY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This seminar focuses on the analysis of contemporary issues in health care policy. Topics covered include public health initiatives, dimensions of health service delivery systems (cost, quality and access), and health policy reforms with a special emphasis on the opportunities to reduce disparities in health care. Students conduct a research project on a health care policy topic of their choosing. Classes include discussions on the challenges of developing and implementing policy changes in public health and health care administration.

MPS 536 | APPLIED STATISTICS FOR PUBLIC SERVICE (USING SPSS) | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Using SPSS software, this course introduces students to the use of quantitative data in policy, public management, and nonprofit decision-making. Topics include: causal inference, descriptive statistics, data visualization, probability, statistical inference, and regression analysis. Students gain hands-on experience managing and analyzing large datasets and critically reviewing quantitative research conducted by others. Special attention is given to best practices for presenting quantitative findings to diverse stakeholders.

MPS 500 (or SUD 401) is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 537 | COMPARATIVE HEALTHCARE SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course offers a comparative analysis of the U.S., selected Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) states, and developing country health care systems, including their relationships to social, cultural, political, economic, environmental factors and policies.

MPS 541 | ECONOMIC FOUNDATIONS OF PUBLIC SERVICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the branches of economics known as microeconomics, public finance, and welfare economics. Students learn to apply standard economic tools to identify policy issues and to analyze them. Specific skill set includes present value techniques.

MPS 542 | POLICY DESIGN AND ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Focuses on the processes and techniques of analyzing and designing public policies. Students are introduced to analytical ways of thinking that include: defining and modeling policy problems; designing policy alternatives; evaluating policy alternatives using ethical, legal, economic, organizational, and political criteria; and anticipating problems of policy implementation.

MPS 514 or MPS 515 or MPS 541 is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 543 | POLICY IMPLEMENTATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the policy making process, from agenda-setting and policy formulation to enactment, implementation, and policy revision. It explores the role of various units of government (local, state, national, international) in policy-making and the involvement of the non-governmental organizations that interact with government. The course also considers the structure and role of the bureaucracy in the formulation and implementation of public policies. Particular emphasis will be placed on the structure and function of administrative organizations within the larger governmental system, critiques of bureaucracy, and administrative reform. Throughout the term, participants explore the systemic factors that mold public policies.

MPS 542 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 546 | ADVOCACY AND LOBBYING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Explores the roles of individuals and organizations in the public policy process, particularly as power arrangements facilitate or impede consensus building. Examines how legislation is written and how administrative rules are formed in government agencies. Special attention is paid to advocacy techniques such as lobbying, public education, and litigation.

MPS 552 | GIS FOR COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on applications of Geographic Information Systems (GIS) to community studies and community development. As an amalgam of information technologies (e.g. database management, Web 2.0) and earth measurement technologies (e.g. global positioning systems, remote sensing), GIS is rapidly entering the realm of community development. The course will explain how GIS works; enable students to learn techniques including mapping, spatial analysis, and data management; and provide students with the opportunity to apply GIS to community development. Cross-listed with GEO 441.

MPS 554 | PRINCIPLES OF EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examines the theory and practice of strategic and operational planning for emergency management planning and response. Surveys government, nonprofit, and private sector activities in emergency and crisis management and policy. Reviews the principles associated with evaluation of risk and the formulation of prevention programs. Identifies the issues and policy responses necessary to achieve coordination of agencies and collaboration with appropriate private resources. The course will be organized around case study examination and table top scenario activities in order to apply concepts in practice.

MPS 559 | ENTREPRENEURSHIP AND NEW VENTURE MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Entrepreneurship and New Venture Management. Cross-listed with MGT 570.

MPS 560 | ADMINISTRATIVE LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on an understanding of government powers by federal, state and local agencies in the US such as oversights, rule making, adjudication and judicial review of local and federal actions, and enforcement of regulatory decision making. It examines how public administration decisions are affected by existing constitutional and legal constraints on the administrative process; it includes the Administrative Procedure Act, Open Meetings Act of Illinois, and the Freedom of Information Act.

MPS 561 | LAW AND NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduces laws and regulations governing nonprofit organizations, including procedures for incorporation, maintenance of tax-exempt status, and compliance with relevant labor laws. No legal background is assumed.

MPS 562 | INTRODUCTION TO HEALTH LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Introduces students from nonlegal backgrounds to the legal system. Examines legal materials, including statutes, judicial opinion, and administrative regulations. Basic legal research and writing skills are taught.

MPS 563 | LAW AND PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Provides an overview of the legal process, developing a basic understanding of legal principles, terms, and court systems. Applies legal analysis to policy issues in the three sectors. Examines the sources of law and explores methods of legal research within the context of public policy analysis.

MPS 542 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 564 | PUBLIC SAFETY ADMINISTRATION AND PLANNING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course covers management strategies and selected analytic tools for the administration of public safety agencies. Management, planning and coordination issues will be addressed across different governmental structures (federal, state, county, local and sub-local); as well as different functional areas across public safety operations, such as staffing/ personnel management; special event planning/operations; interagency coordination; effective community partnership planning; and public communications.

MPS 568 | ENVIRONMENTALISM AND DISABILITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This advanced course looks at the emerging research on how broadly the environmental movement (from transcendentalism through conservation and sustainability) has framed humans' interaction with nature and protection from pollution from an ableist lens. Case studies will be used on the wilderness lands policy, use of national parks, the environmental justice movement on public health, the current climate change and energy justice efforts to demonstrate the importance of framing that has generated exclusionary policies and built structures dislocating the disabled person. Concepts of eco-crip theory, and the notion of the "ecology of other" from the scholarship are explored as well as under the UN Sustainability Goals (SDG4) on disability.

MPS 570 | THE ENERGY SECTOR AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course gives an overview of energy policy and the dynamic and changing nature of the energy sector both in the US and internationally. Energy management topics are included such as mining, disposal, and challenges to the climate and ecosystems. Energy efficiency and current emergent technology is included. Whenever possible, the course includes a Global Learning Experience (GLE) for DePaul students to engage with students about the energy sector and management on other continents. Issues of energy justice and the global South and North American tribal nations are included.

MPS 571 | METROPOLITAN PLANNING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The purpose of this course is to provide an introduction to the professional practice of urban planning and the basic theoretical concepts on which the discipline is based. Students will analyze urban issues, decision-making processes, and resources that affect planning across a metropolitan area, including urban-suburban relations, and the complexities of zoning, economic and community development.

MPS 572 | POVERTY, INEQUALITY AND PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course explores the causes and extent of poverty and inequality in the US. It will also examine historical and contemporary public programs and policy approaches to the reduction of poverty and inequality, with a special focus on these issues in US central cities and metropolitan areas.

MPS 573 | HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is focused on the theory and practice of community development with a special emphasis on affordable housing policies. Specific topics include: the history and context of housing and community development in the US; methods of identifying and analyzing community needs and assets; and planning and implementing a community-based development program.

MPS 574 | RENEWABLE AND SUSTAINABLE ENERGY POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course takes a case study approach to look at policy innovation that supports efforts to decrease the carbon intensity in the energy sector. Focusing primarily on local, state, and subnational government actions, this course surveys key policy tools such as renewable portfolio standards, community choice aggregation, property assessed clean energy, distributed energy generation, and transportation decarbonization efforts.

MPS 575 | STUDY ABROAD SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A Study Abroad course that assesses politics, political institutions, public administration and policy implementation in an international location. It focuses on the international public sector including relationships with nongovernmental organizations and the nonprofit sector. Students expand experiential and intellectual understanding of these global actors and how they compare to the US.

MPS 576 | ENERGY POLICY AND THE ENVIRONMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Fluctuating energy prices and climate change concerns have kept the public's interest in energy and environmental issues over the years. Legislators have occasionally passed laws to encourage renewable and other "green" energy technologies, enhance future energy security, and reduce harmful pollutants that result from energy use. This course will provide a historical and broad perspective on energy policy, energy resources and use, environmental protection, energy regulation, renewable resource economics, CO2 emission reduction strategies, and other issues. The course is divided into three main sections that cover: 1) energy supply, including from oil, natural gas, coal, nuclear, and renewable resources, 2) energy demand, including energy use by sector and conservation efforts to use energy resources more efficiently, and 3) environmental impacts from energy use.

MPS 577 | ENVIRONMENTAL CONFLICTS AND MEDIATED SOLUTIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course evaluates a variety of common environmental problems that communities experience. Environmental problems often escalate into polarized conflicts that can stall or prevent necessary projects. Environmental problems can result in what has been described as the siting of locally unwanted landuses (LULUs), or not in my back-yard syndrome (NIMBY) projects. Specifically, mediated approaches to solutions are explored from the literature as well as real-world cases regarding a variety of environmental conflicts. The factors that contribute to the challenges in solving environmental policy conflicts are analyzed such as risk adversity, public participation, the role of science and technology, and the socioeconomic disparity among the community and the policy makers. This course involves a series of simulated role-playing games where students get to portray different interests in an environmental conflict to better understand how solutions can be reached. Concepts such as the best alternative to a negotiated agreement and other consensus-building techniques are built into the simulations for students to practice the implementation of the mediated solutions for environmental conflicts. This course includes both domestic environmental projects as well as international treaty and agreement negotiations. This course may include a Global Learning Experience where students from other countries will participate in the simulated games.

MPS 578 | URBAN RESILIENCE AND CLIMATE ADAPTATION POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

With more than half the global population living in cities and climate models projecting significant global warming over the next decades, local officials will be at the forefront of adapting to new climatic realities. This course looks specifically at municipal policies adopted to address climate adaptation and responses to other environmental and health stressors such as global pandemics. The course takes a global view, exploring policies from both the Global North and Global South as well as international networks of policy diffusion that facilitate cooperation between urban policymakers around the world.

MPS 579 | SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT POLICY AND INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTIONS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

In 2015 the member states of the United Nations adopted 17 Sustainable Development Goals to guide the nations of the world in an effort to end poverty, protect the planet from environmental hazards, and enhance the social condition for the Earth's inhabitants. This course looks at the role of international institutions in helping national governments attempt to achieve these goals. A particular focus is placed on the policy efficacy of important international agreements such as the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change.

MPS 583 | RESEARCH METHODS FOR PUBLIC SERVICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the principles underlying scientific research and how these principles apply to policy design and evaluation. Students learn about research ethics, causality, sampling (both random and purposive), and collecting data through surveys, interviews, focus groups, and observation. Students learn applied research, including needs assessment, program theory and logic models, and process, outcomes, and impact evaluations. Students also develop the research proposal that they will carry out for their capstone project in MPS 593. MPS 533 or MPS 536 is a pre-requisite for this course.

(MPS 533 or MPS 536) is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 593 | INTEGRATIVE SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this capstone course students complete an action research project integrating applied research, theoretical frameworks, and professional practice.

MPS 583 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 594 | ETHICAL LEADERSHIP IN PUBLIC SERVICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides students with the framework for personal and professional ethical decision making applied in the context of diverse workplaces and international organizations. Through lectures on ethical theories, case studies in applied ethics, and specific assignments, students clarify their personal-professional values, assess their moral intelligence, and develop their ethical leadership integrity. Students will also study the ethics of organizations, including the formation of social norms, how they influence individual decisions, and how entire organizations can become more ethical.

(MPS 533 or MPS 536) is a prerequisite for this course.

MPS 597 | PUBLIC SERVICE FELLOWS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Elective available to students with MPS CGPA of 3.75 or greater. For MPS Fellows taking MPS 593, Integrated Seminar, or MPS 610, Internship Capstone, during the academic year, meets roughly every other week during winter and spring terms. Seminar includes distinguished academic and professional guest lectures and presentations of research by Fellows.

MPS 600 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4.00 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Individually supervised learning experience, usually involving extensive library research and writing. Variable credit.

MPS 601 | PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND INTERNSHIP | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Professional work experience under the guidance of an organizational site supervisor during one or more school terms. The Professional Internship usually involves application of skills in a non-profit, governmental or other public service organizational setting new to the student.

MPS 602 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

MPS 603 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to graduate students who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

MPS 604 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics vary each term. (May be taken more than once).

MPS 610 | INTERNSHIP - CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a graduate seminar internship-capstone course that consists of a professional work experience supervised by a site supervisor in a U.S. or international public, private or civil society sector organization. Students must complete an action research project integrating applied research, theoretical frameworks, and professional practice.

MPS 583 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 611 | MANAGEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL NGOS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines management skills and trends of international nongovernmental organizations. Through specific case studies in the fields of international public service, development and emergency, students learn current techniques to effectively manage projects, relations and operations of international non-governmental programs and development projects.

MPS 612 | INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides an overview of major theories and practice in international political economy. It includes critical analysis of international political economy such as growth theories, capital and labor flows, and transformation of regimes. Students develop analytical skills for professional interests and research purposes. Cross-listed with INT 402.

MPS 613 | COMPARATIVE PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Through comparative methods, this course examines cross-national social policy research and practices. Through case study analysis students learn about comparative welfare state research and reflect on major theoretical and methodological aspects of social policy. North American public policy approaches are compared and contrasted with European, Asian, African and Latin American policies on education, health care, housing, social security, labor market and other policy fields.

MPS 614 | INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This seminar introduces students to the contemporary international affairs of the United Nations and connected agencies, programs and organizations. Through conferences with high level UN representatives, students gain an inside view of this complex inter-governmental organization in its operations for peace and security, poverty reduction and development, human rights and humanitarian affairs and international relations and international law.

MPS 615 | MANAGEMENT OF INTERCULTURAL DIVERSITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides the necessary conceptual foundation and practical skills for leading, managing and communicating in a cross-cultural and diverse working environment. Students learn intercultural competency through applications and examples on international relations and human resource management.

MPS 616 | INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND CONFLICT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course focuses on theoretical foundations and practical implications of diplomacy, negotiation, mediation and peace-building to solve and prevent conflicts. It offers reflective practices and concrete directions for creating constructive solutions to interpersonal, inter-group, and international conflict. Cross-listed with FMS 404.

MPS 617 | ECONOMICS OF THE EUROPEAN UNION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This advanced course builds on INT 402 or MPS 612 by applying contemporary theories of political economy to topics that reflect current concerns..

INT 402 or MPS 612 is a prerequisite for this class.

MPS 618 | MIGRATION AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the integral role that different processes of mobility play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, demographic, economic, and political variables. Students also look at the role of state and non-state actors and organizations. Cross-listed with INT 404.

MPS 619 | INTERNATIONAL LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course offers students the opportunity to engage in an examination of recent developments in international treaties, legal process and international organization. Topics may include refugees, trade law, criminal law and the establishment of the international criminal court, international labor law, environmental law, theories of international law, human rights and the relationship between international law and local economic development. Cross-listed with INT 410.

Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM)

STEM 230 | INTRODUCTION TO EARTH AND SPACE SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an overview of the dynamic geological nature of Earth, its place in the solar system and universe, and the fundamental Earth-sky-human relationship. The format of the course is lecture, discussion, laboratory activities, and student group presentations. The course content is aligned with the Illinois Earth and Space Science Content Area Standards for educators and thus also meets the needs of secondary education majors wishing to pass the Illinois state exam for certification in earth and space science. LSP 120 or HON 180 is recommended. Formerly SDV 230.

STEM 231 | INTRODUCTION TO EARTH AND SPACE SCIENCE (WITHOUT LAB) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an overview of the dynamic geological nature of Earth, its place in the solar system and universe, and the fundamental Earth-sky-human relationship. Students will develop an understanding of 1) the processes that shape Earth's surface and interior over geologic time, 2) the formation, evolution, and physical properties of the sun and its planets, asteroids, and comets, 3) the physical basis for phenomena such as eclipses, phases, and seasons, 4) the formation, evolution, and properties of stars, galaxies, and the universe, 5) the historical progression of human understanding of Earth's geologic history and its place in space and time, and 6) the associated technologies that have enabled this progression. Students will encounter several historical examples that illustrate the provisional nature of science and the interaction of experiment, observation, and theory. The format of the course is lectures, discussions, laboratory activities, and student group presentations. Formerly SDV 231.

STEM 240 | SCIENCE AT THE EDGE OF SPACE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Earth's atmosphere and near-space environment play an increasingly important role in our lives in areas such as global warming, ozone depletion, and telecommunications. The upper atmosphere is also a starting point for human exploration of space beyond Earth. In addition to learning about Earth's upper atmosphere and beyond, students will build simple scientific experiments and launch them on a weather balloon to an altitude of 100,000 feet. Formerly SDV 240.

STEM 310 | SCIENTIFIC MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to mathematical models used in scientific work: discrete dynamical systems, continuous models, stochastic models, Markov chains, and compartment models. Course is example-driven, with models being implemented on the computer. MAT 151 recommended. Formerly SDV 310.

MAT 150 or MAT 120 and 121 are a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 360 | SCIENTIFIC DATA ANALYSIS I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Descriptive methods of data analysis, probability models, statistical inferential procedures including regression and analysis of variance, especially as it relates to scientific data arising from observations and experiments. Includes the use of one or more computer statistical analysis packages. MAT 150 recommended. Formerly SDV 360.

STEM 361 | SCIENTIFIC DATA ANALYSIS II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced statistical and data-mining methods with science-related case studies. Topics include multiple regression, logistic regression, decision trees, and naive Bayesian classification. STEM 360 recommended. Formerly SDV 361.

STEM 390 | SENIOR CAPSTONE I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students will examine a scientific issue with historical or public policy significance from multiple points of view, ethical, social, as well as scientific. The topic will necessarily be one in which the interpretation and visualization of data plays a significant role in framing debate. Students will work individually or in small groups to create projects featuring the interplay of quantitative and non-quantitative approaches. STEM 361 recommended. Formerly SDV 390.

STEM 391 | SENIOR CAPSTONE II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students work on a quarter-length project whose end product is either a detailed mathematical analysis or a visualization of several large scientific data sets. The project will integrate a few of the science topics done in SDV 390 with data analysis and visualization. Collaborations with researchers and organizations such as educational institutions and museums are especially encouraged.

STEM 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Formerly SDV 399. (variable credit)

STEM 405 | ECOLOGY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a broad survey of ecological principles through laboratory and field investigations appropriate in an urban setting. The course focus is on the use of local environments to promote awareness of and appreciation for the complexity, diversity and structure of the natural world while developing skills in hypothesis testing, experimental design and data analysis. Formerly SDV 405.

STEM 409 | MATHEMATICAL METHODS FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL SCIENCE TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course develops the mathematical methods that support the teaching of science at the middle school level: proportional reasoning, rates, exponents and scientific notation, graphing, and elementary modeling. The course incorporates the use of technology such as calculators and spreadsheets for scientific analysis.

STEM 410 | TOPICS FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Selected topics in science and science education. Formerly SDV 410. (variable credit)

STEM 411 | FOUNDATIONS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the nature of scientific inquiry, using a historical case study of the development of classical physics in the work of Copernicus, Brahe, Kepler, Galileo, and Newton. It explores the roles of observation, classification, experiments, theory, and mathematical models in science as well as the character of scientific change. Formerly SDV 411.

STEM 412 | FOUNDATIONS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Fundamental concepts of physics examined quantitatively: velocity, acceleration, surface area, volume, density. Elementary modeling for data analysis, including spreadsheets and data acquisition software. Scaling of physical quantities. Formerly SDV 412.

STEM 413 | LIGHT AND WAVES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Fundamentals of wave motion with application to light, water, and sound. Teachers are introduced to a variety of physical science topics in the curriculum as well as an example of the extraordinary unifying power of physics concepts such as waves. Formerly SDV 413.

STEM 420 | CHEMISTRY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The structure and composition of matter. Physical and chemical change, examined from conceptual viewpoints which include atomic theory, stoichiometry, periodicity, bonding, equilibrium, thermodynamics and kinetics. Formerly SDV 420.

STEM 421 | CELL BIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the chemical and cellular nature of living organisms, cell structure and function, and heredity. Enzymes, the movement of materials across membranes, photosynthesis, respiration, cell division, and basic genetics. Formerly SDV 421.

STEM 422 | EVOLUTION AND DIVERSITY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the subjects of biological evolution and species diversity. Topics covered include the history of our understandings of the origin and nature of species, mechanisms that produce evolutionary change, geographic variation and speciation, current theories and evidence of life's origin and the history of life on earth. Controversies in biological evolution, both scientific and cultural will be discussed. Formerly SDV 422.

STEM 423 | PLANT AND ANIMAL BIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the structure and function of living organisms. Students will investigate how different organisms solve common problems of food acquisition, digestion and the distribution of nutrients, waste removal, gas exchange, maintenance of homeostasis and reproduction. While this course examines the diversity of living forms, there is a special emphasis on the structure and function of the human body. Formerly SDV 423.

STEM 425 | TOPICS IN LIFE SCIENCES FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Diverse topics in Life Sciences appropriate for middle school and high school students.

STEM 430 | ASTROBIOLOGY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Astrobiology focuses on basic questions such as: How does life of any kind begin and develop? Does life exist elsewhere in the universe? What are the environmental limits for life? What is the future of life on the earth and beyond? The course reviews the origin and evolution of life on Earth and goes on to examine the prospects of habitats capable of supporting life in our solar system, and the potential for planets and life to exist orbiting other stars. Students will work with NASA remote sensing data of the earth, the other planets, and their moons. Formerly SDV 430.

STEM 431 | ASTRONOMY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course emphasizes astronomy particularly relevant to the middle school science curriculum. The structure of the solar system, motion of the sun, phases of the moon, familiarity with the night sky, stellar structure and evolution, galaxies, and introduction to cosmology. Students will be familiarized with student reading materials particularly appropriate for the combined teaching of science and reading. Students will make observations and use sky simulation software. Formerly SDV 431.

STEM 432 | GEOLOGY AND PLANETARY SCIENCE FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Planetary formation and evolution. Plate tectonics and the rock cycle, including volcanism, planetary interiors, weathering, sedimentation, and metamorphism. Formerly SDV 432.

STEM 440 | HEAT AND ENERGY FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Concept of energy, its nature, forms, and transfer with applications to physical science and earth science. Definition of energy in terms of work, potential and kinetic energy, conservation of energy, thermal energy, solar energy, energy in earth systems. Formerly SDV 440.

STEM 441 | WEATHER AND CLIMATE FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Basic physical and chemical processes that shape weather and climate. Solar radiation and the seasons, composition and structure of the atmosphere, atmospheric processes, human effects, historical and contemporary climate change. This course emphasizes quantitative methods. Formerly SDV 441.

STEM 442 | ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE FOR TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A general introduction to the scientific background of some of the most important environmental problems facing urban areas, the nation and the world. Population dynamics, water and energy resources, ecosystem degradation, extinction and the loss of biodiversity, and climate change. The course will include a field observation and experiment.

STEM 461 | NUMBERS AND OPERATIONS FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the first of a three course sequence that develops teachers' conceptual understanding of whole numbers, integers, rational numbers, and real numbers in order for the teachers to take on the role of being a math teaching specialist in their school. The courses emphasize problem solving, cognitive demand, equitable access, and the development of student agency. Topics of the first quarter include whole numbers, the laws of arithmetic, place value, models for multiplication, models for division (inverse multiplication model, measurement model, and partitive model).

STEM 462 | NUMBERS AND OPERATIONS FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the second of a three course sequence that develops teachers' conceptual understanding of whole numbers, integers, rational numbers, and real numbers in order for the teachers to take on the role of being a math teaching specialist in their school. The courses emphasize problem solving, cognitive demand, equitable access, and the development of student agency. Topics include rational numbers, different models for fractions including part-to-part, part-to-whole, and area, operations with fractions.

STEM 461 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 463 | NUMBERS AND OPERATIONS FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS III | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the third of a three course sequence that develops teachers' conceptual understanding of whole numbers, integers, rational numbers, and real numbers in order for the teachers to take on the role of being a math teaching specialist in their school. The courses emphasize problem solving, cognitive demand, equitable access, and the development of student agency. Topics include factors and multiples of whole numbers, greatest common divisor and least common multiple of whole numbers, prime factorization, decimal representations of fractions, use of ratios and proportions to represent and analyze quantitative relationships, percentages and scaling.

STEM 462 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 464 | GEOMETRY FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course launches a two course sequence that develops teachers' conceptual understanding of geometry in order for the teachers to take on the role of being a math teaching specialist in their school. Teachers will gain fluency with geometric terms and concepts and think strategically about geometric problem solving. Topics include the foundations of geometry, and its system of definitions, axioms, and basic theorems; the classification of shapes; transformations of the plane, including reflections, rotations, and translations.

STEM 465 | GEOMETRY FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is the second of a two course sequence that develops teachers' conceptual understanding of geometry in order for the teachers to take on the role of being a math teaching specialist in their school. Teachers will gain fluency with geometric terms and concepts and think strategically about geometric problem solving. Topics include geometric measurement and its applications, including length, perimeter, and area; transformations of the plane including dilations and similitudes; the Pythagorean Theorem.

STEM 464 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 466 | INTEGRATING NUMBER AND OPERATIONS AND ALGEBRA FOR ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS TEACHERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course draws on the context and examples from previous courses in number and operations and geometry to develop teachers' understanding of algebraic reasoning. Topics include generalizing and analyzing patterns, creating and interpreting expressions and equations using variables, and solving real world problems that model continuous situations.

STEM 463 and STEM 464, or instructor permission, are prerequisites for this class.

STEM 467 | LEADERSHIP IN ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course develops the aptitudes and leadership skills required for elementary school mathematics teachers to act as math teaching specialists in their school. The course emphasizes advocating for high-quality mathematics instruction, enhancing collaboration in mathematics within and across grade levels, and supporting professional learning in high-quality mathematics instruction.

At least three courses from the following list are prerequisites for this class: STEM 461, STEM 462, STEM 463, STEM 464, STEM 465, STEM 466.

STEM 481 | ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL MATH TEACHERS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first of a three course sequence that provides teachers with a deep, conceptual understanding of the first year of secondary level Algebra to prepare them to teach secondary level Algebra to middle school students. These courses heavily emphasize problem solving and integrate pedagogical content knowledge and research on student preconceptions and growth. The first quarter's topics include: variables, expressions, identities, the Distributive Law and its consequences, the nature of solving equations, equivalent equations, solving of linear equations and inequalities, slope and rate of change, equations of lines, parallel and perpendicular lines.

STEM 482 | ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL MATH TEACHERS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the second of a three course sequence that provides teachers with a deep, conceptual understanding of the first year of secondary level Algebra to prepare them to teach secondary level Algebra to middle school students. These courses heavily emphasize problem solving and integrate pedagogical content knowledge and research on student preconceptions and growth. The second quarter's topics include: definition of a mathematical function, domains of functions, graphs of functions, piecewise defined functions, systems of linear equations, exponential functions, function transformations, absolute value inequalities, and systems of inequalities in the plane.

STEM 481 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 483 | ALGEBRA FOR MIDDLE SCHOOL MATH TEACHERS III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is the first of a three course sequence that provides teachers with a deep, conceptual understanding of the first year of secondary level Algebra to prepare them to teach secondary level Algebra to middle school students. These courses heavily emphasize problem solving and integrate pedagogical content knowledge and research on student preconceptions and growth. The third quarter's topics include: polynomial functions, the graphs of polynomial functions including their end behavior, quadratic functions, vertex form for quadratic functions, quadratic equations, arithmetic and geometric sequences.

STEM 482 (or instructor permission) is a prerequisite for this class.

STEM 490 | SCIENCE TEACHING CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Teachers will further examine current research on how students at the middle school level learn science concepts and conduct an action research project involving science teaching. STEM 405, STEM 412, STEM 413 and six content courses recommended. Formerly SDV 490.

STEM 698 | TOPICS FOR MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE TEACHERS | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Diverse topics in teaching and learning of mathematics and science. These courses are designed for current and future teachers. (variable credit)

STEM 699 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Formerly SDV 699. (variable credit)

Scientific World (SW)

SW 152 | STRESS REDUCTION USING HUMOR AND SPIRITUALITY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Stress affects the body in dramatic ways, and is a major contributing factor in chronic and degenerative diseases. We will understand/describe the physiology and biochemistry of stress and, more importantly, apply effective methods to reduce and manage it. Effective stress reduction and burnout prevention then become important health, wellness, productivity and disease prevention strategies for individuals, schools, businesses, the medical industry and the culture. The effective stress reduction techniques include breathing, biofeedback, humor, spiritual exploration, connection and inspiration. The holistic paradigm of body, mind and spirit supports our informed search for meaning, connection, calm productivity and enhanced health. (2-4 quarter hours)

SW 153 | SCIENCE FOR CITIZENS | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students will learn basic knowledge of science as they engage in activities that are connected to their everyday life. They will explore their natural ecosystem and be able to describe various functions. They will engage in the scientific method through observations, hypotheses, data collection and basic data analysis. Students will apply their critical thinking based on the scientific method to local environmental or science related issues/events. (2-4 quarter hours)

SW 193 | SEXUAL ORIENTATION & SCIENCE | 2-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will engage you in scientific inquiry on the nature of sexual orientation. You will be challenged to master the scientific content of leading programs of research on twins, brain and other anatomical structures, hormones, genetic linkages, birth-order, and animal behavior through assigned readings, lectures, and multimedia resources. Moreover, you will also engage in the scientific process through a collaborative research project concerning an aspect of sexual orientation that leads you through the steps of stating a question, designing a study, collecting and analyzing data, and interpreting the results. You will also develop skills in identifying the limits to particular forms of scientific inquiry by recognizing the constraints of methods, sources of bias, reliability of results, and certainty of conclusions. This course will encourage you to place the modern research within ethical and social contexts in which to make judgments about the potential relevance and impacts of scientific knowledge about sexual orientation.

SW 201 | DATA ANALYTICS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed as an introduction to fundamental techniques of data analytics and the various fields, such as various business and decision sciences (accountancy, economics, finance, marketing, management, operations, and healthcare), which use data to gain insights and make informed decisions. In this course students will learn various analytical tools and demonstrate their ability to execute, understand, present, and discuss analytical results. Thus, building a strong foundation in supporting data-driven decision making in various fields of interest. Major topics include the applications of logical and financial functions; data visualization and manipulation, and what-if analysis. (2-4 credit hours)

Management Information Systems majors and minors are restricted from registering for this section.

SW 208 | ISSUES IN SCIENCE AND RELIGION | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course develops students' understandings of the scientific and religious constructions of self in the modern world (natural and social). The institutions and bodies of knowledge comprising science, religion, and their overlap are critically analyzed. Key historic debates are examined, for example: the Vatican's trial of Galileo for his teachings of a heliocentric universe; the controversial reception of Darwin's theory of evolution; and the 2001 U.S. policy on embryonic stem cell research. Through such analyses, the course develops students' skills in making ethically-informed decisions and thus recognizing their roles in the public debates involving the intersection of science and religion.

SW 217 | UNDERSTANDING AND MEASURING INTELLIGENCE | 2-4
quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students examine intelligence testing and its uses in employee selection and placement. Students learn the principles of assessing human traits (reliability, validity, bias and other systematic errors), and apply them to intelligence testing. We will work to define "intelligence" and consider various approaches to intelligence, contrasting the theories of unitary vs. multiple intelligences. Students will examine the implications of the definitions and measurement approaches on different groups of people, both historically and currently, with attention to the unintended effects of the biases of test developers and the ethical implications of different approaches and uses of intelligence testing.

SW 219 | NEUROPLASTICITY AND THE AGING BRAIN | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, we will examine the latest research on the aging process and, specifically, its relationship to the brain. We will cover a mix of material from psychological and, especially, neuroscientific fields. Students will also be introduced to the field of neuroplasticity, which is revolutionizing the way we understand the functioning power of the brain. Neuroplasticity, in simple terms, is the brain's ability to rearrange its connections and, therefore, its functions based on experiences. In other words, the brain has the capacity to literally change itself, based on experiences, to achieve positive results. The goals of this course are to understand how the brain works, examine its impact on our daily actions, study how aging impacts brain functioning, discover the learning and adjustment potential of the brain, and apply the principles of the 3 P's. We will use numerous examples to understand the brain, including health, work, relational, and personal settings. Students will ultimately answer the question of whether they will have an aging or reengaging brain.

SW 232 | APPLIED INFORMATION MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the key concepts in the field of Management Information Systems (MIS) and enhances understanding of the issues that business organizations face when developing and managing information systems. In this course, students will be presented with a broad overview of the field to first examine the increasing impact of information technology in business organizations, and second, in preparation for more advanced courses in data analytics and information systems. Specifically, the three major topics covered include (1) e-businesses and networks, (2) databases, as well as (3) enterprise resource planning (ERP) and process models. These topics are designed to prepare students for further inquiry on web analytics, data mining, project management, supply chain management, as well as business in general. By completing the course, students should be better equipped to apply IT skills to solve business problems, to participate in IT projects, and to communicate more knowledgeably with IT professionals. (2 quarter hours)

SW 244 | STATISTICAL REASONING: UNDERSTANDING AND USING
STATISTICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will teach students the basic concepts of statistics. Students will investigate topics including descriptive statistics, correlation, normal distributions, probability, sampling distributions and hypothesis testing. By the end of this course, students will be able to complete a statistical analysis of datasets using Microsoft Excel as the primary tool. Considerable time will also be devoted to discussing how statistics are used and abused.

SW 250 | SOCIAL MEDIA MARKETING FUNDAMENTALS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide students with an overview of the history of the Internet and basic marketing strategies as they relate to the Internet and Web 2.0 technologies. Students will learn about how to keep abreast of new technology, how these technologies can be used to market services and products as well as how they can be used to create and maintain social networks for professional use.

SW 256 | EVERYDAY ECOLOGY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Every week, we learn of typhoons and landslides, floods and hurricanes, droughts and other natural catastrophes. Scientists now agree that the major cause of climate shift is man-made, specifically our use and abuse of global energy resources. In Everyday Ecology we will analyze our energy use patterns and explore practical alternatives. The word "ecology" originates from the meshing of two Greek words meaning the "study of homes." Although the main focus of this course is the individual household, another "household" we must take into account is the economy. Ecological economics examines how both disciplines need to look toward the other to be viable long term. We will examine options to bring the earth household (ecology) and the human household (economy) together for the benefit of both. This course observes how "man" is connected to the world around him. It allows us to see our options in response to growing concern over global climate change. Through readings, field trips, activities, discussions and an analysis of our personal use of energy, this course enables us to become increasingly aware of ecological issues. You will learn to evaluate the effect of personal choices on the earth and be introduced to alternative, "greener" options.

SW 259 | PREHISTORIC LIFE | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course promotes students' investigation of fossils to interpret the character of 3.5 billion years of biological evolution and ecological change on earth. By way of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and applicable technologies, emphasis is on the exploration of earliest evidence of life, development of multi-celled plants and animals, dinosaur evolution, mass extinction events, mammal diversification, human origins as well as appraisal of the societal reliance on fossil resources and the persistent debate over evolution versus creation. Learning is assessed through labs, a fieldtrip, an exam, video summaries, contributions to online discussions, and a research paper in a scientific format.

SW 267 | NUTRITION FOR A LIFETIME | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Today's consumers want and need to be educated about taking charge of their own health. With the current fast-paced world that has spilled over into our eating habits, food choices have become unlimited. Choosing a healthful approach to diet requires basic information about our bodies' nutritional needs. The greater our understanding of our basic bodily needs, the better we are able to make choices concerning our health. This course will offer an overview of the basic science of nutrition, with an emphasis on the relationship between disease and nutrition, and current research findings.

SW 269 | ENERGY AND HEALTH | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will provide a framework for understanding human energy systems, such as digestion and respiration, in relation to current healthcare practices to enhance their effectiveness (dietary approach, manipulation therapies, acupuncture, exercise, and meditation). We will consider connections between social and environmental variables such as constitution, stress, lifestyle, and vital physiological functions. Each class will build on the basic understanding of biological systems in relation to energy through lecture and discussion. We will review literature on various healthcare practices to discern sound approaches and practical applications. Students will cultivate an appreciation for daily health choices that cumulatively affect their health.

SW 275 | BODY, MIND, SPIRIT: YOGA AND MEDITATION | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Why are 20 million Americans practicing yoga? This course answers that question with an introduction to yoga and meditation techniques and the underlying scientific and philosophical principles of the system of yoga. The first half of each class will be experiential, conducted as a yoga and meditation class for beginners, providing tools to reduce stress, focus the mind, and cultivate inner peace. This first hour and a half will use yoga postures, breathing exercises, and meditation techniques. The second half of each class will use readings, reflection, and discussion to examine the scientific and philosophical knowledge of yoga as a way to ease stress, strengthen the bone and muscle structures, lower blood pressure, increase flexibility and strength, improve mind functioning, and provide spiritual sustenance. We will read Yoga Mind Body and Spirit: A Return to Wholeness by Donna Farhi, and The Yoga Sutras of Patanjali, research articles on the scientific studies of yoga's benefits from journals and websites, etc. Students will keep weekly reflection journal observations on the changes(s) they notice in themselves. This course will refresh, relax, rejuvenate. Yoga mats and other props will be provided. Bring/ wear comfortable clothes (no jeans, belts, dresses). This is a Gentle Yoga class for beginners. Yoga means to unite or yoke so course will explore the ways to unite body, mind, spirit. This course is designed to 1) help establish good health and well-being; 2) gain scientific knowledge and understanding of the various systems of the human body; and 3) explore the spiritual benefits of meditation.

SW 285 | ENVIRONMENTAL ETHICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course contains two distinct strands of learning: (1) the current condition of the natural world and the ways it is approached scientifically; and (2) the major premises of the most significant ethical frameworks in use today. Using this knowledge, students investigate several contemporary environmental problems, identifying their underlying causes, and analyzing various proposed solutions. This is complemented by the intensive study of major ethical perspectives, particularly those which have developed alongside, and as a consequence of, grave environmental concerns. The course project is a collaborative endeavor to integrate the knowledge and skills acquired through mastery of both learning strands.

SW 292 | EXPLORING EARTH'S PHYSICAL FEATURES | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course advances student exploration of earth's 4.5 billion year geologic record in order to evaluate the planet's evolution and the interrelationships between humans and landforms. Through the application of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and prevailing technologies used by geologists, emphasis is on plate tectonics, geologic time, the rock cycle, weathering, earthquakes, fluvial features, rock structures, volcanoes, mountains, plateaus, plains, glacial features, deserts, caves, and coasts. Students also assess human reliance on landforms, the economics of landforms, and cases of earth pseudoscience. Learning is assessed through labs, fieldtrips, a scientifically-formatted research paper, an exam, and contributions to online discussions.

SW 320 | TECHNOLOGY, CRIME, AND CIVIC ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The focus of this course is the well-functioning civic community, and its reliance on the productive engagement of its members (group and individual). We examine crime in the age of the internet, and use models of civic engagement to posit novel solutions to these "hidden" and ubiquitous activities.

SW 328 | GLOBAL INFECTIOUS DISEASES AND HEALTH | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course we will learn about the global burden of disease with an emphasis on understanding the critical intersection of policy, social expectations in determining how health systems function and adapt to address new challenges; and examine why some health systems are so fragile in the face of new disease challenges such as the Covid-19 pandemic. We will look at the role of globalization in introducing "western world" diseases to low and middle income countries, and we will learn about the science-based methods and tools we have to track the emergence of new disease threats, assess global disease burden, understand disease mitigation strategies, and compare our ability to measure improvements in health outcomes in well-resourced and resource-poor countries. Online learning will include readings, slide presentations, discussions, and open-source epidemiological tools to examine disease burden and trends.

SW 329 | DATABASE DEVELOPMENT FOR MANAGING INFORMATION | 2-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Using MS Office tools suite (in particular Access), this course takes students through the entire process for building a database system that will be used to capture, store and present information. In addition to database concepts like designs, reports and SQL queries, the students will discuss and analyze relationships between technology and society.

SW 332 | BIODIVERSITY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The science of Biodiversity is the study of life on earth, both past and present. It involves the exploration and measurement of the amount of genetic, species, and ecological variation on earth and is emerging as one humanity's most important and urgent endeavors. Scientific efforts to study earth's biodiversity have intensified because of our growing appreciation of the role human population growth and urbanization play in accelerating the extinction of plant and animal species. This course introduces students to the nature of science and the central issues concerning life on earth including: the current state of biodiversity, valuing life's variations, human dependence on biological diversity, the origin and extinction of species, mass extinction, critical habitats at risk, and policies and approaches to conserve biodiversity (2-4 hours)

SW 354 | DATA DRIVEN DECISIONS | 2-6 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides different topics including approaches to problem solving, an introduction to data analysis and its role in business decisions, how to manage the future value of money, basic concepts in statistics and probability and how they are applied in everyday settings. Students will have great opportunity to explore and use Excel application as a tool for solving business problems. As a group, we will investigate topics in descriptive statistics, correlation, normal distributions, probability, sampling distributions and hypothesis testing. Students will learn various advanced graphing and charting techniques available in Excel and use them for data analysis and interpretation.

SW 356 | DATABASE DESIGN AND IMPLEMENTATION FOR SMALL BUSINESS APPLICATIONS | 2-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will teach non-computer literate persons to be able to translate a business problem into a conceptual database design, and further to convert the design into a database application using Microsoft Access. By the end of the course, the student should be able to apply knowledge to the following: (1) describing basic database concepts and using common database terminologies; (2) designing databases using appropriate designing notations; (3) translating a schema into a database application in Access; (4) conducting simple user-interface design; and (5) designing small business-based applications.

SW 366 | EXPRESSIVE ARTS THERAPY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course offers a multi-arts approach in which different art modalities are woven into the therapeutic process as appropriate to a client's situation. It is grounded not in any particular techniques or media but in the capacity of the arts to respond to human suffering. Various arts--poetry, movement, drawing, painting, journaling, improvisation, music, and sculpture--are used in a supportive setting to facilitate growth and healing. Expressive arts processes have been used successfully in almost all psychotherapeutic contexts, ranging from work with the severely ill to the facilitation of human growth and potential. There is a growing use of the arts in health education, hospice work, and in community art projects especially after catastrophic events. The class will be conducted in a workshop format in which theoretical content will be combined with experiential learning. Lecture, discussion, audio-visual presentation, experiential exercise, guest speakers, and field trips comprise the structure of the class.

SW 367 | LEISURE, RECREATION, AND HEALTH | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will stimulate your thinking about the meaning of leisure in your life. Leisure today and historically has been central to the human experience. It is an elemental experience, essential to the total well-being of every person; it is a reflection and expression of the cultural values of a society; it is an important vehicle for treatment. Leisure and recreation services are also essential for healthy communities in terms of social climate, environmental quality, and economic stability. Leisure services comprise one of the largest and fastest growing industries in the world, whether measured in dollars spent, persons served, hours of time devoted, or resources used. The study of leisure and recreation is a broad discipline, combining diverse fields of study and professional practice. This course will (1) illustrate the importance of leisure to you and your loved ones, (2) contribute to your ability to become an informed consumer of leisure, (3) question the binary relationship of work and leisure and, (4) teach you how to use leisure to increase emotional and physical health, resulting in a higher quality of life. The course will be interactive and participatory.

SW 371 | DINOSAURS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Dinosaurs are one of the most diverse and successful groups of vertebrates in earth's history. Originating over 220 million years ago, they dominated earth's land biomes for over 150 million years and diversified to include the largest land animals in earth's history, a wide range of aquatic groups, and even a diverse clade capable of flight (the birds). Consequently, mammals remained in the background as small nocturnal creatures during the dinosaurs' long reign. Only after a cataclysmic extinction event 65 million years ago involving most dinosaur groups did the mammals diversify into modern groups including our own primate lineage. This course will introduce students to the remarkable dinosaurs, tracking their origin, surveying their success, and evaluating their decline. Learning will emphasize investigation of the forms, function, and variation within the major dinosaur groups as well as the connections of dinosaur evolution to diverse factors such as climate change, ecology, biological competition, and mass extinction. The course learning activities will encompass discussions, readings, lectures, labs, internet resources, museum resources and original inquiry.

SCPS Degree Completion Major (DCM)

DCM 301 | EFFECTIVE LEADERSHIP IN A CHANGING PROFESSIONAL ENVIRONMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this leadership course, students will use readings, behavior/trait surveys, and case studies to understand leadership theories and models. Participants will learn to create, establish, and reinforce cultural rules of engagement designed to increase communication effectiveness and get the most out of the current human dynamic in their respective environments. Understanding these various leadership models allows students to reflect on their own style in today's culturally changing environments. (online) (4 credit hours)

DCM 302 | PROJECT MANAGEMENT: DESIGN AND ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Project Management is an important discipline that can benefit students in their careers as well as personal life. This course will explore project management methodologies, their common steps and tools. The course translates Project Management theory into a practical and effective methodology, starting with working definitions of Project and Project Management, the course examines project initiation, evaluation and organization using analytic techniques such as discounted cash flow and PERT/CPM. In addition, the course examines project execution and control, along with the documentation and communications skills needed to keep a project on track. The course concludes with an overview of project management applied to computer information systems development. (4 quarter hours)

DCM 303 | LEADERSHIP MODELS FOR STRONG ORGANIZATIONS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to explore the research, practices, purposes and scope of leadership as a tool to develop leadership skills that will influence and inspire others. Both individual and organizational aspects will be presented and will include such areas as behaviors, ethics, communications, cultures and current practices. Emphasis will be on application of leadership theories and skill building through self-assessment exercises and cases. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 304 | EVOLVING PROFESSIONAL ETHICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Evolving Professional Ethics analyzes and weighs ethical issues in the professions in relationship to pressing values of social responsibility and quality of life seen through lenses of moral philosophers and incisive thinkers. It places business ethics and moral philosophy in juxtaposition. In a time of tumultuous choices, the pursuit of self interest is questioned in the light of changing, evolving awareness of values in humanity, community, environment, including race and gender, as they influence business context and holistic awareness of professional ethics. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 307 | ANALYZING HUMAN BEHAVIOR | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores links between the physical environment and social behavior. Students will observe a public social environment and gather data for analysis. The ethics of social research and the observer's interaction with the environment are key points of inquiry. Connections will be made between skills developed in the field and various managerial and strategic outcomes of contemporary workplaces, focusing on the interplay between expectations and actual behavior. Identification of implications for employee motivation, productivity and job satisfaction are examined. Students develop the ability to analyze social groups and their physical surroundings.

DCM 308 | INTRODUCTION TO STATISTICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will teach students the basic concepts of statistics. As a group, we will investigate topics in descriptive statistics, correlation, normal distributions, probability, sampling distributions and hypothesis testing. By the end of this course, students will be able to complete a statistical analysis of datasets using Microsoft Excel as the primary tool. We will also devote considerable time to discussing how statistics are used and abused. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 312 | ADVANCED LEADERSHIP THEORY & PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course students will be strengthen their knowledge and skills in leadership theories and examine successful applications in public, private, and non-governmental organizations. Students will examine classic and current scholarship to bridge between theory and practice. Emphasis is placed on understanding the efficacy of the theories in the context of implementation in a global business environment.

DCM 314 | LEARNING AND TRANSFORMATION | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Building on last quarter's seminar, students will look closely at the notion of transformative learning. Additionally, using learning style inventories, they will reflect on ways to exercise various learning styles in their work, and capitalize on their strengths. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 315 | EXPLORING THE FIELD | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students will work on professional goal setting and action plans by conducting research on their chosen field, exploring trends, ethical issues, controversies, best preparation strategies, and other salient matters. In addition, the concept of "good work" and what that means for one's own career will be debated and discussed. (2-4 quarter hours)

A major in Leadership Studies, Applied Behavioral Sciences or Professional Communication is a prerequisite for this class.

DCM 316 | WORK IN A GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Globalization of the world's economy has dramatically changed the interactions of people from different cultures. As a result, the importance of understanding cultural difference has increased significantly. This seminar will introduce students to the challenges and opportunities associated with living, working and learning in a global environment. This will be done through discussion, reading, case studies, films and exercises to increase cultural self awareness as well as cross-cultural sensitivity. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 317 | ETHICS IN THE PROFESSIONS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students will explore various approaches to determining right, morally acceptable, behavior. Epistemology and several ethical frameworks will be examined. Students will write, discuss, and debate case studies from their workplaces or field. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 318 | SOCIAL JUSTICE IN THE PROFESSIONS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Students will look at the nature of social justice, creating a working definition of the widely used term. Readings will guide examination of issues of social justice in students' fields or disciplines. (2 quarter hours)

DCM 319 | CREATIVITY AND INNOVATIVE THINKING | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Connections among such varied disciplines as physics, politics, and poetry will be examined and investigated within students' own discipline/profession. Using a variety of approaches to integrative and innovative thinking, students will explore interconnectedness, expanding possibilities, creativity, and decision-making. (2 quarter hours)

DCM 323 | THE PSYCHOLOGY OF AGING AND THE AGED | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an overview of the current theories, themes and issues of adult development and aging. In addition to understanding these theories and issues, students will explore questions such as: Does wisdom come with increasing age? Do people really change over time? What are the keys to positive aging? (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 324 | EFFECTIVE GROUP AND PERSONAL DYNAMICS | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course design unifies two levels of human behavior and motivation: group and personal. Processes leading to decision-making and other actions rest in articulable patterns on both corporate and individual dimensions. We seek, in this educational arena, to activate and analyze this set of motives and to apprehend, and perhaps predict, this bi-lateral source of human motivation. In so doing, the group-level patterns leading to appreciable action and those emanating from each individual will more easily be understood, and their root patterns put to beneficial use. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 325 | WORK & SOCIETY | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

We will consider work from the perspective of our needs and values, but also from the perspective of the needs of society. We will also consider the value that society assigns to different types of work (and the impact of that valuation on us as individuals and as members of various social groups). Other topics will include how work affects our family and social lives, the impact of modern values on how we view our work, and the role of technology in how we do our work and in how we view our work. (2-4 quarter hours)

DCM 327 | IN SEARCH OF LEADERSHIP LESSONS | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This Structured Independent Study provides an opportunity for personal reflection of lessons found in ancient literature. Examining leaders and leadership situations from these early writings, students will compare and contrast contemporary leadership approaches. Through reading, reflection, and written exercises students will uncover relationships and insights to their current leadership practices and situations. A variety of knowledge and ideas focused on acting ethically, thinking independently, listening closely, taking responsibility, and finding balance are among the tools that students will develop in this course. Close reading of Sophocles and Aeschylus will allow students to bring the works of these early thinkers to their current leadership situations. (2 quarter hours)

DCM 330 | PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATION IN THE WORKPLACE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an overview of the fundamentals of professional writing. Through engaging in and reflecting upon a variety of professional writing tasks, you will learn the rhetorical theory and practice necessary for effective written communication in professional contexts. (online) (4 credit hours)

DCM 390 | LEADERSHIP MODELS FOR STRONG ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to explore the research, practices, purposes and scope of leadership as a tool to develop leadership skills that will influence and inspire others. Both individual and organizational aspects will be presented and will include such areas as behaviors, ethics, communications, cultures and current practices. Emphasis will be on application of leadership theories and skill building through self-assessment exercises and cases.

SCPS Liberal Studies (SNC)

SNC 185 | THE BEATLES AND THE CREATIVE PROCESS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Beatles are significant in many ways: they were an unprecedented show business phenomenon; they were leaders of Sixties cultural rebellion; and they stand, for many, as a signal instance of popular entertainment attaining the status of high art. This course will examine the musical craftsmanship of the Beatles, focusing on their work as songwriters and record makers. Recent audio and print releases documenting the group's performing and recording history provide a unique and detailed glimpse of the Beatles' creative process. We will utilize these materials to closely trace the development of the group's work while using other resources to place it in a larger historical and cultural context. The goal is to shed critical light on this recent chapter in cultural history. That discussion will, in turn, highlight questions about creativity in a modern context where commerce vies with art, technology redefines performance and an emerging global village culture transforms concepts of originality and tradition. Arts and Literature.

SNC 186 | SPIRITUALITY AND HOMELESSNESS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the broad issue of homelessness by providing students the opportunity to reflect upon a service learning experience at a community-based organization that serves the homeless population in Chicago. Students will explore what can be learned about themselves as reflective practitioners, service learners, and spiritual human beings when reflecting upon this experiential learning process. Through the class discussions, assigned readings, invited speakers, and journal assignments, students will reflect on their own beliefs and perceptions of homelessness and analyze the history, causes, and policy associated with this societal problem. Junior Year Experiential Learning.

SNC 188 | PROBLEMS AND ISSUES IN CONTEMPORARY ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to moral philosophy with emphasis on the conflict between "moral relativism" (or "subjective" ethics) on the one hand and "moral realism" (or "objective" ethics) on the other. During the course you will be introduced to classic theories and leading figures in the history of ethics, from Plato and Aristotle to Kant and Nietzsche. Course content will focus on issues (e.g., poverty, drug use, capital punishment, sexual behavior, euthanasia, biomedical research, animal rights, political violence) at the center of contemporary ethical debate in the United States and throughout the world. Philosophical Inquiry.

SNC 190 | AFRICAN-AMERICAN STUDIES IN CRITICAL PERSPECTIVE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This interdisciplinary 19th and 20th century African-American studies course examines the role of protest and resistance, the media, and cultural and artistic expression in African-American history. Vis-a-vis readings, documentaries, and discussion, the course intends to illustrate the multiple ways in which African-Americans have protested and resisted oppression while examining how such efforts have been framed in the media during varying historical eras. It defines 'media' broadly and analyzes its role, both via its traditional forms (print, television and radio) but also vis-a-vis other forms of entertainment/infotainment that were particularly unique to 19th century U.S. society (i.e. minstrelsy [1830-1920]). The course concludes with a discussion of the role of art and culture in refashioning thinking and transforming experience. The latter discussion promises to be rich and thought provoking and unearths some of the works of the raw and revolutionary artists of the 1960s while taking a careful look at novel cultural practices that emerged during this period.

SNC 191 | ISSUES IN SCIENCE AND RELIGION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course develops students' understandings of the scientific and religious constructions of self in the modern world (natural and social). The institutions and bodies of knowledge comprising science, religion, and their overlap are critically analyzed. Key historic debates are examined, for example: the Vatican's trial of Galileo for his teachings of a heliocentric universe; the controversial reception of Darwin's theory of evolution; and the 2001 U.S. policy on embryonic stem cell research. Through such analyses, the course develops students' skills in making ethically-informed decisions and thus recognizing their roles in the public debates involving the intersection of science and religion. Self, Society and the Modern World.

SNC 192 | NEW ORLEANS IN SONG, STORY & STRUGGLE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The tapestry of New Orleans culture is tremendously rich and varied. This course will concentrate on two strands in that tapestry - music from New Orleans and fiction about it. Students will learn about music forms which originated in the city or its environs and which have gone on to dazzle the world, including jazz, r&b, zydeco and funk. We will situate these art forms in social, historical and political context and examine the complex processes of invention and adaptation which have shaped them; in that regard, we will particularly highlight the development of early jazz in this unique metropolis which, though residing at the tip of North America, has been called "the capitol of the Caribbean." We will make use of Thomas Brothers' pioneering study Louis Armstrong's New Orleans as well as musical performances by the likes of Professor Longhair, the Neville Brothers, Wynton Marsalis and Dr. John. We will also learn about the carnivalesque culture of New Orleans, a pursuit that will take us into what might be called the secret history of Mardi Gras. In addition, we will read two striking literary works by artists who have a background in and fascination with the crescent city: Kate Chopin's groundbreaking novella The Awakening and Tennessee Williams' spine-tingling one-act play Suddenly, Last Summer. Moreover, we will consider the role played by New Orleans in American history and imagination as well as the role played by images and fantasies of New Orleans in struggles for social justice at the local and national level. Arts and Literature.

SNC 193 | SEXUAL ORIENTATION & SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will engage you in scientific inquiry on the nature of sexual orientation. You will be challenged to master the scientific content of leading programs of research on twins, brain and other anatomical structures, hormones, genetic linkages, birth-order, and animal behavior through assigned readings, lectures, and multimedia resources. Moreover, you will also engage in the scientific process through a collaborative research project concerning an aspect of sexual orientation that leads you through the steps of stating a question, designing a study, collecting and analyzing data, and interpreting the results. You will also develop skills in identifying the limits to particular forms of scientific inquiry by recognizing the constraints of methods, sources of bias, reliability of results, and certainty of conclusions. This course will encourage you to place the modern research within ethical and social contexts in which to make judgments about the potential relevance and impacts of scientific knowledge about sexual orientation. Scientific Inquiry [SI].

MAT 120 is a prerequisite for this class.

SNC 197 | ANALYZING AUSTEN'S PRIDE AND PREJUDICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Jane Austen must have known something about universal truths. Her novel, Pride and Prejudice, which begins with the sentence quoted above, was first published in 1813. Still in print today, it has also been made into at least eleven movies, four of which were released since 2000, including a Mormon and a Bollywood version. In this class, we will read the novel in the context of the gender and class norms at the time Austen wrote her book and then consider how Austen's exploration of universal truths is reinterpreted in more contemporary film versions of this novel. In exploring Austen's creation and the many reinterpretations of her work, we will use both analytic and creative writing assignments as well as class discussion to examine how context informs creativity and how creativity informs analysis. You most definitely do not need to be a creative writer to take this class.

SNC 205 | RESISTANCE DURING THE HOLOCAUST AND WORLD WAR II | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course explores the history of the Holocaust in the context of the Second World War (1939-1945) with a central focus on examples of resistance to discrimination, fascism and oppression. We will explore varied forms of opposition including armed resistance, spiritual resistance, resistance through writing and identity preservation. We will read autobiographies, view documentary and dramatic films, and use museum resources to develop our understanding of resistance. Required activities include a visit to the Illinois Holocaust Museum and Education Center (Skokie, IL). We will also consider the implications of this history for making ethical choices in our world today.

SNC 206 | THE FIGHT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS: ONE WOMAN'S CRUSADE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Helen Prejean is a leading human rights activist in the United States. For the past 30 years, she has helped shape conversation about equal treatment for all within the criminal justice system, especially persons of color and the materially poor. Dead Man Walking, the eyewitness account of her experience accompanying condemned prisoners to execution, has had a major influence on discussion of violence, poverty, civil rights, criminal law, and social justice. In this course, we use her work and interact with her personally to study power inequities across race and class lines that perpetuate injustice and examine her strategies for reform.

SNC 209 | EXPLORING EARTH'S PHYSICAL FEATURES | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course advances student exploration of earth's 4.5 billion year geologic record in order to evaluate the planet's evolution and the interrelationships between humans and landforms. Through the application of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and prevailing technologies used by geologists, emphasis is on plate tectonics, geologic time, the rock cycle, weathering, earthquakes, fluvial features, rock structures, volcanoes, mountains, plateaus, plains, glacial features, deserts, caves, and coasts. Students also assess human reliance on landforms, the economics of landforms, and cases of earth pseudoscience. Learning is assessed through labs, fieldtrips, a scientifically-formatted research paper, an exam, and contributions to online discussions.

SNC 210 | PREHISTORIC LIFE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course promotes students' investigation of fossils to interpret the character of 3.5 billion years of biological evolution and ecological change on earth. By way of scientific reasoning, mathematical inference, and applicable technologies, emphasis is on the exploration of the earliest evidence of life, development of multi-celled plants and animals, dinosaur evolution, mass extinction events, mammal diversification, human origins as well as appraisal of the societal reliance on fossil resources and the persistent debate over evolution versus creation. Learning is assessed through labs, a fieldtrip, an exam, video summaries, contributions to online discussions, and a research paper in a scientific format.

SNC 216 | LEISURE, RECREATION AND HEALTH | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This course will stimulate your thinking about the meaning of leisure in your life. Leisure today and historically has been central to the human experience. It is an elemental experience, essential to the total well-being of every person; it is a reflection and expression of the cultural values of a society; it is an important vehicle for medical treatment. Leisure and recreation services are also essential for healthy communities in terms of social climate, environmental quality, and economic stability. Leisure services comprise one of the largest and fastest growing industries in the world, whether measured in dollars spent, persons served, hours of time devoted, or resources used. The study of leisure and recreation is a broad discipline, combining diverse fields of study and professional practice. This course will (1) illustrate the importance of leisure to you and your loved ones, (2) contribute to your ability to become an informed consumer of leisure, (3) question the binary relationship of work and leisure, (4) teach you how to use leisure to increase emotional and physical health, resulting in a higher quality of life and, (5) demonstrate social injustice related to leisure behavior and administration. The course will be interactive and.

SNC 221 | EVERYDAY EVIDENCE: HOW SCIENCE SHAPES DECISIONS IN EVERYDAY LIFE | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

This is a science course designed for those majoring in non-science disciplines. In this class we will explore the nature of scientific debate by using selected debates that are taking place in our society right now, from ideas about nature and nurture, scientific progress and genetically modified foods, to the more personal issues of our diet, exercise habits, COVID-19 risk assessment and medical care for our kids. The question facing us is how, in the great flood of information available to us, do we decide what is right for us? To answer this, we will examine the natural science behind each of these issues. What constitutes good evidence? How do scientists know what they know? Why does science seem to always be changing, and why is it so hard to get a scientist to just state the facts? Each weekly topic will be used as an example of how science shapes what we know, and how to distinguish good science from sketchy. We will also explore the role media play in shaping the public understanding of science. In addition to the weekly discussions, students will pick a topic of their own choosing to research and will write a short literature review of that topic as their final paper.

SNC 223 | ACTIVE CITIZENS: MAKING A DIFFERENCE IN THE COMMUNITY, WORKPLACE WORLD | 4 quarter hours

(Undergraduate)

Americans are known for active participation in organizations that strengthen our communities. We coach our kid's sports teams, take meals to members of our congregations, work for candidates that we believe in and join marches to support or oppose government action. With all these activities, we engage with other members of our community and workplace to make it better for ourselves and our families and to promote social justice. In this class, we will develop the knowledge and practice skills that enhance civic engagement and explore the role of citizens' voices in a democracy in the face of powerful political and economic interests. (For EL credit, students complete 25 hours of service in a Chicago community. Those unable to complete placement arranged by the Steans Center must submit partnership agreement with another organization by the end of the first week). (2-4 quarter hours)

SNC 225 | BIODIVERSITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The science of Biodiversity is the study of life on earth, both past and present. It involves the exploration and measurement of the amount of genetic, species, and ecological variation on earth and is emerging as one humanity's most important and urgent endeavors. Scientific efforts to study earth's biodiversity have intensified because of our growing appreciation of the role human population growth and urbanization play in accelerating the extinction of plant and animal species. This course introduces students to the nature of science and the central issues concerning life on earth including: the current state of biodiversity, valuing life's variations, human dependence on biological diversity, the origin and extinction of species, mass extinction, critical habitats at risk, and policies and approaches to conserve biodiversity.

SNC 227 | BRAVE NEW WORLD AND 1984: DIVERGING DYSTOPIAS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

On January 25, 2017, the New York Times published an article, "George Orwell's '1984' Is Suddenly a Bestseller," which reported that Orwell's classic novel had suddenly seen an enormous spike in sales, as had other dystopian novels, including Brave New World. Indeed, the adjective "Orwellian," a reference to the way language can be twisted into pretzel logic by the powers that be, has become a commonplace of contemporary discourse and, as anyone familiar with The Hunger Games can tell you, dystopian fiction has been big in young adult literature for a number of years. But Nineteen Eighty-Four and Brave New World stand, by a strong consensus, as the definitive dystopian novels of the last hundred-some years. This is at least in part due to the fact that both novels are so well written - such riveting pieces of literary art; but it is also due to the perceived prophetic power the novels seem to share, although each posits a different kind of grim future for humankind. This course will engage closely with these two masterworks (and related texts and subtopics) from the perspectives of artistic genre; fiction and social commentary; politico-historical context; and intertextuality.

SNC 230 | FRANCE AND THE SILVER SCREEN: MODERN HISTORY THROUGH FRENCH CINEMA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore central issues in the history of modern France through the lens of cinematic representations analyzed in historical context. Students will deepen their knowledge of the events and figures in French history and examine change and continuity in such phenomena as the rise of the politically-conscious urban working-class. We will also consider how French society has confronted gender difference and religious pluralism. This course also includes a focus on representations of war and militarism in film, particularly considering the rise of anti-militarist film in the aftermath of the First World War, and the role of violence in colonialism struggles in Algeria and Vietnam. This course will interpret the ways in which films portray historical events and how films contribute to public understanding of history. No prior knowledge of French language is required; all films will be in French with English subtitles.

SNC 231 | VISIBLE & INVISIBLE CITIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course looks at THE CITY through the lenses of four philosophical domains: ontology, epistemology, ethics and aesthetics. Through carefully curated short readings of the most important texts of classical, modern, and contemporary writers, students will be introduced to the big philosophical questions in these four domains as they apply to life in a great city.

SNC 233 | SLAVERY AND ABOLITION IN ILLINOIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will unpack the complex history of the presence of African-American chattel slavery in Illinois in the early nation, including slavery in the Illinois Territory, proslavery forces in the nineteenth century, antislavery activists who fought against slavery in Illinois, Illinois stops on the Underground Railroad, and some of the first free Black communities in the nation. Established in 1818, the free state of Illinois was even at one point on the brink of changing its constitution to become a slave state. Through an examination of published historical interpretations as well as public and private first-person narrative accounts, we will learn about the little-known history of slavery practices, indentured servitude, Black Codes, and kidnapping of free Blacks in Illinois history. We will also hear the voices of proslavery and antislavery proponents in this time, in their own words, and learn about key figures who led change.

SNC 235 | FRANCE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will examine the major events and themes of twentieth-century French history, engaging with critical issues of war and society, empire, gender, citizenship, immigration, and the politics of memory. Topics will include the impact of the First World War on the French state and society; the political radicalization of the interwar period; the emergence of anxieties surrounding gender roles; the fall of France in 1940 and subsequent German occupation, with a particular focus on the politics of collaboration and resistance; the impact of colonialism and decolonization; the strikes and protest movements of 1968; and debates over immigration and multiculturalism in the 1980s and 1990s, including the rise in popularity of the extreme right-wing National Front and the activism of second-generation French citizens of North African descent.

SNC 306 | TRAVEL AND LEARN IN BOSTON: EXPLORING ITS ARTS AND HISTORY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Boston is a city of many faces. It's a world class city from a cultural and educational perspective by any standard, but it competes with New York City and Philadelphia for the title of best place for American history and art. Boston has fame for the riches made by old money profits but also for its colorful mob history. With such internal paradoxes and external competitors, why choose a travel course to Boston? Here's why: In this domestic travel course, participants will walk the famous freedom train and other historic sites, visit Boston's famous art collections, and experience its diverse neighborhoods like Boston Common, Beacon Hill, and the North End. Issues such as Boston's immigrant populations, its fame as a seat of American higher education, its connection to events in American history, and its stake in the meaning of freedom and democracy will be discussed in the preparatory classes as well as in post travel learning as students work on individual projects. (4 quarter hours)

SNC 320 | MAMMALOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will introduce you to the origins, evolution, ecology, and biodiversity of the class Mammalia. Key topics will include mammalian paleobiology, anatomy, classification, genetics, reproduction, thermoregulation, locomotion, behavior, ecology, and conservation. Special emphasis will be on investigating the connections of mammalian evolutionary biology to human health issues including disease, nutrition, physical activity, injury, and overpopulation. Online learning will incorporate readings, discussions, a science kit for hands-on labs, virtual labs using 3D mammals, and computer simulations. Student will also undertake collaborative experimentation and onsite inquiry of mammals at a zoological park, museum, and/or nature reserve. Prerequisite: None.

Secondary Education (SEC)

SEC 309 | TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Prepares teacher-candidates for teaching mathematics at the middle school and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in teaching mathematics, methods of teaching secondary mathematics, and recent history in mathematics curriculum development. Emphasis on the development of alternative teaching strategies and the implementation of the NCTM Standards. Lesson and unit development, evaluation, and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 310 | TEACHING, HISTORY, AND SOCIAL SCIENCES IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Prepares teacher-candidates for teaching history and social sciences at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines the nature and purpose of history and social sciences curriculum within secondary schools, the current status of social studies materials and practices, and issues confronting today's secondary social studies teachers. Emphasis on alternative teaching strategies, resources for teaching and learning, teachers' responsibilities in curriculum development and decision making, and methods and materials for addressing cultural diversity. Lesson and unit development, evaluation, and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 311 | THE NATURE OF ENGLISH | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (its Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: What does it mean to be a student of language and literature? and, What are the ways of knowing writing, literature, and language? In doing so, students will relate their disciplinary content to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of high school students.

(SEC 364 or TCH 302), Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 312 | THE NATURE OF HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on the content course work students have done in the seven disciplines grouped under the heading "social sciences" (history, political science, geography, sociology, anthropology, economics, and psychology). In this class students will get further exposure to the basic concepts of the social science disciplines and consider the connections as well as differences between them. The course emphasizes how different disciplinary backgrounds lead students to bring different perspectives to their study of social phenomena and helps them see these phenomena from multiple vantage points. The course will employ a case study approach framed around social issues of interest to all seven disciplines (e.g. social control, threats, development, natural disasters). By the end of the course, students will have applied the knowledge and skills of multiple social science disciplines to evaluate social phenomena, considered the relationship and differences between those disciplines, and be prepared to enter SEC 322 where they will apply their content knowledge to inquiry and teaching in the field.

(SEC 364 or TCH 302), Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 313 | THE NATURE OF MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on students' mathematics understanding by emphasizing the universality of mathematics as a cultural endeavor. In it, students will explore the historical trends in mathematic and how those trends have been taught. Students will understand that, mathematics, at its core, is deductive; however, it also requires intuition. Thus, the course examines the interaction among intuition, experimentation, conjecture, abstraction, and deductive reasoning not only in the classroom but also in the everyday use of mathematics. It also examines the interplay between concrete problem-solving and generalization.

(SEC 364 or TCH 302), Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 314 | THE NATURE OF SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is about the nature of science and the interactions between science and society. It will build on the foundation of understandings that students already have about the processes and conventions of science developed through their years as science students to create opportunities for deeper understandings of the beliefs and assumptions inherent to the creation of scientific knowledge. These opportunities will be developed through direct interactions with professional scientists as well as through case studies and readings that illustrate the strengths, limits and pitfalls of the scientific endeavor as well as provide opportunities for students to relate science to their daily lives and interests and to a larger framework of human endeavor and understanding (e.g., relationships among systems of human endeavor including science and technology; relationships among scientific, technological, personal, social and cultural values). Cases will be drawn from different scientific disciplines as well as from modern and historic times. In this way, science students will have a better understanding of what it means to be a scientist and how science interfaces with society. The course is a prerequisite for SEC 324.

(SEC 364 or TCH 302), Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 321 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY ENGLISH PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course builds on SEC 311 by preparing teacher candidates to distinguish between what needs to be taught (content) and how it is taught (pedagogy), with an emphasis on understanding the historical shifts in the teaching of content and how these shifts inform teaching and learning in today's English language arts classrooms. The course also introduces students to methods of inquiry and reflection on content pedagogical knowledge. Student will examine their own educational experience through the lens of the historical trends, focusing on how they learned and what they understood their teachers to be doing. This initial case study will serve as an introduction into case study methods. Students will also develop expertise in one of the three historical trend areas -reading, writing, and language - and examine how the trend has informed teaching and learning and shaped curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment. Students will develop a case study of a practicing teacher using the lens of the historical trend in which they are developing expertise. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

(SEC 364 and SEC 311), or (TCH 302 and TCH 311) and Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 322 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCES PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course builds on the content knowledge students developed and reinforced in SEC 312. More, it asks them to make the shift from considering how a person prepared in the social sciences analyzes social phenomena to how such a person teaches the social sciences. Students will do this by developing two units of inquiry-based case studies that they could use in their own classrooms. The topics of these case studies will vary from section to section, depending on the needs of the students and expertise of the instructor. Possible topics include the Constitution, the Cold War, slavery, and the Iraq War. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the course work they have done in the content areas as well as the instruction they see teachers delivering in their field experiences. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections between the social science disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the high school level? What are the differences between the social science disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about social events but also the freedom to pursue their interests and make sense of the world on their own terms?" By the end of this course, students through readings and their projects will have advanced their learning about the nature of inquiry, its implementation in the classroom, and the connections and differences between the social science disciplines. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

(SEC 364 and SEC 312) or (TCH 302 and TCH 312), and Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 323 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY MATHEMATICS PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course builds on SEC 313 by introducing students to inquiry methods to understand the teaching and learning of mathematics. Students will explore how mathematics has been and is taught by examining major paradigm shifts in mathematics education and the impact those paradigms and shifts have on pedagogical content knowledge, or knowledge of how to teach disciplinary content. Students will use case study methods to look at instructional practices and begin to articulate their own mathematics teaching pedagogy. With the completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of mathematical literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching mathematics, as well as being able to identify what makes an exceptional math teacher who is able to address the needs of all students. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

(SEC 364 and SEC 313) or (TCH 302 and TCH 313), and Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 324 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SECONDARY SCIENCE PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Following SEC 314, this course transitions from asking "what does a scientist do?" to a consideration of why science literacy in the general public has been so difficult to achieve. The focusing questions for SEC 324 are: "How do we teach science? What is science literacy? Why is an understanding of science important to the general public? and What are the major obstacles and strategies to achieving science literacy?" The course begins by participants self-reflecting on their own educational experiences that led to their paths in science education: what have been their successful learning strategies, how have teachers influenced their education and what have been successful (and less than successful) classroom instructional strategies? From this, students will begin science classroom observation, discussing their observations with their peers, and speaking with educators about their experiences teaching high school science and about the goals and short-comings of science education. Throughout this process, students will read seminal literature on science literacy and explore cases challenging their notions of the teacher-learner relationship and the relationship between science and society. As a result of this course, students will gain a deeper understanding of scientific literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching science as well as identify what makes an exceptional science teacher able to prepare both future scientists and a knowledgeable public. 25 Level 1 Field Experience hours.

(SEC 364 and SEC 314) or (TCH 302 and TCH 314), Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 325 | LITERACY IN THE CONTENT AREAS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course explores the interrelationships between reading, writing, and other forms of communication (e.g., classroom talk, technology, visual arts) that are available to content area middle-level and high-school teachers. There will be an emphasis on the interrelationship of all aspects of language, oral and written, that result in literacy as a meaning-making tool in the construction of content-area knowledge. The course will discuss specific aspects of literacy processes from a multicultural, multilingual perspective as they apply to a variety of school settings in general and urban schools in particular. Students will become acquainted with theoretical issues as well as a wide range of literacy-teaching strategies including reading, writing, research, and study skills to be tailored to the needs of different students and to be applied across a variety of learning situations and text types. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

Senior status and (SEC 371 or TCH 371) or (SEC 372 or TCH 372) or (SEC 373 or TCH 373) or (SEC 374 or TCH 374) or status as a music education student is a prerequisite for this class. Exercise Science (BS) students are restricted from taking this class.

SEC 326 | TEACHING WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course prepares teacher candidates for teaching writing and composition at the middle and secondary school levels. The course focuses upon methods of teaching composition, examination of literature and research about the composing process, the development of language and reading skills, and the assessment and evaluation of writing. The development of writing curriculums will also be explored. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 328 | TEACHING LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course prepares teacher candidates for teaching literature at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in the teaching of literature, explores methods of teaching major literary genres, addresses problems of literacy and focuses on the transactional nature of reading and writing. Emphasis on developing a repertoire of ways of teaching literature and a variety of literature curriculums.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 329 | TEACHING YOUNG ADULTS LITURATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is devoted to the study of Young Adult Literature: an exciting, emerging genre of literature. Issues and ideas to be examined include the following: current debates regarding issues in curriculum and teaching; selecting, reading, evaluating, and teaching young adult literature; cultivation of life-long reading habits and literacy development. Students will become familiar with major writers of young adult literature, read diverse texts, explore major genres, review award winning novels, consider the role of the media, and develop creative projects. 20 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 339 | TEACHING SCIENCE IN THE SECONDARY SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course prepares teacher-candidates for teaching science in the middle school and high school. This involves reviewing the processes of science, theories of learning, and instructional strategies appropriate to laboratory science. This course also provides an update on the current trends and issues in science education as well as an analysis of successful science curricula programs. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 363 | ORIENTATION TO SECONDARY TEACHING AS A PROFESSION | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(6 credits) In this process-oriented course, students engage in critical reflection on the roles and expectations of secondary educators from both institutional and community perspectives. Questions considered will include: what is an educator, what is a professional, what are the attributes of effective teachers, what do effective teachers do? Students will examine their own values and begin to develop their own philosophies about education and teaching. 30 Level 1 Field Experience hours at arranged sites. (6 credit hours)

SEC 364 | METHODS: CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(4 credits) This course will examine materials, methods, and techniques appropriate for teaching in secondary schools. Topics include: educational goals; the development of a rationale and underlying assumptions; instructional goals and objectives; learning objectives; both cognitive and affective; classroom environment; classroom management principles and techniques; multicultural materials in various content areas; the development of appropriate methods and materials; current curriculum issues and controversies. 30 Level 1 Field Experience hours at arranged sites.

Junior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

SEC 365 | ART AND PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course alongside SEC 366 is intended as a two course sequence each complimenting the other. As SEC 366 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art's content, SEC 365 focuses on teaching visual art. Building from the content requirements from their program or experience, students will understand how the art studio (content) experiences where ideas are developed translate to the preparation of teaching. Students will do this through multiple curriculum based projects intended to use in their own classrooms, including a 6th - 12th grade general course reader to assist in introducing an art historical overview that influences and connects to general middle and high school studio practices. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the coursework they have done in the content area as well as watching and learning from classroom teachers and teaching artists in the field. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections among the arts disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the middle and high school levels? What are the differences among the arts disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about artists, artistic periods and the nature of how artworks are produced. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 371 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the English language arts in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required.

SEC 364, SEC 311, SEC 321, Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 372 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching history and the social sciences in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required.

SEC 364, SEC 311, SEC 322, Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 373 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching mathematics in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required.

SEC 364, SEC 311, SEC 323, Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 374 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the sciences in secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required.

SEC 364, SEC 311, SEC 324, Junior status, and an Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

SEC 381 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in SEC 321 and SEC 371. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities, with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in SEC 371, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with SCU 351.

(SEC 371 or TCH 371) is a prerequisite for this course. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 380.

SEC 382 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in SEC 322 and SEC 372. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with SCU 351.

SEC 373 is a prerequisite for this course. This class is taken concurrently with SCU 351.

SEC 384 | CAPSTONE IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The senior capstone course is designed to help students integrate the central emphases of their liberal learning studies curriculum into their professional behavior. It will provide prospective secondary educators with opportunities to engage in activities requiring them to reflect, to consider value commitments, to use critical and creative thinking, and to examine their practice from a multicultural perspective as they discuss issues specific early to secondary education. The course is grounded in the College of Education's framework for an Urban Professional Multicultural Educator, which also reflects the goals of the Liberal Studies program. COREQUISITE(S): SEC 390.

SEC 385 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in SEC 324 and SEC 374. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in SEC 374, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 30 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with SCU 351.

SEC 374 is a prerequisite for this course. This class is taken concurrently with SCU 351.

SEC 387 | CAPSTONE SEMINAR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help candidates integrate the central emphases of their Liberal Studies curriculum with their professional knowledge and behavior. It provides opportunities and activities to prospective educators that engage them in being analytic and reflective upon their major and related disciplines; guide them in further considering their value commitments and how they relate to their chosen profession; apply critical and creative thinking in addressing 'real-time' professional issues and needs; and examine extant practices from multicultural perspectives. Candidates develop a professional teaching portfolio that reflects the standards of the various guiding professional organizations and the Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE). The course is grounded in the College of Education's framework for an Urban Professional Multicultural Educator as well as the goals of the Liberal Studies program. The course is taken simultaneously with student teaching. COREQUISITE(S): SEC 390. (2 credit hours)

SEC 390 | SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING | 10 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(10 credits) Five school days a week in supervised teaching in a cooperating school for a full academic quarter. Feedback and discussion of problems encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching. Application and approval required. Open only to DePaul students. (10 hours)

SEC 395 | ASSESSMENT ISSUES IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces candidates to theoretical and philosophical issues related to educational assessment. It addresses the range of assessments teachers will encounter in school settings, including individual cognitive and social and emotional assessments; course material, curricula, and disciplinary program assessments; and large scale high-stakes testing. The course provides candidates opportunities to explore student, program, and curricular assessment issues, including assessment methods and tools; standardized, quantitative, and qualitative assessments; formal and informal assessments; formative and summative assessments; integrated, self-, and peer assessments; cultural, social, economic, and language influences on assessments; and issues of reliability and validity in assessment. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with SEC 371/SEC 372/SEC 373/ SEC 374 OR SEC 381/ SEC 382/SEC 383/SEC 384.

Exercise Science (BS) students are restricted from taking this class.

This class is taken concurrently with (SEC 371 or SEC 372 or SEC 373 or SEC 374) or (SEC 381 or SEC 382 or SEC 383 or SEC 384).

SEC 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 1-4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Permission of instructor, program chair and Associate Dean are required. (1 credit hour)

Social & Cultural Studies Ed Human Dev Grad (SCG)

SCG 25 | BASIC TECHNOLOGY LITERACY | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

This online course provides students with a knowledge about assembling, using, and troubleshooting basic technology hardware and software. In this course, students demonstrate understanding of basic computer setup and the use of peripheral devices such as printers, speakers, flash drives, scanners, digital cameras, videos, and computer software. (0 credit hours)

SCG 401 | ADVANCED LIFESPAN DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Current research and theories in human development relating to motivation, personality, learning and socialization. Case studies and an analysis of various developmental problems.

SCG 402 | PSYCHOLOGY OF LEARNING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Study of the learning-teaching process with specific emphasis on the person as a learner, human capacity and potential, learning theories and materials, motivation, concept formation, and behavior.

SCG 403 | HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND LEARNING: ELEMENTARY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will focus on the developmental processes of school-age children, kindergarten through middle school, by beginning with the study of the young child's social, emotional, cognitive, and physical growth and change. The theoretical and observational study of child development will be framed by an examination of culture, gender, and socio-economic factors as they inform assumptions about normative processes. The relationship between development and learning in a social context will be examined with particular attention to children's developing concepts in math, science, and language arts. Attention will also be given to the role of teachers and schools and other institutions in fostering the healthy development and learning of young people.

SCG 404 | CHILD GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines the growth and development of the young child in sociocultural context, from conception through age eight, including cognitive, language, physical, psychosocial, spiritual, creative, and emotional areas of development. Learning and development theories of young children, including those of Freud, Erikson, Garcia-Coll, Ainsworth, Bowlby, Piaget, Rogoff, Spencer, Vygotsky, Bronfenbrenner, and other modern developmental theorists, are explored. This course examines normative assumptions about children's processes of growth and change, and considers how learning and development occur through relationships in social contexts. The pedagogical implications of theories of development and of differences amongst children will be addressed throughout class discussions, child observations, and other course activities. This course requires 35 hours of field experience, working with infants and toddlers in a group care setting. Co-registration in T&L 480: Internship with Infants and Toddlers is recommended and encouraged.

SCG 406 | HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND LEARNING:SECONDARY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the multiple factors that contribute to the period of adolescence, bridging childhood and adulthood. Particular attention is given to the intrapsychic, interpersonal, biological, and socio-cultural processes that are mediated by the meanings that youth give to their identity vis a vis race, class, and gender formations within the broader society. Students will engage in interdisciplinary study of theories to examine the implications for teaching and learning processes and the role of educational institutions in fostering the healthy development of youth in society. Forms of inquiry will include students' examination of their own lives and assumptions, critique of theory, and observations of young people in a variety of contexts.

SCG 408 | EDUCATION AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A study of social forces that impinge upon the educational enterprise and analysis of the relationship to major social problems in urban education with emphasis on their social, economic, political, historical and philosophical dimensions.

SCG 409 | SOCIOLOGY OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the relationship between school structures and culture, social relations of race, ethnicity, class, and gender, and ideologies organizing education in the United States. Students will explore a range of theories in the sociology of education and explore linkages between school structures and processes and broader social forces. Readings may examine the political economy of schooling, inequalities in educational practices, and student and teacher identities shaped by schools and the larger society.

SCG 410 | INTRODUCTION TO RESEARCH: PURPOSES, ISSUES, AND METHODOLOGIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

(formerly CUG 400) This course will examine the basic questions, issues and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conduct, writing, reading and the use of educational research as a means for informing educational theory, practice and policy. Students will be exposed to the multiple frameworks which inform education research, the various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data and will examine the advantages, limitations and values implicit in conducting and evaluating research.

SCG 411 | PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the relationship of education to the moral and ethical dilemmas or predicaments of the human condition. It will entail issues related to the nature of education's responsiveness, or lack thereof, to the concerns of the human condition: for example, human alienation, suffering, success and failure, caring, freedom, responsibility, liberation and agency. Special attention will be given to how these concerns influences or have social, cultural and political implications for how teachers address them within the teaching and learning process.

SCG 435 | YOUNG ADOLESCENT DEVELOPMENT IN CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course considers how race/ethnicity, gender, social class, and sexuality inform teachers' perceptions of early adolescent development. It also examines middle grades teaching practices and has students analyze how those practices shape the growth and educational/learning experiences of early adolescents. It promotes a broad understanding of social, cultural, and historical conceptions of adolescence, and critically examines the complexities of the physical, social, intellectual, and emotional processes of growth and change of young adolescents. It explores the range of social contexts, interpersonal relationships, and societal views, which influence and give meaning to the development and learning of middle grade youth. This course uses observational experiences, reflective inquiry and interdisciplinary theories to prepare middle grades teacher candidates to design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. The course meets in the afternoon and integrates community and/or after school field experience with young adolescents into coursework. Co-requisite for this course is MGE 400. In this course, students will: 1.

SCG 439 | PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF YOUTH AND MIDDLE LEVEL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines foundational and contemporary theories of youth and adolescent development. It considers how these theoretical ideas relate to contemporary questions of youth and middle level education. The course explores the historical invention of adolescence, changing ideas about the meaning of childhood, as well as some of the broader social, economic, political, and cultural implications of these changing ideas. This course seeks to develop in prospective educators a broader capacity to theorize about youth and schooling, and, hence, to act critically and reflectively in multiple contexts in which youth learn. 10 - 15 field experience hours are required as part of this course.

SCG 451 | DOING CRITICAL PRACTITIONER RESEARCH IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to different approaches to education research and research methods with a focus on critical practitioner research. Students will become discerning readers of educational research and be able to design and conduct research related to teaching and learning in a variety of disciplinary areas (English, history/social sciences, mathematics, or science) at the secondary level. They will develop skills to critically examine and reflect on practice in the classroom through discipline-specific research projects. Taken concurrently with TCH 481, TCH 482, TCH 483, TCH 484.

T&L 425 and status as an Education graduate student are prerequisites for this class. SCG 451 has a co-requisite of TCH 481, or TCH 482, or TCH 483, or TCH 484.

SCG 527 | GLOBAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an inquiry into the relationship of education and pedagogy to culture and globalization. In this course, students study this relationship from different perspectives about globalization. The course examines how and why these perspectives have resulted in different conceptions of, for example, teaching, learning, culture, language, human development and worldmaking in the global north and global south.

SCG 582 | PRACTICUM IN EDUCATIONAL TECHNOLOGY AND NEW MEDIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides directed experiences in decision-making for curriculum planning, instructional design and delivery, scholarship and leadership in instructional technology-supported learning contexts. Students will engage in co-teaching activities in technology-rich classrooms; develop an instructional technology plan; make field evaluation and use of educational hardware and software; review and discuss research and professional literature in instructional technology; evaluate and use instructional products; develop and present a multimedia-based project; learn and apply theories and principles of instructional and information message design; engage in collaborative, micro-teaching activities online; develop a technology-enhanced instructional program for the K-12 environment; create a staff development plan with focus on technology applications for administrative purposes; conduct an evaluation study on-site; observe and experiment face-to-face and virtually with a range of instructional technology applications; produce comparative reviews on the use of instructional technology in various school settings. The practicum will also provide students with multiple opportunities to reflect and share their thinking with each other in a supportive community of learners and researchers. (Prerequisites: SCG 402 & CS 460).

SCG 588 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION | 1-4.5 quarter hours(Graduate)

Independent Study in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education.
PREREQUISITE: Permission of instructor, program chair and associate dean. (Variable credit)

SCG 600 | REGISTERED STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Registration in this course is open to students who are not registered for any other courses but need to complete requirements/assignments for previously taken courses. It provides access to University facilities. Permission of advisor required. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 603 | CULTURE AND EDUCATION SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

At its core, this course is an exploration of various ways in which culture has been conceptualized. This exploration will focus on the relationship between education, pedagogy, and theories of culture, all framed by a concern for social justice. Topics may include the pedagogical and political dimensions of popular culture, the interpretation of cultural products and expressions, and the relationship between knowledge and power in the political economy of culture production.

SCG 604 | IDENTITY: CONSTRUCTIONS AND NEGOTIATIONS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course explores the self and identity as a complex and dynamic psychological, socio-historical, and cultural process, and is grounded in the theoretical frameworks in human development, cultural studies, psychoanalysis, and philosophy, including critical and postmodern perspectives in education. It examines the intersubjective experiences, social relations, institutional hierarchies, and ideological frameworks through which social identities and subject positions are created, negotiated, and transformed across educational institutions and societal culture.

SCG 608 | IDEOLOGY, POWER AND POLITICS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines how power operates pedagogically and how domination and resistance get shaped in education. It considers how institutional ideologies and power relations in society enter into educational discourse and practice. It also explores ways in which power produces various educational practices and ways in which power gets psychically configured. Students will examine major theories of power, ideology, and politics and consider the educational implications of such an analysis.

SCG 610 | INTRODUCTION TO RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines the basic questions, issues and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conduct, writing, reading and the use of educational research as a means for informing educational theory, practice and policy. Students will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform educational research and the various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data, and will examine the advantages, limitations and ethical issues relating to conducting and evaluating research.

SCG 611 | PHILOSOPHICAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION, CULTURE AND ETHICS SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines philosophical questions regarding the moral and ethical meaning and purpose of education. Some of the questions explored are the nature of freedom, liberation, individuality, human difference, community, knowledge, reality, emotion, democracy, politics, aesthetics, self and other. In considering these questions in the context of education, particular attention is given to the philosophy of culture.

SCG 614 | CRITICAL MEDIA LITERACY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course focuses on theories of media interpretation, cultural pedagogy, and cultural studies. Literature from critical media literacy, cultural studies, critical pedagogy, communication studies, sociology, and philosophy will inform student understanding of how media educates, how interpretations of media are struggled over, and how such practices relate to broader structures of power, identity formation, political economy of media, theories of communication and representation, and pedagogy.

SCG 615 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN EDUCATION, CULTURE, AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course explores philosophical and sociological theories of education, technology and society. Topics include the social, political, and pedagogical implications of educational technology and new media. The aim of the course is to introduce students to the history of critical theoretical perspectives on educative technologies through foundational texts in the humanities and social sciences as well as contemporary studies in the multiple educative aspects of technology. Course readings will draw on scholarship in philosophy, sociology, new media, educational foundations, and political theory.

SCG 617 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION: | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will provide students with an opportunity for critical examination of issues in the social and cultural foundations of education. Topics could include: educational theory; social context of education; education and social justice; education and social transformation, educational policy; and issues in educational reform.

SCG 625 | CANDIDACY CULMINATING PROJECT (STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING) | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing culminating projects for their program of study, including theses, papers, and final portfolios. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of thesis/capstone advisor required each term. Registration limited to three terms. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 627 | GLOBAL ISSUES IN EDUCATION SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Studies of school systems outside the United States, their methods, curriculum and achievements.
Status as an EDD student with a Global Catholic Educational Leadership concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 635 | ADVANCED QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODOLOGIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on fundamental principles of educational research first introduced in SCG 610. It provides students with experience conducting qualitative research, with particular attention to developing skills in various methods of data collection and analysis.

SCG 610 is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 636 | THESIS RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A student writing a thesis registers for this course for four quarter hours of credit. Where the thesis research and the writing of the thesis itself are prolonged beyond the usual time, the program advisor may require the student to register for additional credit. Completion of this course is required to receive the MA Degree in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education.

SCG 637 | CAPSTONE: SOCIAL AND CULTURAL FOUNDATIONS IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The SCFE Capstone allows students to explore substantive areas of scholarship within their areas of interest and to create a final project or paper of their own design under the mentorship of a faculty member in the program. The Capstone is an opportunity to engage in a synthesis of what has been learned through coursework, and to integrate and compare knowledge gained from students' own research with that which was learned in the program. The capstone course will involve preparation of a substantive piece of work. Upon completion of all coursework, students enrolled in this course will select and work with a Capstone Advisor (a faculty member in the SCFE program) to discuss possible paper topics. The paper will generally consist of library-based research and will typically be 20-25 pages in length. Completion of this course is required to receive the MEd Degree in Social and Cultural Foundations in Education.

SCG 701 | SEMINAR: PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course broadens and deepens student understanding of the processes and aims of education through inquiry into the fields of aesthetics, ethics and moral philosophy, social and political philosophy, ontology and epistemology, and the philosophy of culture. A variety of history and conceptual frameworks are studied to enable students to advance theoretical perspectives on education and analyze and critique arguments in contemporary educational discourses.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

SCG 711 | CULTURE, POWER AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a critical understanding of the larger concept of culture within the notion of multiculturalism. This begins by recognizing that k-12 schools and universities are cultural institutions engaged in the making of culture. While the focus of multiculturalism is about theorizing difference in relation to the particular cultural processes that go on in schools and universities, its focus does not address how educational institutions are shaped by broader cultural dynamics outside of the immediate context of educational institutions. It is in this context that students will examine how cultural processes are intimately connected with social relations of class, race, ethnicity, gender and sexuality. They will also explore how culture involves power, which serves to produce inequalities in the abilities of individuals and social groups to define and realize their needs. In addition, culture will be analyzed as a site of social difference and struggle.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

SCG 721 | HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND THE EDUCATIONAL PROCESS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine the process of human development and learning through the ages by critically examining cross-cultural research and developmental theories designed to describe and interpret the physical, social, emotional, intellectual, and psychological processes involved. Emphasis will be placed on the range of individual, familial, environmental, and cultural factors that may enhance or inhibit human growth and development, and on the critical role that human relationships play in the lifelong interactive processes of learning and growth. Considerable attention will be paid to the historical role of power, culture, class, gender and capability in defining and interpreting certain behaviors as indicators of normative development. These normative indicators will be critiqued with regard to underlying cultural assumptions and values, their function in fostering and maintaining current social, educational and political relations, and their contribution to the current crises in urban education and the development of children and youth. Class participants will examine their perspective on human development and learning and explore the socio-cultural and historical bases which contribute to their underlying values and assumptions. Through multifaceted inquiry utilizing self-reflection, case studies, theoretical analyses, and child assessment and observation, participants will consider the implications for their work as educational leaders in approaching current challenges with students, parents, community, and teachers and in creating schools that will foster societal change to support the healthy development of children and youth.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

SCG 735 | QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to provide doctoral level students with theoretical and practical preparation in quantitative research design including: instrumentation; data collection; statistical analysis; ethics and politics of the conduct of research; and development of analytical skills for critiquing quantitative research. Students will have the opportunity to work with real databases to conduct both univariate and multivariate analyses, including correlations, ANOVAS, and multiple regressions. Prerequisite: SCG 785.

(SCG 785 and status as an EDD student) or (SCG 785 and status as a PhD student) or (SCG 775 and status as an EdS student).

SCG 745 | QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to provide doctoral level students with theoretical and practical preparation in qualitative methods including: data collection and analysis; ethics and the politics of the conduct of research; and critical analytical skills for review and critique of qualitative research. Students will be introduced to a range of approaches to qualitative inquiry that may include: narrative inquiry; ethnography; case study; phenomenology; grounded theory; and participatory action research from a variety of theoretical perspectives. Prerequisite: SCG 785.

(SCG 785 and status as an EDD student) or (SCG 785 and status as a PhD student) or (SCG 775 and status as an EdS student).

SCG 755 | QUANTITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A continuation of SCG 735. Students will prepare a methodology section of a research project and will learn how to write up quantitative results of their analyses. By the end of the course students should be able to: understand quantitative methodological approaches; select appropriate data collection strategies; and conduct the appropriate analysis for the research question(s) proposed and the nature of the data.

SCG 735 and status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student are prerequisites for this class.

SCG 765 | QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A continuation of SCG 745. Students will conduct a pilot study on an issue of interest using a qualitative research design. By the end of the course students should be able to: understand qualitative methodological approaches; select appropriate data collection strategies; and conduct the appropriate analysis for the research question(s) proposed and the nature of the data.

SCG 745 and status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student is a prerequisite for this class.

SCG 775 | FOUNDATIONS OF INQUIRY AND EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course offers a general introduction to theory and practice in educational research. First, it is designed to help students develop an understanding of the assumptions that underlie multiple approaches to knowledge construction and the conduct of inquiry in education. Second, the course will introduce students to the structural organization of a research manuscript. By the end of the course, students should be able to understand key theoretical assumptions and paradigms that underlie educational inquiry; engage in the critical analysis of a research study; recognize the components of a research manuscript; and identify a topical area of interest for future independent research.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

SCG 785 | FOUNDATIONS OF REVIEWING EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Drawing upon the knowledge and skills developed in Foundations of Inquiry and Educational Research, this course is designed to enhance students' ability to critically analyze with existing research as a crucial element in completing their own doctoral research. By the end of the course, students should be able to evaluate existing scholarly literature, explain the key elements of a literature review, understand different approaches to writing the literature review, and compose a literature review that demonstrates the ability to interpret, analyze and synthesize literature on a topic of their choice.

SCG 775 and status as an EDD or PhD student is a prerequisite for this class.

Social Work Undergraduate (SWU)

SWU 311 | HUMAN BEHAVIOR IN THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is the first course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the first half of the life span: conception, infancy, childhood, adolescence and young adulthood.

SWU 312 | HUMAN BEHAVIOR IN THE SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This is the second course of a two-part sequence designed to develop an understanding about human behavior and the social environment; the course offers an ecosystems framework and method for understanding human behavior within the context of personal, family, group and community systems, organizations, and institutions. Using a bio-psycho-social theoretical framework, fundamental concepts and theories are introduced with the life cycle serving as the organizational focus. The course covers the second half of the life span: young adulthood, middle adulthood, later adulthood and end of life.

MSW 311 and department consent are prerequisites for this course.

SWU 331 | SOCIAL WELFARE POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This foundation-level course is designed to provide students with the entry-level knowledge of social work ethics and values, policy formation and analysis, and practice skills necessary to impact and interpret the rules and regulations surrounding social welfare. Emphasis is placed on understanding political processes at the agency, local, regional and federal level and attention is given to economic considerations as well as the unique role of social welfare policy in regulating the lives of clients, particularly those from historically oppressed groups.

Social/Cultural Studies Education/ Human Dev Ugrd (SCU)

SCU 207 | SOCIAL AND HISTORICAL ISSUES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines through an interdisciplinary framework sociological and historical issues and concerns associated with the relationship between education and public life. The course analyzes education as a form of cultural power, addressing its political and ideological effects. Emphasis will be placed upon the social and historical meanings and purposes assigned to education, especially as it pertains to questions of race, gender, sexuality, and the political economy of class.

SCU 335 | YOUNG ADOLESCENT DEVELOPMENT IN CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course considers how race/ethnicity, gender, social class, and sexuality inform teachers' perceptions of early adolescent development. It also examines middle grades teaching practices and has students analyze how those practices shape the growth and educational/learning experiences of early adolescents. It promotes a broad understanding of social, cultural, and historical conceptions of adolescence, and critically examines the complexities of the physical, social, intellectual, and emotional processes of growth and change of young adolescents. It explores the range of social contexts, interpersonal relationships, and societal views, which influence and give meaning to the development and learning of middle grade youth. This course uses observational experiences, reflective inquiry and interdisciplinary theories to prepare middle grades teacher candidates to design classroom experiences that reflect and are sensitive to the socio-cultural contexts and realities of diverse middle grades learners. The course meets in the afternoon and integrates community and/or after school field experience with young adolescents into coursework. Co-requisite for this course is MGE 300. In this course, students will: 1.

Junior standing is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 336 | ADOLESCENT AND ADULT GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Theories of development throughout adolescence including current issues of problems and growth crises in attaining maturation. The course also includes adult and aging life span considerations. Emphasis is placed on the role of the early childhood professional in interaction with adults in the lives of young children (i.e., parents, grandparents).

SCU 337 | HUMAN GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the study of the process of human development from conception to old age. Through a range of theories, the periods of childhood, adolescence, and adulthood are examined with particular attention to the role of culture, gender, and class as they inform the contextualized process of growth and change across the life span.

SCU 338 | THE PROCESS AND EVALUATION OF LEARNING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The process involved in human learning is examined from alternative theoretical and research paradigms and perspectives. The roles of emotions, cultural differences, social realities, cognitive uniqueness, character and achievement tendencies are examined with respect to learner functioning. Alternative methods and techniques for evaluating learner development and academic achievement are surveyed and discussed. Emphasis is placed upon identifying the characteristics of individually and culturally responsive and responsible testing and assessment protocols in the school setting.

An education major or minor is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 339 | PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF YOUTH AND MIDDLE LEVEL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces foundational and contemporary theories of youth and adolescent development. It provides an investigation of how these theoretical ideas relate to contemporary questions of youth and middle level education. The course explores the historical invention of adolescence, changing ideas about the meaning of childhood, as well as some of the broader social, economic, political, and cultural implications of these changing ideas. This course seeks to develop in prospective educators a broader capacity to theorize about youth and schooling and, hence, to act critically and reflectively in multiple contexts in which youth learn. 10 - 15 field experience hours are required as part of this course.

An education major or minor is a prerequisite for this class.

SCU 351 | DOING CRITICAL PRACTITIONER RESEARCH IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to different approaches to education research and research methods with a focus on critical practitioner research. Students will become discerning readers of educational research and be able to design and conduct research related to teaching and learning in a variety of disciplinary areas (English, history/ social sciences, mathematics, or science) at the secondary level. They will develop skills to critically examine and reflect on practice in the classroom through discipline-specific research projects. Taken concurrently with SEC 381, SEC 382, SEC 383, SEC 385.

SEC 364 is a prerequisite for this class. SCU 351 has a co-requisite of SEC 381, or SEC 382, or SEC 383, or SEC 385.

SCU 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Education core unit. Permission of Department Chair and Associate Dean is required. (Variable credit)

Sociology (SOC)

SOC 101 | INTRODUCTION TO SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduction to the language, theories, methods, and research findings of the sociologist at work.

SOC 105 | SOCIAL PROBLEMS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Examination of important societal problems and issues with attention to their causes, their impact, and the possibility of resolution. The course considers the role of social movements, government and the private sector.

SOC 115 | ORIENTATION TO CAREERS IN SOCIOLOGY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores an introduction to the field of sociology as both an academic discipline and a community of practice dedicated to the common good and larger goal of social inclusion. Students will explore career opportunities in various subfields of sociology with an emphasis on connections between individual achievement, personal meaning and social purpose. Starting the process of developing a vocation, students will reflect on how their personal interests, values, preferences and skills relate to specific careers in sociology.

SOC 200 | SOCIAL WORK AND SOCIAL WELFARE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The nature of social work with a focus on the delivery of a variety of human services like health care and welfare; emphasis on professional-client relationships; examination of government agencies and voluntary associations.

SOC 201 | INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Social work is a discipline that touches on virtually every dynamic worldwide that affects people and their surroundings." (Martin, 2016) This course will introduce you to the field of social work, through a lens of social work practice. The class will introduce you to the social work role and develop your understanding of some of the knowledge and theories associated with social work practice. We will discuss key ideas, values, the social work process, and skills needed for social work practice. Social work is deeply intertwined with sociological concepts. This class helps students to understand some of those concepts through a practice focus, for example, issues of power, privilege, and oppression. Social workers interact with individuals, families, and communities within a wide range of contexts. We wear many hats, must be aware of a vast amount of knowledge, and possess the skills to work in a multitude of settings.

SOC 202 | PHILOSOPHY AND SOCIAL THOUGHT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The course examines the philosophical roots of social thought and social theory; it compares and contrasts philosophy and social thought as ways of knowing and as ways of reflecting on culture and societies.

SOC 207 | YOUTH AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Using an historical and cross-cultural perspective, this course examines the social position of youth in today's society; youth subcultures; key institutions within which youth are socialized and controlled.

SOC 209 | SOCIOLOGY OF GENDER | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course critically examines the socially constructed meanings of gender. Analysis of the interconnections between gender and social institutions/structures, including the family, education, work, media, religion, violence, the economy is examined. In addition, the role of feminism and the me-too movement is investigated as major influences in changing understandings and meanings of gender.

SOC 212 | COMMUNITY AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

An analysis of neighborhoods, cities, suburbs and utopian communities; the examination of major trends in urbanization and the evaluation of urban and community policies.

SOC 214 | POLICING THE MARGINS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the extent to which policing produces public safety, creates or magnifies harms, and/or functions to maintain a permanent underclass in the contemporary U.S. The course will pay particular attention to the ways that policing is raced, gendered, classed, and ability-based. Finally, the course examines community resistance and alternatives to policing throughout.

SOC 215 | WORKPLACE ENVIRONMENTS AND CAREER DEVELOPMENT IN SOCIOLOGY | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course concentrates on the knowledge and steps needed to create a career in a chosen area within sociology, combining sociological knowledge in areas of labor markets, networks and organizations with personal reflection on how we create careers that are both personally satisfying and can contribute to the social good. This course will include training in the following practical skills: industry and job/internship research, resume and cover letter writing and LinkedIn profile design, among others.

SOC 115 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 217 | WORK IN A GLOBALIZED WORLD | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The purpose of this course is to make a direct connection between the needs and strategies of individuals, companies, industries, and nations regarding work, and how they interact to create specific work environments and work outcomes for individuals in a globalized world. The course emphasizes how globalization, by creating an international labor market and an environment of competition between nations to attract jobs, has deeply transformed the work experience of individuals and the quantity and quality of jobs available in the United States, Latin America, Asia, and the rest of the world.

SOC 219 | THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the punitive approaches of the modern criminal justice system whose power has overwhelmingly shaped our institutions, policies, and practices, colloquially called the "School-to-Prison Pipeline." Using the city of Chicago as a touchstone for inquiry and analysis, this course analyzes how historical inequities such as, segregated cities, separated school districts, the intensification of poverty zones, and racial inequities of law enforcement, all converge into creating the conduit by which youth are directed from the institution of education to penalty. This course also investigates local, state, and federal student disciplinary programs, including juvenile courts and juvenile detention centers. Finally, a number of specific processes, such as the criminalization of normal adolescent behavior, the zero-tolerance school suspension disciplinary practice, and the ongoing dysfunctional social relations between students and School Resource Officers (SROs), will all be addressed in relation to the larger macro concerns of the American ethos of education and the primary institution of upward mobility in American society.

SOC 220 | THEORIES OF CRIME AND DELINQUENCY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Analysis of theories of causes of crime, including juvenile delinquency. Among the theories considered are theories based on social structure and strain, social process and learning, modern biosocial perspectives, the Chicago School and subcultural theories of crime, feminist theories of crime, rational choice, and social control. In addition, some of the topics included for analysis are police violence, sex work/prostitution, and pornography.

SOC 221 | INTRODUCTION TO THE U.S HEALTH CARE SYSTEM | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examination of occupations and organizations in the U.S. health care system. Topics include: quality, access, and cost of health services; occupations and organizations involved in delivering health care; financing of care through health insurance and government programs. Recommended gateway course for all students in Health and Health Services concentration.

SOC 231 | RACE AND ETHNICITY IN THE CITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The social and cultural importance of urban ethnic communities and their interrelationships are investigated through a study of neighborhood development and change. Special emphasis on the major ethnic communities of Chicago.

SOC 232 | GLOBAL CITIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An examination of the interaction between the process of globalization and urban areas throughout the world. Develops an understanding of the city as a critical location within a world that is growing ever more economically and politically interconnected. Focuses on the way cities function within the global context to better understand why local leaders make the policy decisions that they do.

SOC 233 | SOCIOLOGY OF SPORT | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course examines sports as a societal microcosm and as an idealized world for both individuals and institutions. Sport is also viewed as a major element in the making of American mythology.

SOC 243 | THE SUBURBS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Explores the suburb as a vitally important area of inquiry, rather than merely a place that is anti-city or sub-urban. Examines the diversity of U.S. suburbs and the many forms they have taken, such as streetcar, postwar, working class, edge city, sprawled, and retrofitted suburbs. Considers what just suburban development would look like.

SOC 245 | URBAN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An exploration of the economic, political, social, and cultural workings of cities and their larger metropolitan regions. Analyzes issues that affect neighborhoods as social spaces, such as housing, real estate development, changes in jobs and employment, suburbanization, and gentrification. Emphasizes the comparison of various places, diverse policy decisions and-ultimately-differing outcomes for communities. (Formerly taught as SOC 345)

SOC 246 | HOMELESS IN THE CITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course explores homelessness on a global/urban scale in relation to poverty, discrimination, health and mental illness, war, refugee status, and natural and man-made disasters (e.g. earthquake, nuclear event, hurricane, etc.) and examines governmental and community/organizational solutions.

SOC 248 | RESISTING WHITE SUPREMACY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

In this course, we will read, listen, and watch texts about both white supremacy and resistance to white supremacy. The course pays equal attention to how people's beliefs and actions produce and maintain racial stratification in the post-civil rights United States and the work Black and Brown people and their allies do to resist this violence. Each week focused on white supremacy and racism will include a reflective writing assignment while each week focused on resisting white supremacy and anti-racism will include a small action in which students engage. No matter what topic we are exploring, we will pay careful attention to how assemblages of race, gender, sexuality, nationality, citizenship status, and other markers of difference work together to create different embodied experiences of marginalization, vulnerability, and resistance.

SOC 254 | ANCIENT GREECE AND ROME | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The course explores the society and culture of ancient Greece and Rome, including mythology, art, and social institutions. The impact of these cultures on contemporary popular culture and social thought is considered. Emphasis on primary materials.

SOC 256 | SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examines changes in societies since 1800, including change in technology, culture, and social and political institutions. Topics include modernization, revolution and media. The course emphasizes comparative, global perspectives and use of primary sources.

SOC 275 | LIVED POLITICS: INDIVIDUALISM AND COMMUNITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This class is an exploration of the conflicting forces of social order and emancipation in modern liberal democracies. Based on Rousseau's version of the social contract and using the extreme case of cults, the course will explore the balance between surrendering intellectual and physical freedoms and maintaining a capacity for political agency. The course will compare and contrast the lives of students to those experienced in other contemporary societies with less individualistic approaches to the social contract. Students will gain knowledge and skills to help them engage in thoughtful and informed dialogue around meaningful and often controversial topics and empower them to be more active members of their communities while also more open to reasonable compromise for the good of society.

SOC 279 | INTRO STATS FOR THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Data description and interpretation; table construction; correlation, regression and ANOVA; introduction to multivariate analysis; statistical inference and hypothesis testing. Cross-listed with MAT 242. It is strongly advised that this course is taken Junior year.

(MAT 095 and MAT 100) or MAT 101 or placement are prerequisites for this class.

SOC 280 | MASS MEDIA AND CULTURE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Analysis of the relations between modern society and the mass media such as TV, film, radio and the print media.

SOC 281 | SOCIOLOGY OF ROCK MUSIC | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Rock music is studied as an object of culture, both as art and as mass culture. Attention is given to its creation, dissemination and appreciation.

SOC 282 | SOCIOLOGY OF HIP HOP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course critically examines the history, role, players, and influence of Hip Hop on social reality through the application of sociological perspectives and theories such as critical race theory, social conflict theory, feminism, and Marxism. It evaluates both the reciprocal relationship of Hip Hop in American culture and broader society, as well as the manipulation of Hip Hop within social institutions. Finally, this course builds a framework of understanding for socio-political and cultural conditions in exploring Hip Hop as a vehicle of social change and justice. Topics include commodification, agency, and authenticity; the dynamics of race, class, gender, and sexuality in Hip Hop; the cultural appropriation of Hip Hop; and the intersection of Hip Hop culture and social movements such as Black Lives Matter.

SOC 283 | ART & SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is based on the sociological proposition that art, no matter its form or era, is a product of extensive social networks. This course examines the dialectic between art and society, focusing on the social, political, and economic relationships among and between artists, critics, aestheticians, patrons, and institutions. By using sociological theory, concepts, and methods to analyze the social institutions and systems that comprise the "art world," combined with strategic field-based learning and art-making activities, students will develop a critical understanding of art as a socially constructed phenomenon.

SOC 290 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In-depth examination of selected and timely social issues. Topics vary from quarter to quarter. Topics may be initiated by students.

SOC 101 or SOC 105 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 291 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIOLOGY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Two-credit-hour courses on special topics in Sociology.

SOC 292 | COLLECTIVE ACTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the origins, dynamics, and consequences of collective action from a sociological perspective. We will examine a wide range of topics including: the emergence of movements; recruitment and leadership; interactions between organizers and media outlets, political authorities, the police, and the broader public; strategies and tactics (e.g., nonviolent direct action, litigation, armed resistance); framing and collective identity; and the factors contributing to the success and failure of organizing efforts. Students will apply these concepts to case studies of collective action: historic and modern, conservative and progressive, in the United States and around the world. Our examination of collective action will speak to the big questions about society, including the nature of power, conflict, authority, and legitimacy, and the relation between human agency and historical changes.

SOC 305 | POWER, DEVIANCE AND SOCIAL CONTROL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course employs a variety of theoretical paradigms to examine social constructions of deviance and conformity. It pays close attention to the relationship of such behaviors to conventional values, institutions, power, and mechanisms of social control.

SOC 306 | SOCIOLOGY OF FAMILIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

What's the meaning of family? How have families changed over time? How do families engage in care? What role do outside institutions have on family? This course addresses these questions by exploring historical and contemporary changes in family life; the relationship between family life and social arrangements outside of family in the work place, economy, and government; the division of labor related to gender, race, ethnic, and class inequality; and the role of economic, political, and social policies.

SOC 101 or SOC 105 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 307 | SOCIOLOGY OF DRUGS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sociological perspectives on substance use and abuse, related high-risk behavior, drug traffic, community impact, and prevention and public policy.

SOC 310 | CRIMINALIZATION, PUNISHMENT, & RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students will explore the history and social meaning of crime and punishment in the United States. Readings, reflections, and discussions will push students to examine criminalizing and punishing systems as a system of social control and will alert students to the raced and classed character of these systems.

SOC 313 | SOCIOLOGY OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Examines the structure of schooling in the United States and other societies. Topics include: Schools as organizations; teaching as a profession; peer cultures in schools; racial/ethnic, class, and gender inequalities in education.

SOC 315 | LAW, POWER AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students examine the law in its social context. Readings, reflections, and discussions will push students to explore the role of law both in the production and maintenance of inequality and in marginalized people's struggles for justice.

SOC 316 | STREET GANGS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Examines the problems associated with street gangs and "troublesome youth groups" in the United States and Europe. Classical and contemporary theories of gang formation and proliferation are reviewed. Both quantitative and qualitative gang research efforts are studied. Street gang reduction policies and programs (national and local) are scrutinized. Emphasis is placed on the street gang's relationship with other organizations and social actors in the same "habitat."

SOC 220 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 317 | GENDER, CRIME AND JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the ways in which gender intersects with crime and justice in the U.S. and increasingly, globally. Using feminist and critical perspectives, this course interrogates the gendered and racial nature of the criminal justice system, examines the ways in which gender intersects with patterns of offending, victimization, survival, and resistance, and looks at the ways that criminal justice institutions and gender interact. It also asks students to think critically about alternatives to incarceration and other ways of establishing "justice."

SOC 321 | HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The work of health and human service organizations is examined; the origins of these organizations, their goals and the problems inherent in attaining the goals, are considered.

SOC 322 | HOW SCHOOLS ARE FAILING AND CRIMINALIZING YOUTH | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

A review of the U.S. public school system structure and practices and how they fail and criminalize youth, as well as practices and programs designed to creatively disrupt the school-to-prison pipeline.

SOC 323 | THE SOCIAL WELFARE INSTITUTION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

The evolution of social welfare as an urban institution and the creation of the welfare state are examined. An analysis of social welfare in the United States within the context of economic, political, social and philosophical developments.

SOC 331 | SOCIOLOGICAL THEORY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Exploration of the nature of theory and an analysis of selected social theorists. It is strongly advised that this course is taken Junior year.

SOC 101 or SOC 105 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 340 | SOCIAL INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examination of inequalities in wealth and power and their consequences for everyday life and institutions such as education, work, law, health care, housing, and politics. Intersections of class, race/ethnicity, and gender are considered. The course includes discussion of social movements and public policies that seek to address inequality.

SOC 344 | POLITICAL SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will explore how social relations shape political processes, institutions, organizations and events. For example, we will examine the ways class, gender, and race relations influence state-building or movement-building. In doing so, we will explore how cultural traditions, or collective definitions of identity, shape and are shaped by political mobilizations or everyday practices of citizenship. Theoretically and empirically informed discussions will highlight historical and contemporary examples that influence political systems.

SOC 345 | POWER, POLITICS, AND CLIMATE CHANGE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course addresses the climate crisis as a relationship between biopower, infrastructure, and the environment. For Foucault, in the critical juncture of the 18th century, the rise of biopower was about political concerns for a new object of analysis: the optimization of the population through an emphasis on health, security, prosperity, and the protection of territory.

SOC 346 | URBAN ETHNOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will explore key issues in the method, practice, politics, and ethics of ethnography in relation to one's embeddedness and participation within the research setting under analysis. Various styles of ethnography, field techniques, strategies, and analytical frameworks will be examined. We will also explore the predicaments, virtues, and contributions of ethnographic works in contribution to the "craft of sociology." We will discuss the relation of theory to method and data and how ethnography connects to larger social forces of race, local knowledge's, power and poverty, practice and culture.

SOC 347 | CLASS, POWER AND DECISION MAKING IN THE CITY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Analysis of decision-making in urban settings. Considers the role of class disparities, power, citizen protest and community participation in urban outcomes.

SOC 348 | THE CITY IN THE FUTURE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Alternative views of urban structures and social life in the post-industrial age. Considerations of the implications of energy, different technologies, future shock and social trends.

SOC 349 | CULTURE AND POLITICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Culture encompasses shared beliefs, values, practices, behaviors, symbols, and artifacts. Politics is the process through which groups or individuals make decisions that allocate resources and power. Culture and politics impact one another in ways that shape and define societies. Through a range of theoretical and empirical readings, this course aims to deepen students' understanding of the interplay between culture and politics and its impact on society.

SOC 351 | HEALTH DISPARITIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examination of persistent health disparities in the U.S. and the influence of social settings on morbidity and mortality, as well as the impact of social class, gender, and race/ethnicity on disease and illness patterns and access to health care.

SOC 353 | SOCIOLOGY OF MENTAL ILLNESS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Examines the social history of, and societal reaction to, the mentally ill. Review of contemporary social perspectives on mental illness and social research on mental hospital institutionalization; the dynamics of the therapist-patient relationship.

SOC 358 | REVOLUTIONS AND PEASANT REBELLIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on theories on the international, national, regional, and local factors contributing to the weakening of states that result in revolutions, civil wars, and peasant rebellions. Case studies include revolutions in France, Russia, China, Mexico, Cuba, Nicaragua, and Iran. Contemporary social movements and insurrections are analyzed based on the theories of the course. Cross-listed with LST 358 and INT 319.

SOC 360 | SOCIAL SERVICES IN CONTEMPORARY SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Social services and welfare programs as developed in contemporary industrial societies. Comparison between European social services and the American social services provides a basis for considering the implications of social policy. Cross-listed with SOC 432.

SOC 366 | CAPITALISM AND GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course covers the foundational concepts of capitalism, the function and consequences of markets, the social inequality associated with capitalism, and the relationship between capitalism and the state in the neoliberal and post-neoliberal eras. Special emphasis is paid to the internal and systemic contradictions inherent in the process of capital accumulation within market economies and the consequences of those contradictions for the stability of capitalism for the lives of people. The second part of the course covers recent transformations in the structure and function of capitalists. The effect of capitalism on social structures is examined. Course topics include exploration of global (neoliberal) capitalism, financial capitalism, informational capitalism, and "caring" capitalism. Special attention will be paid to caring capitalism, characterized by the use of capitalist tools and concepts to create social good.

SOC 370 | SOCIOLOGY OF FOOD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Food has more meaning than mere sustenance. The course is designed to explore how food can both nourish us culturally and socially, but also how it reflects the gendered, race, ethnic, class, and economic distinctions within society. In doing so, we will examine social structures that make up the beliefs and practices related to food with emphasis on inequalities in the food system, and the levers of social change, including social movements, public policy, and equitably organized food and nutrition economies.

SOC 373 | PUBLIC HEALTH AND HIGH RISK BEHAVIOR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course involves the use of sociological theory, concepts, and methods to develop a critical understanding of high risk behavior, defined as any human activity that increases the risk of disease, injury, or death. The course content is international and historical and focuses mainly on drug use, sex, and violence. These behaviors are examined as interpersonal, organizational, contextual, and institutional phenomena.

SOC 380 | RESEARCH METHODS IN SOCIOLOGY I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The logic of social science research: Formulation of research questions; research designs; data collection and analysis; research report writing. Overview of methods for quantitative social research.

SOC 279 or PSY 240 or MAT 242 or MAT 137 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 381 | RESEARCH METHODS IN SOCIOLOGY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Overview of qualitative designs and methods such as ethnography, focus groups, content analysis, and visual methods. Research ethics and human participant protection are covered.

SOC 380 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 383 | VISUAL SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course contributes to developing a critical comprehension of the social world through the identification and analysis of visual stimuli, including photographs, films, videos, paintings, drawings, sculptures, artifacts, diagrams, signage, and other material and symbolic representations. The driving question is deceptively simple: What is the role of imagery in the construction, organization, and experience of social life?

SOC 384 | ETHNOGRAPHIC DOCUMENTARY FILM PRODUCTION | 4
quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course imparts the art, craft, and discipline behind the making of sociological ethnographic documentary films. Throughout the course students learn ethnographic concepts and methods, develop film criticism faculties, and build a film production skill set.

SOC 386 | POPULAR CULTURE AND THE ARTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Multiple perspectives, from modern to post modern, are applied to a range of forms of popular culture, both in historical context and in their current forms. Topics to be covered include examining the concept of popular culture, the analytic tools to understand it, and analyzing some of its manifestations (e.g. sports, mass media, gambling, holiday presentations, shopping, theme parks, theme restaurants, etc. Cross-listed with SOC 480.

SOC 387 | SOCIOLOGY OF CELEBRITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Celebrities are known for being well-known." The course explores the role of media and fans in the making of celebrity and considers celebrity as a key feature of contemporary society.

SOC 388 | SOCIOLOGY OF CONSUMPTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sociological perspectives on shopping, consumer culture, and social-psychology of consumer behavior.

SOC 390 | SEMINAR IN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Selected topics form the basis of an in-depth consideration. Topics vary and may be initiated by students.

SOC 101 (or SOC 102 or SOC 105) and Junior standing (or above) are prerequisites for this class.

SOC 391 | SEMINAR IN SOCIOLOGY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Two-credit-hour course on special topics in Sociology.

SOC 394 | COMMUNITY BASED SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Combines basic understanding of sociological principles with field experience.

SOC 395 | CAPSTONE IN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A senior seminar course that enables students to conduct original research and integrate theory and methods.

SOC 381 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 397 | TRAVEL/STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Foreign and domestic study tours with lectures and research by special arrangement with sponsoring programs.

SOC 398 | INTERNSHIP | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Placement of students in work-study situations relevant to careers in health and human services, social work, juvenile justice, law and society, urban and community services. Clinical and Experiential (can fulfill jr. yr. requirement). (1 to 4 credit hours).

SOC 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent Study.

Senior status and permission of the department chair are prerequisites for this course.

SOC 402 | STATISTICS FOR THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to quantitative and statistical reasoning in the social sciences, quantitative data analysis, and computer software.

SOC 403 | SOCIAL POLICY AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines the process of policy-making and the effects of policies on individuals, organizations, and communities.

SOC 404 | CLASSICAL AND MODERN THEORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Covers classical social theory (Marx, Durkheim, and Weber) and social theory through the 1960s.

SOC 405 | CONTEMPORARY THEORY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines sociological theories, methods and concepts through a study of the work of contemporary sociologists.

SOC 411 | SOCIAL RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course presents the logic of social science inquiry and familiarizes students with a wide range of quantitative and qualitative research designs and methods such as ethnography, survey research, case studies, analysis of existing data sets, focus groups, content and discourse analysis, interviews, social autopsies, and comparative-historical research. Policy research and program evaluation may also be included among the topics. Emphasis is placed on formulating research questions and linking designs and methods to the questions. Students read examples of research and develop their own proposals. Research ethics and human-participant protection are key concerns of the course.

Status as a SOC Graduate student is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 412 | DATA ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The implementation of a research project. Analytic techniques, data processing and the preparation of a written research report.

SOC 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 413 | QUALITATIVE METHODS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An examination of qualitative methods in sociology: data collection and content analysis, field research, life histories, and unobtrusive measures.

Status as a SOC Graduate student is a prerequisite for this class.

SOC 414 | SOCIOLOGICAL WRITING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to develop research and writing of sociological papers including both literature reviews and writing projects focused on original research. Students develop their final writing project requirement for the master's degree through engaging in facilitated discussion and a peer review process where students evaluate each other's work and give feedback. The successful completion of the final paper for the course is intended to help fulfill the final writing project leading to the master's degree.

SOC 417 | ETHNOGRAPHIC DOCUMENTARY FILM PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course imparts the art, craft, and discipline behind the making of sociological ethnographic documentary films. Throughout the course students learn ethnographic concepts and methods, develop film criticism faculties, and build a film production skill set.

SOC 420 | URBAN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to advanced level studies in applied urban sociology: contemporary urban theory, research, and policy issues.

SOC 423 | URBAN ETHNOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Ethnological approach to urban life stressing the qualitative analysis and evaluation of different types of urban communities, community organizations, and urban life styles.

SOC 426 | URBAN DEVELOPMENT POLICIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Community agencies viewed as problem-solving organizations. Concentration on the impact of state and local government on community organizations and how community organizations influence social policy.

SOC 431 | SOCIOLOGY OF HEALTH, ILLNESS AND MEDICINE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Analysis of the social system of health care: practitioners, organizations, patients, and their multiple interrelationships. An evaluation of problems in health care delivery systems. Cross-listed with MPS 534.

SOC 432 | SOCIAL SERVICES IN CONTEMPORARY SOCIETIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Analysis of the concept of welfare, evaluation of the social organization of welfare and the problems of welfare service systems. The interrelationships between welfare and the family, employment, health and crime are explored. Cross-listed with SOC 323.

SOC 433 | THE SOCIOLOGY OF EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Analysis of educational organizations and their effects-including characteristics of institutional structures, teaching as an occupation, and the relationship between educational attainment and social mobility.

SOC 434 | YOUTH SERVICES: HEALTH AND WELFARE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Review of research on various youth problems (eg., substance abuse, pregnancy, runaways) and consideration of efforts at amelioration and control.

SOC 438 | SOCIOLOGY OF SUBSTANCE USE & ABUSE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Sociological perspectives on substance use and abuse, related high-risk behavior, drug traffic, community impact, and prevention and public policy.

SOC 440 | SOCIOLOGY OF LAW | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Analysis of the American legal system as an instrument of social control, social change, and social reform. The impact of social science research on public policy decisions.

SOC 441 | PUBLIC HEALTH AND HIGH RISK BEHAVIOR | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course brings sociological theory, concepts, and methods to bear on HIV/AIDS, hepatitis B and C (HBV, HCV), and other adverse health outcomes prevalent among injection drug users (IDUs), men who have sex with men (MSM), and "high risk heterosexuals" (HRHs).

SOC 442 | CRIMINALIZATION AND PUNISHMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course critically analyzes both practices of and discourses around criminalization, punishment, and banishment in the United States and social movements to resist these practices.

SOC 443 | ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAW AND INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This seminar explores how civil law—and especially anti-discrimination law—works as an instrument of social control, social change, and social reform in the context of intersectional inequality. The course critically examines how key tenets of liberalism, for example individualism and meritocracy, limit anti-discrimination law's ability to produce meaningful change—at least as these laws are currently interpreted by the courts.

SOC 445 | POWER, POLITICS, AND CLIMATE CHANGE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course addresses the climate crisis as a relationship between biopower, infrastructure, and the environment. For Foucault, in the critical juncture of the 18th century, the rise of biopower was about political concerns for a new object of analysis: the optimization of the population through an emphasis on health, security, prosperity, and the protection of territory.

SOC 447 | SOCIAL CONTROL AND SOCIAL DEVIANCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines theories and research on the social organization of institutions that label and process deviants.

SOC 450 | ADVANCED STATISTICS I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Advanced Statistics I (cross-Listed as PSY 410)

SOC 455 | CHILDHOOD, FAMILY, PUBLIC POLICY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines contemporary public policy issues and relevant research concerning parenting, marriage, household structure, and family formation, with a focus on the U.S.

SOC 460 | SOCIOLOGY OF THE FAMILY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examines demographic trends in this century, recent literature on women and men, wives and husbands, children and parents. Some comparative material is included.

SOC 461 | SOCIOLOGY OF YOUTH | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Critical analysis of literature on nondelinquent youth; focus on the social contexts within which the transition to adulthood occurs.

SOC 463 | SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The influence of group life on personality development, social interaction, and social behavior.

SOC 464 | SOCIAL INEQUALITY AND STRATIFICATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An analysis of inequalities in power, wealth and prestige with an emphasis on the concept of social class, trends in social mobility, and relationships to current social topics such as housing, welfare and political participation.

SOC 465 | RACE AND ETHNIC RELATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Theoretical perspectives on racial, ethnic, gender, sexual orientation and differentially abled groups emphasizing processes of group formation, patterns of prejudice and discrimination, and an evaluation of methods to reduce prejudice and discrimination.

SOC 466 | SOCIAL MOVEMENTS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Study of social trends, social movements, communications, and crowd behavior. Emphasis on processes of social change, includes examination of historical and cross-cultural case material.

SOC 467 | ORGANIZATIONS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The functioning, premises, and consequences of formal organizations will be considered using a variety of perspectives.

SOC 468 | SOCIAL DEVIATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Research and theory in the sociology of deviant behavior, emphasis upon such topics as the labeling of deviants, the analysis of deviant careers, patterns of deviant socialization, and the roles of agents or agencies of social control. Cross-listed with SOC 304.

SOC 470 | GENDER AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Theory and research on roles of men and women, sexual behavior and patterns of gender inequality. Cross-listed with MLS 447 and WGS 460.

SOC 471 | SOCIOLOGY OF KNOWLEDGE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An analysis of the social forms of knowledge and the social processes by which individuals acquire this knowledge. The institutional organization and social distribution of knowledge.

SOC 475 | SOCIOLOGY OF WORK | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Examination of the nature, meaning and history of work and leisure in Western culture; and the relationship of work and leisure to issues associated with the contemporary concept of "quality of life". Cross-listed with MLS 443.

SOC 477 | SEX, SEXUALITY AND POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Focus on sexuality as one of the central organizing ideologies shaping the fabric of our social life. Topics covered include the medicalization of sex, sex and race, pornography, sex and globalization, and gay liberation movement, etc.

SOC 478 | CAPITALISM AND GLOBALIZATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course covers the foundational concepts of capitalism, the function and consequences of markets, the social inequality associated with capitalism, and the relationship between capitalism and the state in the neoliberal and post-neoliberal eras. Special emphasis is paid to the internal and systemic contradictions inherent in the process of capital accumulation within market economies and the consequences of those contradictions for the stability of capitalism for the lives of people. The second part of the course covers recent transformations in the structure and function of capitalists. The effect of capitalism on social structures is examined. Course topics include exploration of global (neoliberal) capitalism, financial capitalism, informational capitalism, and "caring" capitalism. Special attention will be paid to caring capitalism, characterized by the use of capitalist tools and concepts to create social good.

SOC 479 | MEN, MASCULINITY AND POWER | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course reviews the development of men's studies and its connection with the development of women's studies. It examines the construction of masculinity and the issue concerning gender inequality.

SOC 480 | POPULAR CULTURE AND THE ARTS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

(Cross-listed as SOC 386) The course explores topics in popular culture and the arts from a sociological perspective. The focus includes specific arts (film, music, photography, etc), subcultures of artists and performers and the impact of the market on the arts and popular culture.

SOC 487 | SOCIOLOGY OF CELEBRITY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Celebrities are known for being well-known." The course explores the role of media and fans in the making of celebrity and considers celebrity as a key feature of contemporary society.

SOC 493 | VISUAL SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A sociological view of documents that record social reality. These documents primarily include photographs but can also include paintings and sculpture.

SOC 494 | RACISM AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, although we will be particularly interested in the way White Supremacy is created and maintained in the post-civil rights era, we will ground our examination in the histories that created our present. We will end the course with a frank discussion of what can be done to resist racism and racial oppression in our own lives.

SOC 495 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SOCIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Special courses will be offered as students and faculty identify selected topics of common interest.

SOC 498 | INTERNSHIP | 8.00 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students may be placed with agencies where they will have the opportunity to participate in activities such as research and counseling. Credit may vary but is subject to the limit of eight quarter hours.

SOC 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent Study.

SOC 500 | THESIS RESEARCH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The thesis research should culminate in the acceptance of a thesis. Four quarter hours, one registration.

SOC 510 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to master's degree candidates who are actively working toward the completion of a thesis, project, or portfolio. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires thesis/project advisor and graduate director approval and demonstration to them of work each quarter. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course carries and requires the equivalent of half-time enrollment status. The student may be eligible for loan deferment and student loans. This course is graded as pass/fail. (0 credit hours)

SOC 601 | CANDIDACY MAINTENANCE | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This 0-credit hour course is available to graduate students who are not registered for a course in a given quarter but need to maintain active university status. Enrollment in this course is limited to three quarters and requires permission of the graduate director. Enrollment in this course allows access to the library and other campus facilities. This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

Software Engineering (SE)

SE 325 | INTRODUCTION TO SOFTWARE ENGINEERING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the activities performed at each stage of the development process so that they can understand the full lifecycle context of specific tasks such as coding and testing. Topics will include software development processes, domain modeling, requirements elicitation and specification, architectural design and analysis, product and process level metrics, configuration management, quality assurance activities including user acceptance testing and unit testing, project management skills such as risk analysis, effort estimation, project release planning, and software engineering ethics.

CSC 301 or CSC 393 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 330 | OBJECT ORIENTED MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Object-oriented modeling techniques for analysis and design. Provides the tools and techniques needed to solve complex, real-world software engineering problems in an object-oriented manner, using the most effective elements of the Unified Process. The course covers the essential concepts and notation of the Unified Modeling Language (UML), the standard notation for object-oriented analysis and design. Team project.

CSC 212 or CSC 262 or CSC 300 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 333 | SOFTWARE TESTING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed for the software engineering professional to gain a greater understanding of the key ingredients in creating and/or managing a successful testing program to meet project needs.

Topics covered include test lifecycle planning, test design & coverage analysis, complexity, levels of testing such as unit, integration, system, performance and stress testing. Best practice strategies in software testing such as verification & validation, early lifecycle testing, risk based testing and automation will also be examined including exposure to test automation methods and tools.

CSC 383 or SE 330 or CSC 301 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 341 | CONTINUOUS DELIVERY AND DEVOPS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of the tools, techniques, and processes used in Continuous Delivery and DevOps. Students will learn about the software methods that underpin continuous delivery and deployment. Topics will include: the economics of devops and continuous delivery; the role of virtualization; cloud technologies and topologies; containerization; automating builds and testing; continuous integration; value stream maps; the essentials of configuration management; and effective use of source code control branches and feature flags to manage multiple lines of concurrent development.

CSC 301 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 350 | OBJECT-ORIENTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Principles, techniques and tools of object-oriented modeling, design, implementation, and testing of large-scale software systems. Topics include design patterns, application frameworks, architectural design, and the applications in the software development process to improve the extensibility, maintainability, and reliability of software systems.

CSC 301 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 352 | OBJECT-ORIENTED ENTERPRISE APPLICATION DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on applying object-oriented techniques in the design and development of software systems for enterprise applications. Topics include component architecture, such as Java Beans and Enterprise Java Beans, GUI components, such as Swing, database connectivity and object repositories, server application integration using technologies such as servlets, Java Server Pages, JDBC and RMI, security and internationalization. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 301.

CSC 301 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 356 | SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT FOR MOBILE AND WIRELESS SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will focus on the unique aspects of developing software applications for mobile and wireless systems, such as personal digital assistant (PDA) devices and mobile phones. Topics will include user interface design for small screens with restricted input modalities, data synchronization for mobile databases as well as wireless programming and the use of web services. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 357 | CONCURRENT SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Fundamentals and techniques of developing concurrent object-oriented applications, using a patterns-based approach. Concepts covered include threads, synchronization and object locking, thread blocking and deadlock, safety and liveness, state-dependent action and concurrency control. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 358 | SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT FOR LIMITED AND EMBEDDED DEVICES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will focus on the unique aspects, tools, and techniques for developing software applications for limited and embedded devices, such as set-top boxes, micro-controllers and smart cards. Topics will include memory management for low-memory devices and efficient programming techniques for limited processors. Students will gain hands-on experiences in customizing and configuring embedded OS, handling various types of sensors and actuators such as barcode readers, RFID sensors, etc, and building software applications that meet the functional and non-functional requirements. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 359 | AGILE SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course focuses on the fundamentals, principles, tools, and techniques in agile software development. Students will gain hands-on experiences in agile software development through projects dealing with various aspects of agile development, including planning, construction, testing, and integration. Students will be able to effectively participate in and manage agile software development as a result of their successfully completing this course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 368 | SOFTWARE MEASUREMENT AND PROJECT ESTIMATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will discuss various software metrics and defect models. Productivity and effort estimation models as well as software cost estimation will also be discussed. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 223 and SE 330.

IT 223 and SE 330 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 371 | PRACTICES OF GLOBAL SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course studies the challenges and solutions for developing software in a global environment. Topics covered include strategic issues related to allocation of tasks; communication issues that arise due to distance, time zone differences, infrastructure support, geographical dispersion, and lack of information communication; coordination complexity; cultural issues, technical issues related to information and artifact sharing, and architectural design, and finally knowledge management issues. Some sections of this course will include a hand-on global development project in conjunction with teams of students at other universities, while other sections will focus on a more in-depth theoretical discussion of these issues and concepts. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 301 or CSC 383 or CSC 393.

CSC 301 or CSC 393 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 380 | DESIGN OF OBJECT-ORIENTED LANGUAGES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course covers issues in the design and specification of object-oriented programming languages. Sample topics include the use of patterns in program representation, static and dynamic semantics, subject reduction, sub-typing, inheritance, polymorphism, genericity and concurrency. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350..

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 391 | SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO I | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students will work in small teams to develop realistic software systems in a master-apprentice environment. The instructor will serve as a master/mentor/project leader. Students will apply the knowledge and skills they have learned in previous course in solving real world problems. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 350.

SE 350 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 392 | SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is a continuation of SE 391. SE 391 and SE 392 must be taken as a sequence in consecutive quarters. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 391.

SE 391 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

SE 430 | OBJECT ORIENTED MODELING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Object-oriented modeling techniques for analysis and design. Provides the tools and techniques needed to solve complex, real-world software engineering problems in an object-oriented manner, using the most effective elements of the Unified Process. The course covers the essential concepts and notation of the Unified Modeling Language (UML), the standard notation for object-oriented analysis and design. Team project. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 433 | SOFTWARE TESTING AND QUALITY ASSURANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed for the software engineering professional to gain a greater understanding of the key ingredients in creating and/or managing a successful testing program to meet project needs. Topics covered include test lifecycle planning, test design & coverage analysis, complexity, levels of testing such as unit, integration, system, performance and stress testing. Best practice strategies in software testing such as verification & validation, early lifecycle testing, risk based testing and automation will also be examined including exposure to test automation methods and tools. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 441 | CONTINUOUS DELIVERY AND DevOps | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A study of the tools, techniques, and processes used in continuous delivery and DevOps. Students will learn to transform an organization that uses traditional software release methods into one that embraces continuous delivery and deployment. Topics will include: the economics of DevOps and continuous delivery; the role of virtualization, cloud technologies, and containers; automated builds and testing; value stream maps; the essentials of configuration management; effective use of source code control branches and feature flags to manage multiple lines of development; organizational factors affecting the success of continuous delivery and DevOps adoption including: culture, team organization, collaboration, and software development practices. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 450 | OBJECT-ORIENTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Principle, techniques and tools of object-oriented modeling, design, implementation, and testing of large-scale software systems. Topics include design patterns, application frameworks, architectural design, and the applications in the software development process to improve the extensibility, maintainability, and reliability of software systems. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 452 | OBJECT-ORIENTED ENTERPRISE COMPUTING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on applying object-oriented techniques in the design, development, and integration of server-side enterprise applications using technologies such as servlets, Java Server Pages, and JDBC. Topics include web applications, multi-tier architecture, model-view-controller architecture, database connectivity, and security. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 453 | ARCHITECTURE AND FRAMEWORKS FOR DEVELOPING CLIENT APPLICATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on software architectures, frameworks, and techniques for developing web-based thin client applications as well as rich desktop client applications. Topics will include discussion on design and architectural patterns, such as model-view-controller pattern; survey of widely used development frameworks for building client applications, such as Struts, Java Server Face (JSF), Swing, and SWT, etc.; discussion of widely used techniques such as AJAX; evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of these technologies for making technology decisions. Students will gain hands-on experiences in developing applications that utilizes these frameworks and techniques. Prerequisite: SE 452.

SE 452 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 456 | ARCHITECTURE OF REAL-TIME SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course discusses the principles, styles, and patterns of real-time software architecture. Trade-offs and ramifications of software architecture with respect to performance, maintainability, and reusability, will be explored. The course will also investigate the design and implementation of real-time behavior and constraints for Common Design Patterns such as Observer, Visitor, and Strategy. Finally, the course will demonstrate how creation of real-time Data Driven environment allows the run-time object data to control the behavior and flow of an application. These topics will be discussed in the context of best practices in software engineering such as iterative development, testing, and continuous integration. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 457 | SERVICE-ORIENTED ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

An in-depth study of service oriented architecture (SOA) from the business, architectural, and technology perspectives. The business perspective will explain the imperatives behind SOA and discuss the significance of SOA in industry. The architectural perspective will discuss the different architectural models of software development and contrast these with SOA. The technology perspective will provide students with the opportunity to gain the required hands-on experience to analyze, design, implement and deploy SOA solutions that will meet both functional and non-functional requirements. Major topics include software architectures in practice, SOA development lifecycle, Enterprise Service Bus, SOA analysis and design methods, Web Services, and governance.

(SE450 or SE456) or CSC 435 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 459 | AGILE SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the fundamentals, principles, tools, and techniques in agile software development. Students will gain hands-on experiences in agile software development through projects dealing with various aspects of agile development, including planning, construction, testing, and integration. Students will be able to effectively participate in and manage agile software development as a result of their successfully completing this course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450.

SE 450 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 468 | SOFTWARE MEASUREMENT/PROJECT ESTIMATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Software metrics. Productivity, effort and defect models. Software cost estimation.

IT 403 and (SE 430 or SE 450 or SE 456) are requirements for this class.

SE 475 | MANAGING GLOBALLY DISTRIBUTED SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Managing Globally Distributed Software Development (GDSD) for IT projects. Issues associated with time zone differences, infrastructure support, geographical dispersion, and lack of centralized communication. The course will focus on the management, implementation and deployment of software within the context of outsourced, distributed development, and insourced projects. Additional topics include strategic management issues such as justification, vetting, consulting services and partnerships. Course will include several hands-on distributed development projects. PREREQUISITE(S): CSC 403.

CSC 403 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 477 | SOFTWARE AND SYSTEMS PROJECT MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Project Management is presented from a practitioner's view. The four basic building blocks of software project management: people, process, tools, and measurements are covered. Special emphasis is placed on professional standards such as the Project Management Book of Knowledge and IEEE Software Engineering Standards. Specific topics include Managing People, Selecting Project Tools, Leadership & Motivation, Software Development Processes, Estimation, Risk Analysis, Scheduling and Tracking, Leveraging Measurements, and Project Completion. Consideration is given to rapid development and project cultural issues. PREREQUISITE(S): Knowledge of the Software development life cycle model, for example through courses such as SE430, ECT455, IS425, MIS555 or through appropriate work experience.

SE 480 | SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The Software Architecture process is concerned with describing, evaluating, and designing systems at the architectural level. This course will discuss the role of architecture and the architect in the software development cycle. It will introduce architectural patterns and tactics, architecture assessment techniques, architecture driven design, and techniques for documenting architectures. The course will involve design, development, and assessment activities.

SE 450 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 482 | REQUIREMENTS ENGINEERING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Requirements Engineering (RE) plays a critical role in the software development process. This course will introduce related vocabulary, concepts, and techniques, and will examine the role of RE in software and systems engineering. The course will cover topics related to eliciting, validating, negotiating, analyzing, specifying, and managing requirements. Popular RE tools will also be introduced.

SE430 or SE450 or SE456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 485 | REAL-TIME SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Real-time software development. Topics include runtime library construction, abstracting low-level systems, custom data containers, memory tracking, framework development, real-time design patterns, low-level drivers, and graphics engine development. Design and implementation of multi-heap memory management system with aligned allocations with cross heap tracking. Exploration of run-time control of behavior through real-time data driven messaging. Interface development to create a responsive optimized access to abstract data types. Students will design, develop and implement a real-time application (i.e. Graphics engine) that integrates multiple user-developed libraries with real-time constraints.

CSC 461 and (SE 456 or SE 450) are prerequisites for this class.

SE 488 | AI-DRIVEN SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course will cover the integration of AI systems in the software development life cycle, including the use of AI in requirements gathering and analysis, software design and architecture, testing, and maintenance and evolution. The students will gain hands-on experience through tools/projects. By the end of the course, students will have a comprehensive understanding of AI in software engineering and will be able to apply their knowledge to real-world software development projects.

SE 450 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 489 | MACHINE LEARNING ENGINEERING FOR PRODUCTION (MLOPS) | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

The course "Machine Learning Engineering for Production (MLOps)" is designed for software engineers who are looking to gain hands-on experience with Machine Learning Model Development, Deployment, and Maintenance. The course will cover the latest tools and technologies used in industry for MLOps, and will also explore emerging trends and technologies in this field. Throughout the course, students will be working on hands-on projects that will help them gain practical experience in developing, deploying, and maintaining machine learning models. The course will cover topics such as: Machine Learning Workflow: covers different stages of the machine learning workflow including data preparation, model development, and deployment and different types of machine learning models and when to use them. Cloud Native ML: covers the latest trends and technologies in cloud native machine learning, including autoML and serverless computing and using cloud services such as AWS, GCP, and Azure for machine learning. MLOps: covers best practices for MLOps including version control, testing, and monitoring and using tools such as Git, Jenkins, and Kubernetes to manage the machine learning pipeline. Model Deployment: covers deploying machine learning models to production, setting up automated processes for model deployments and logging and monitoring techniques for keeping track of model performance and data drift. MLOps Tools: covers using various MLOps tools such as MLFlow, Kubeflow, and Databricks for more efficient model development and deployment and using AWS Sagemaker for automated machine learning. Automated ML: covers automated machine learning (AutoML) and how to use it to optimize model performance, setting up pipelines and automating model training, evaluation, and deployment. Model Maintenance: covers maintaining machine learning models in production, updating models with new data, retraining models, deploying models to different environments and using A/B testing for model performance optimization. Model Governance: covers best practices for model governance including version control and security and techniques for tracking model performance and data drift, monitoring model performance in production. Case Studies: students will work on real-world case studies throughout the course to apply concepts learned.

SE 491 | SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will work in small teams to develop realistic software systems in a master-apprentice environment. The instructor will serve as a master/mentor/project leader. Students will apply knowledge and skills they have learned in previous course in solving real world problems.

PREREQUISITE(S): SE 450 or SE 456.

(SE 450 or SE 456) is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 511 | PRACTICES OF GLOBAL SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course studies the challenges and solutions for developing software in a global environment. Topics covered include strategic issues related to allocation of tasks; communication issues that arise due to distance, time zone differences, infrastructure support, geographical dispersion, and lack of information communication; coordination complexity; cultural issues, technical issues related to information and artifact sharing, and architectural design, and finally knowledge management issues. Some sections of this course will include a hands-on global development project in conjunction with teams of students at other universities, while other sections will focus on a more in-depth theoretical discussion of these issues and concepts. Prerequisite(s): SE 450 or SE 430 or IS 430 or PM 430. A student may not take both IS 540 and SE 511 for credit toward a degree.

SE 450 or SE 430 or IS 430 or PM 430 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 525 | SOFTWARE SECURITY ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students in this course will learn architectural patterns for integrating security into software such as web applications. Topics include: an overview of software security; integration of authentication, access control, and auditing into software; programming with symmetric-key and asymmetric-key cryptography, including key distribution and key management, use of certificates, and SSL/TLS; security mechanisms in modern runtime environments, e.g., code signing, code verification, access control, and security policies. Students will get hands-on experience designing and implementing secure software.

CSC 435 and (SE 450 or SE 456) are prerequisites for this class.

SE 526 | SOFTWARE SECURITY ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students in this course will learn how to conduct software security assessment to identify software vulnerabilities in software such as web applications and operating system services. Topics include: common software vulnerabilities and attack vectors; malicious payloads, including shellcode structure; and application review techniques, including fuzzing and code auditing. Students will get hands-on experience identifying vulnerabilities in software. Prerequisite(s): CSC 435.

CSC 435 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 529 | SOFTWARE RISK MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Identification, estimation, evaluation, planning, controlling, and monitoring of risk involved in the development, maintenance, operation and evolution of systems. PREREQUISITE(S): IT 403 and SE 430 or consent.

IT 403 and SE 430 or Consent of Instructor are prerequisites for this class

SE 533 | SOFTWARE VALIDATION AND VERIFICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Techniques, methods and tools for software inspection and testing. Theory and applications of formal verification of programs. Techniques and tools for automated analysis of programs.

SE 450 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 546 | SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN FOR DESKTOP APPLICATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will introduce students to architecture, design and implementation issues for developing GUI-based desktop application. The goal is to understand the engineering aspect of user interface development – that is the basic software architectures and designs that govern the development of graphical user applications including patterns like the Model-View-Controller and its derivatives, event-driven design, as well as addressing concurrency, performance, caching, and software packaging and distribution issues. The course will also provide an in depth exposure to the toolkits available in Java. Examples include JFC/ Swing, JMF, JAF.

SE 450 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 549 | MODEL-DRIVEN SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced methods and techniques in software specification, modeling, and model-driven development. Topics include approaches to software specification and modeling, formal specification languages, techniques for structural and behavioral modeling of software systems, and tools for analysis and transformation of software systems.

SE430 or SE450 or SE456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 554 | ENTERPRISE COMPONENT ARCHITECTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on object-oriented component architectures for enterprise applications. Topics include: Enterprise Java Beans (EJB), Java Naming and Directory Interfaces (JNDI), Java Mail and Messaging Services.

SE 450 or SE 452 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 556 | ADVANCED ARCHITECTURE OF COMPUTER GAMES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course discusses the advanced issues in software architecture and the engineering of computer games. The topics include engineering and programming issues in graphics, scene management, kinematics, simulation, collision detection. Software design patterns and frameworks for computer games. Project management, configuration management, and quality assurance of computer game development projects.

PREREQUISITE(S): SE 456 and CSC 407.

SE 456 and CSC 407 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 560 | STRUCTURED DOCUMENT INTERCHANGE AND PROCESSING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Document and data interchange among different applications is an extremely important aspect of software application development. This course will focus on emerging technologies associated with the Extensible Markup Language (XML), such as the Document Object Model (DOM), the Simple API for XML (SAX), the XML Stylesheet Language (XSL) and Transformation Language (XSLT), and XML Schema. Applications of these technologies will be discussed in conjunction with tools and techniques for parsing, transforming, and manipulating documents.

(SE 450 or SE 456) OR (CSC 301 and SE 430) are prerequisites for this class.

SE 576 | GPU Architecture | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Real-time application GPU development. Topics include GPU pipeline, data parallelization, hierarchy data flow on GPU, asset compression, non-graphics data processing, graphics rendering and data conversion. Design and implementation of parallel GPU applications across multiple GPU cores. Exploration of different parallelization techniques for large (non-graphical) computationally heavy systems. Developing and debugging blind data flow on GPU hardware. Students will design, develop and implement a real-time GPU application (i.e. Skinned Animation rendering engine) that integrates large converted data assets using 100s of parallel GPU cores.

SE 585 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 579 | ANALYTICS AND DATA MINING IN SOFTWARE ENGINEERING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course discusses the application of selected statistical analysis, data mining, and machine learning techniques to the area of Software Engineering. These techniques are used for purposes as varied as stakeholder analysis, mining software repositories, trace retrieval, bug prediction, recommender systems in Software Engineering domains, and software process improvement techniques. The course demonstrates how these techniques can be used to enhance project management and other software engineering activities in software intensive systems and provides students with hands-on experience using them on real project data. (No prior knowledge of data mining and knowledge management is assumed.)

SE 450 or SE 456 are prerequisites for this class.

SE 581 | SOFTWARE ARCHITECTURE II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this second Software Architecture course, students will be exposed to case studies of real-world software architectures for which reliability, performance, availability, scalability and other such concerns drive the architectural design. Students will gain hands-on practice in reverse engineering, designing, and assessing existing systems including performance testing. Student will build on their prior knowledge to design complex systems in principled and systematic ways. The course will involve designing and implementing a simulated high scalability, high reliability system. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 480.

SE 582 | SOFTWARE-INTENSIVE SYSTEMS ENGINEERING AND MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will introduce students to fundamental principles of systems engineering for large and complex software intensive systems. The course will include a study of systems engineering failures, and will cover topics related to problem frames; systems level modeling of hardware and software components, concept definition, design tradeoffs, risk assessment, interface definition and related systems engineering activities. Additional topics such as product line development, ultra-large scale systems, and engineering of safety critical systems will also be covered. PREREQUISITE(S): (SE 477 or PM 430 or IS 430) and (SE 430 or SE 482 or IS 485)

(SE 477 or PM 430 or IS 430) and (SE 430 or SE 482 or IS 485) are prerequisites for this class.

SE 585 | REAL-TIME SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Real-time software development with asset conversion. Topics include offline data conversion, asset packing, data driven application behavior, hierarchy base scene management, profiling and debugging large opaque data, runtime formats for low-level drivers, and advanced visualization techniques. Design and implementation of hierarchy based data systems with dynamic real-time modifications. Exploration of run-time control of behavior through real-time data driven messaging. Implementation of the complete application process: tool creation, asset condition, responsive loading and data driven runtime behavior. Students will design, develop and implement a real-time application (i.e. Animation engine) that integrates large real-time converted data assets with real-time constraints.

SE 485 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 591 | SOFTWARE ENGINEERING STUDIO II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is the continuation of SE 491. SE 491 and 591 must be taken as a sequence in two consecutive quarters. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 491.

SE 491 is a prerequisite for this class.

SE 598 | TOPICS IN SOFTWARE ENGINEERING | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and may vary with each quarter. PREREQUISITE(S): For specific prerequisites, see syllabus or consult course instructor. (variable credit)

SE 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable Credit. PREREQUISITE(S): None. (variable credit)

SE 690 | RESEARCH SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Readings and discussion on current research topics. Students may register for this course no more than three times. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of the instructor.

SE 691 | RESEARCH SEMINAR CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is intended for students not registering in either SE 696 or SE 698. After registering for SE 690, students register for this course in each subsequent quarter until they complete the research. Students who fail to do so will be required to re-enroll in SE 690 to meet the requirement for completing that course. Prerequisite: SE 690 (0 credit hours)

SE 690SE 695 | MASTER'S RESEARCH | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students interested in a more in-depth study of a particular area will register for this course and work with a faculty member (not necessarily their academic advisor) on a research project. The work involved may include system development, empirical studies, or theoretical work. 4 credit hours of CSC 695 replaces one 500level elective course in student's degree program. This course can be taken for 1-4 credit hours for up to 8 credit-hours. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of research advisor. Independent study form required. Students must successfully complete the foundation courses prior to their first enrollment in CSC 695. (variable credit)

SE 696 | MASTER'S PROJECT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

(4 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their project. Independent study form required. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor.

SE 698 | MASTER'S THESIS | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A student who has made an original contribution to the area (typically through 8 credit-hours' worth of work done in CSC 695, but not necessarily) may choose to complete a Master's Thesis. The student and the student's research advisor form a Master's Thesis Committee. The student submits to the committee a thesis detailing the original results of the research project. After a public defense, the committee will decide whether to accept the thesis. In that case, the student will be allowed to register for this course and the transcript will show the thesis title as the course topic. PREREQUISITE(S): Successful defense of a Master's Thesis. (0 credit hours)

SE 699 | SOFTWARE ENGINEERING RESEARCH CONTINUATION | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

Students register for continuation credit after registering for SE 698 in each subsequent quarter until they complete their thesis. Students who fail to do so will have to reregister for SE 698 to meet the requirement for completing that course. PREREQUISITE(S): SE 698. (0 credit hours)

Sound Recording Technology (REC)

REC 200 | INTRODUCTION TO SOUND RECORDING TECHNOLOGY | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introductory course to acquaint students with concepts and techniques of sound recording technology. Open to all music students and required for SRT majors. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or as a Music Recording Minor student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 201 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Basics of audio engineering and studio signal flow with an emphasis on analog and digital consoles. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors. Status as a Sound Recording Technology major is a prerequisite for this class.

Status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 202 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced studies in audio engineering with an emphasis on the principles of digital recording and editing. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors. REC201 and status as a Sound Recording Technology major is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 201 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 203 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced studies in audio engineering with an emphasis on acoustics, microphones, and microphone techniques. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors.

REC 202 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 204 | BASICS OF LIVE SOUND | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to provide an overview of the technology and applications of the tools used in the field of live sound reinforcement. Topics will include: basic electronics, troubleshooting and equipment repair, audio and network cables and protocols, wireless audio, small and large venue sound integration and installation, monitor and sound system tuning, as well as analog and digital consoles. This course is built on prior material such as REC 200, which covers the basics of microphones, signal flow, and sound generation. (2 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or Music Studies minor is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 205 | GAME AUDIO FOR MUSICIANS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Game Audio For Musicians is intended for sound recording majors and music students who are interested in advanced studies in audio for video games. Students will create music and sound design in the context of a video game and learn out to implement that audio in a game engine such as WWise.

COM 326 is a prerequisite for this class.COM 326

REC 209 | ELECTRONICS FOR MUSICIANS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to teach practical skills in analog electronics. Some basic theory will be outlined using as little mathematics as possible. Hands-on skills to be covered include soldering, testing, and modifying solid state circuitry.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or as a Music Recording Minor student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 216 | PRO TOOLS AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE RECORDING STUDIO | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The goal of this course is to transform students from casual listeners of recorded music into educated critical analysts. Students will study the history and development of recording technology and recording studios. Lab exercises will teach the basics of recording and signal processing using Digidesign Pro Tools software. Arts and Literature.

REC 217 | EDM AND THE ART OF ELECTRONIC MUSIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course will trace the genesis of contemporary electronic dance music and explore the interrelationships between popular electronic music styles and the electroacoustic music of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Students will develop listening skills and key musical vocabulary to enable them to analyze, interpret and respond to historically significant works from a diverse body of relevant genres.

REC 300 | CONTEMPORARY FILM SCORING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Undergraduate level course designed for Music, CDM, Communication, and Theater majors who want an understanding of film music and the mechanics of scoring to picture. It will cover the basics of spotting films, writing with a click track, and utilizing synthesizers and samplers to realize film music.

Status as Undergraduate Music student, Undergraduate Theatre student, Undergraduate Communication student or Undergraduate CDM student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 301 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY IV | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced studies in audio engineering with an emphasis on signal processing and audio for film post-production. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors. COREQUISITE(S): REC 304.

REC 203 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 302 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY V | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced studies in audio engineering with an emphasis on tracking and mixing different genres of music. SRT5 includes the capstone audio/video sound design project. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors. COREQUISITE(S): REC305.

REC 301 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 303 | RECORDING TECHNOLOGY VI | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced studies in audio engineering with an emphasis on surround sound mixing. SRT6 includes the electronic portfolio project. This is part of a two-year sequence of courses for sound recording technology majors. COREQUISITE(S): REC306.

REC 302 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 304 | SOUND PRACTICUM I | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Practical experience with technological applications in the recording studio. CO-REQUISITE(S): REC 301. (2 quarter hours)

REC 203 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 305 | SOUND PRACTICUM II | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Practical experience with technological applications in the recording studio. COREQUISITE(S): REC 302. (2 quarter hours)

REC 304 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite and REC 302 is a corequisite for this class.

REC 306 | SOUND PRACTICUM III | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Practical experience with technological applications in the recording studio. COREQUISITE(S): REC 303. (2 quarter hours)

REC 305 and status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite and REC 303 is a corequisite for this class.

REC 307 | COMMERCIAL MUSIC PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

For students with a music theory background who want to learn how to realize music using digital sequencing and sampling. This course will focus on creating tracks in pop genres for film, soundtracks, video games, and commercials.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or as a Music Recording Minor student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 308 | AUDIO FOR BROADCAST | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to sound for broadcast, covering both production and post-production sound. We will be discussing roles and opportunities in both fields. Additionally, there will be hands-on experience with tools of the trade including an introduction to field mixer/recorders, lavalier/boom mic techniques and the basics of wireless technology. Lastly, there will be an introduction to the Izotope RX software package and its uses in repairing poor audio. Prerequisite: REC200 Intro to SRT.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or as a Music Recording Minor student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 360 | TOPICS IN SOUND RECORDING TECHNOLOGY | 2-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In-depth investigation of a topic in sound recording technology.

Status as an Undergraduate Music student or as a Music Recording Minor student is a prerequisite for this class.

REC 398 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent Study (2 quarter hours)

Status as a Sound Recording Technology student is a prerequisite for this class.

Spanish (SPN)

SPN 101 | BASIC SPANISH I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the first course in a three-course introductory sequence that as a whole constitutes "first year college Spanish" (SPN 101, SPN 102, and SPN 103). The course has three main goals: to develop some basic knowledge of Spanish as a foreign language, to develop some communicative skills in that language, and to attain some basic knowledge of the cultures of the Spanish-speaking world and learn some cultural differences between the U.S. and these cultures. This course is intended for students who have never taken a Spanish class before or who score 1-30 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207).

SPN 101S | BASIC SPANISH I FOR SUMMER | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(Covers the equivalent of SPN 101 and the first half of SPN 102.) The first half of beginning Spanish. Listening to, speaking, reading, and writing Spanish in a cultural context for the beginning student.

SPN 102 | BASIC SPANISH II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the second course in a three-course introductory sequence that as a whole constitutes "first year college Spanish" (SPN 101, SPN 102, and SPN 103). The course has various goals. The first one is to develop some basic communicative skills in Spanish as a second language. These include but are not limited to the following sample abilities: talking about pastimes and leisure activities, talking about activities in the past, describing typical household chores, using expressions associated with technology, and giving instructions. This course is intended for students who have taken SPN 101 at DePaul (or equivalent) or who score 31-45 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207).

SPN 103 | BASIC SPANISH III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the third course in a three-course introductory sequence that as a whole constitutes "first year college Spanish" (SPN 101, SPN 102, and SPN 103). The course has several goals. The first one is to develop some basic communicative skills in Spanish as a second language. These include but are not limited to the following sample abilities: taking about feelings and mood changes, talking about what people do to and for each other, expressing wishes and desires, narrating present and past actions, describing current events, using vocabulary related to professions and daily life. This course is intended for students who have taken SPN 102 at DePaul (or equivalent) or who score 46-55 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207).

SPN 103S | BASIC SPANISH III FOR SUMMER | 6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(Covers the equivalent of the second half of SPN 102 and all of SPN 103.)

The second half of beginning Spanish. Further work on the basic elements of the Spanish language, spoken as well as written, with due regard to the cultural context of Spanish expression.

SPN 104 | INTERMEDIATE SPANISH I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the first course of the sequence of Intermediate Spanish (SPN 104, SPN 105, and SPN 106). The course follows a content-based approach where students learn about Hispanic culture through interaction and communication. The fundamental language learning goal of this course is to help students express, interpret, and negotiate meaning in context. This course is intended for students who have taken SPN 103 at DePaul (or equivalent), or who score 56-65 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207). SPN 104, 114, and 124 are equivalent courses. Students who place into SPN 104 but are interested in service learning should consider registering for SPN 124, which is the same level but with a service-learning component.

SPN 105 | INTERMEDIATE SPANISH II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the second course of the sequence of Intermediate Spanish (SPN 104, SPN 105, and SPN 106). The course follows a content-based approach where students learn about Hispanic culture through interaction and communication. The fundamental language learning goal of this course is to help students express, interpret, and negotiate meaning in context. This course is intended for students who have taken SPN 104 at DePaul (or equivalent), or who score 66-74 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207). SPN 105, 115, and 125 are equivalent courses. Students who place into SPN 105 but are interested in service learning should consider registering for SPN 125, which is the same level but with a service-learning component.

SPN 106 | INTERMEDIATE SPANISH III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is the third course in the sequence of Intermediate Spanish (SPN 104, SPN 105, and SPN 106). The course follows a content-based approach where students learn about Hispanic culture through interaction and communication. The fundamental language learning goal of this course is to help students express, interpret, and negotiate meaning in context. This course is intended for students who have taken SPN 105 at DePaul (or equivalent), or who score 75-95 on the Spanish placement exam. This course is NOT appropriate for students who have non-classroom exposure to Spanish, such as from family or in the community; these students should enroll in a heritage Spanish course (SPN 114, 115, 200, or 205-207). SPN 106 and 126 are equivalent courses. Students who place into SPN 106 but are interested in service learning should consider registering for SPN 126, which is the same level but with a service-learning component.

This course provides transitional Spanish for intermediate Heritage Learners whose primary goal is to communicate more effectively in the language and expand their understanding of Hispanic culture. Listening, speaking, reading and writing skills continue to be developed, with an emphasis on conversation, facilitated by the study of vocabulary and structure, exciting readings and films.

SPN 201 | ADVANCED GRAMMAR AND COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

In this class students will work toward improving their speaking, listening, reading, and writing skills in Spanish at the advanced level as they explore various topics related to the history and cultures of the Spanish-speaking world. Students will also focus on four major grammar points that typically present a challenge for students of Spanish as a foreign language: the distinction between ser and estar, verb tense, verb aspect (preterite/imperfect), and verb mood (indicative/subjunctive). SPN 106 (or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor) is recommended. Heritage learners of Spanish at this level should take SPN 205 instead of SPN 201.

SPN 202 | ADVANCED COMPOSITION AND COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Students will work on improving their speaking, listening, reading, and writing skills in Spanish at the advanced level as they explore various topics related to the history and cultures of the Spanish-speaking world. Students will focus a little more, however, on written expression. Readings for the class will serve as models for various types of writing (primarily exposition and argumentation), and students will analyze the structure of these models as well as discuss their content. The course will also emphasize spelling, punctuation, and the effective use of the dictionary. SPN 106 (or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor) is recommended. Heritage learners of Spanish at this level should take SPN 206 instead of SPN 202.

SPN 203 | ADVANCED CONVERSATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course will focus on improving the student's oral skills in Spanish through intensive practice. Students will discuss a wide range of topics, and they will practice conversational strategies for a variety of situations. Upon completing this course, students should be able to do the following: 1) talk about the past in a coherent and fairly detailed manner; 2) deal effectively with unanticipated complications (e.g., a lost ticket); 3) adapt to formal and informal situations; 4) speak broadly on topics of personal interest; and 5) make themselves easily understood by Spanish speakers who are unaccustomed to dealing with non-native speakers. Class preparation will include readings (from various genres) and films. SPN 106 (or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor) is recommended. Heritage learners of Spanish at this level should take SPN 207 instead of SPN 203.

SPN 205 | ADVANCED GRAMMAR AND COMPOSITION FOR HERITAGE LEARNERS I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is the first of three courses (SPN 205-206-207) that as a whole constitute a comprehensive, structural review of the Spanish language at the advanced level. It follows pedagogical principles for students of Spanish, Latin American, Hispanic, or Latino Heritage and is intended to increase their level of bilingual linguistic competency and literacy while simultaneously exploring and fostering an appreciation of Latino culture and heritage. SPN 200 or equivalent, including placement test or permission of instructor, is recommended.

This advanced course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative works in nineteenth-century Peninsular novel. The course will focus on the conflicting interest of nineteenth-century society paying special attention to the theme of marriage and relationship between sexes. This course will stress and encourage the examination of the roles of women, class, culture, and religion. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 333 | GOLDEN AGE THEATER | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This advanced course will introduce students to the Spanish theater of the seventeenth century, with a focus on the comedia, a new popular art form that appealed to audiences across social classes. Students will explore the development of this genre, from the innovations of Lope de Vega, who gave the comedia its versatility and mass appeal, to the late baroque drama of Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz, who adapted the form for a colonial context. Other readings include plays by Cervantes, Calderon de la Barca, and Tirso de Molina (whose Burlador de Sevilla is the first dramatization of the Don Juan legend). Students will situate these works in their cultural contexts and consider their current relevance. They will also discuss film adaptations of some of the plays. Topics include questions of class and caste, gender roles, different notions of honor, freedom, and free will, and the theatrical elements of everyday life. Class will consist primarily of discussion of the assigned readings. (Literature category #1: Spanish literature before 1700). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 334 | SPANISH TRANSLATION III: ADVANCED TRANSLATION AND PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This is an advanced course that includes practical experience designed to bring translation knowledge and skills together to produce accurate and clear translations from English into Spanish and vice versa. Students will review fundamental translation theories and applications of written texts in various disciplines. They will acquire the skills and knowledge needed to ensure contextually-accurate terminology in the preparation of translated documents. Additionally, they will maintain the standards of the ethical code formulated by the American Translators Association (ATA). Computer assisted translation (CAT) tools supplement classroom learning with user-friendly online exercises of technical vocabulary designed to reinforce translation skills. Students can enroll in a section that includes Community-Based Service Learning (CbSL) for 25 hours per quarter, where they help to produce "translations in progress" for local business and non-profit organizations that require translation services. As a final project, students will create a translation portfolio, which is composed of a reflection paper, translation projects, curriculum vitae, and a cover letter. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 335 | U.S. LATINA WRITERS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

SPN 339 | THE GENERATION OF 1927 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course examines the peninsular Spanish "Generation of 1927" in considerable depth with emphasis on the best known literary figure in the group, Federico Garcia Lorca. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 340 | SPANISH CREATIVE WRITING WORKSHOP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course seeks to reinforce and further develop the student's expression in Spanish by exploring different techniques in writing poetry and fiction. After approaching some basic concepts involved in the creative writing process, and with the constant practice of writing, students will be able to create texts in the style of preference. They will also gain more confidence with linguistics abilities. This class will be conducted in a workshop format, consisting of in-class writing exercises, workshop-like peer-sharing of texts, and discussions about the creative process. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 351 | SPANISH IN THE U.S. | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Spanish is the second most widely spoken language in the United States; it has been spoken in this country longer than English has. This course is an introduction to the varieties of Spanish spoken in the US. Students will examine the evolution of the phonological, grammatical, and lexical linguistic system of the Spanish of US Latino/a communities. Students will also explore how sociolinguistic concepts such as bilingualism, diglossia, code-switching, linguistic variation, linguistic change, standard vs. non-prestigious varieties, and language attitudes manifest in the US Spanish context. This course is intended to familiarize the students with issues of language use in social context. Students will discuss results of research on the relationship between language and society in US Spanish-speaking communities. They will become familiar with sociolinguistic concepts. Students also acquire experience in carrying out sociolinguistic research. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 352 | SPANISH PHONOLOGY AND PHONETICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is an introductory course on the nature and structure of the sound system of the Spanish language. This course is offered to students who, having studied the language for at least two years, need a solid grounding of Spanish phonology and—in the case of non-native speakers of Spanish—a systematic practice of correct pronunciation patterns. It is also a requirement for Spanish majors. After a thorough study of the Spanish sound system, students will explore some related topics such as Spanish orthography, the history of the Spanish language, its place among Romance, Iberian, and American languages, and its rich dialectal variation. Lectures and discussions will be based on the required textbook and on additional materials (both written and audio). This class will be conducted in Spanish. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 353 | THE STRUCTURE OF SPANISH | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the scientific study of the structure of language, with a special emphasis on Spanish. It examines the structure of sentences (syntax), the formation of words (morphology), and the construction of meaning (semantics/pragmatics) in Spanish, and in contrast to English and other languages. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 354 | SPANISH SOCIOLINGUISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the study of the relationship between language and society through the Spanish varieties in the Spanish-speaking world. Students will examine and revise ideologies, attitudes and beliefs about the Spanish language to understand this relationship. To lead students to examine their own beliefs and attitudes about language, they will be equipped with methods of linguistic analyses and strategies to find the social in the linguistic and the linguistic in the social from a critical perspective. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 355 | THE HISTORY OF THE SPANISH LANGUAGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a journey through the history of the Spanish language from Latin to the present day. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 356 | BILINGUALISM IN THE SPANISH-SPEAKING WORLD | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines bilingualism in the Spanish-speaking world in society and in individuals. At the societal level, it discusses the distribution of languages in contact with Spanish throughout the world and the social and political factors that affect language use, acquisition and maintenance, including language policy and bilingual education. At the individual level, it discusses first and second language acquisition and bilingual language processing and use, including code-switching and other linguistic features resulting from language contact. This class will be conducted in Spanish. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 370 | LATIN AMERICAN CIVILIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course will explore the politics, social structures, traditions, artistic movements and historical periods of Latin America. The scope of the course covers the main pre-Columbian civilizations, the time of the Spanish discovery and colonization, the rise of new nationalities and their development, especially in relation to the United States and the emerging globalized world. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 371 | CULTURAL DIVERSITY AND LEGACIES THROUGH FILM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores Latin American, Latino and/or Peninsular cultures which grapple with various historical, socio-economic and political issues through film. Throughout the course, students will question the construction of individual and collective identities in film, focusing on the intersections of cultural factors such as gender, race and ethnicity, social class, and language, among others. Students will also focus on the ideological substructures involved in the shaping and conforming of those identities by cultural institutions and social systems. Students will also learn vocabulary and techniques for analyzing the formal aspects of film as well as film narrative. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 372 | LITERATURE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course will explore cultural diversity and the Dominican Republic political, gender and ethnic visions through poetry. Through poetic class experience students will decode culture and society in the Caribbean and U.S. Dominican Latino communities. Students will focus on the following issues: political representations of identity; representations of gender and the cultural readings of "machismo"; the role of art and other forms of cultural expression in shaping identity; cultural criticism of poems as a way to understand culture and the politics of marginality and forms of political mobilization. Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 373 | AFRO-HISPANIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course in contemporary literature will seek to determine what distinguishes the Afro-Hispanic novel, short story, drama or poetry from other works in these genres written in Spanish. Students will read original works in order to analyze how the use of language, imagery and narrative voice reflect the experience of people of African descent in the Spanish-speaking world as seen (or heard) in the text and context of these works. In addition, students will explore how race, class, politics and culture interact and find expression in Afro-Hispanic literature. (Literature category #2: Spanish literature from the Enlightenment to the present or Literature category #4: Latin America from Modernism to the present). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 374 | LITERATURE OF THE CONQUEST | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the early encounters between Europe and the Americas. Students will analyze letters, reports, histories, and political tracts from European, Amerindian, and Mestizo sources. Students will also consider some visual documents, such as images from the Lienzo de Tlaxcala and early maps. Typical areas of focus include the initial contact (Columbus), Mexico (Cortes, Diaz del Castillo, the Florentine Codex), Peru (Xerez, "El Inca" Garcilaso, Guaman Poma de Ayala), and the sixteenth-century debates over the wars of conquest (Las Casas, Sepulveda). Topics include the role of these texts as instruments of empire, strategies of representation, strategies of resistance to imperialism, the role of women in the conquest, debates over what constitutes a "just" war, and the relevance of these texts for modern Latin American identities. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 375 | LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE FROM INDEPENDENCE TO MODERNISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course in Spanish literature will introduce students to the most important literary movements in Hispanic American countries, beginning with the wars of independence from Spain until the last part of 19th century. Special attention will be given to authors such as Jose Marti, Jorge Ibsen, Andres Bello and Ruben Dario, among others. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 376 | SOR JUANA INES DE LA CRUZ | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course in literature will explore the main works of the most influential Mexican poet of the Colonial period, Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz (1648-1695). One of the major themes in Sor Juana's work is the right of women to education. Sor Juana wrote poetry, plays, and essays in seventeenth-century Mexico, a society in which women's intellectual inquiry and access to knowledge was an unsafe endeavor and controlled by patriarchal hierarchies. Students will examine the relationship between politics, gender and writing in the context of the historical period, and analyze the spaces and borders occupied and visited by Sor Juana's lyric, ludic, astronomical, polemical, theatrical, theological, cosmological, culinary, colonial, and criollo writings. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 377 | PERUVIAN REALITIES IN A MULTICULTURAL SOCIETY: HISTORY, CULTURE, POLITICS, VIOLENCE & SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This interdisciplinary course will introduce students to the history, culture, politics, and general life of the peoples of Peru. Through an exploration of a vast array of interdisciplinary readings, visual arts and films, students will gain a deep understanding of Peru's history from its extraordinary pre-Columbian civilizations to its citizens' twenty-first century post civil war struggles to achieve dignity and justice in a multicultural, multilingual and multiethnic nation where Andean, Amazonian, African, Asian and European traditions meet. As a consequence of immense economic and social inequalities, Peru has a long history of violence that resulted in an internal war that ended recently. Particular attention will be given to contemporary developments in terms of the interaction between culture and politics. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism or Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present)). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 378 | FOUNDATIONAL FICTIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the relationship of national consolidation and romantic novels. This course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative "Foundational Fictions" in 19th-century Latin American literature. Students will examine how the construction of gender and race in these novels portrays the quest to forge new national identities. At the same time, students will analyze how the novels use their characters' romantic relationships to suggest their nation's political relationships, and thus contribute to the discourse on building the new societies that would replace Spain's colonial empire and serve as a prototype for the modern Latin American state. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 391 | SOCIOLINGUISTICS OF HERITAGE LANGUAGE LITERACY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A heritage language learner has been described as "a student who is raised in a home where a non-English language is spoken, who speaks or merely understands the heritage language, and who is to some degree bilingual in English and the heritage language" (Valdes 2000:1). It is well-documented that for such students, literacy in the heritage language is often lost within just one or two generations. In this third course of DePaul's series on Latino Literacy, students will identify the prominent sociolinguistic issues that intersect with heritage language literacy. Through the reading of selected bibliography and guided reflections on both personal and service learning experiences, each student will arrive at a personalized assessment of the key topics affecting heritage language literacy. Possible topics include language socialization, language ideology and identities, and issues related to language contact with English such as code-switching and language shift/loss. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 392 | TRANSNATIONALISM AND SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the overarching theme of violence across different Latin American social realities. This course uses an interdisciplinary approach to explore the experience of revolution and repression in contemporary Latin America. Focusing on twentieth-century literature, films and culture, students will explore the making and unmaking of revolutionary political projects and human rights issues, the construction of distinct forms of cultural resistance and the different expressions of violence. (Literature category #4: Latin America from Modernism to the present). One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 393 | LATINO MEDIA AND DIGITAL CULTURE LITERACY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore the role and impact of the media in the Latino community, and how, in this context, Latinos view themselves and how others view them. Students will explore Latino communities' participation as creators and consumers of popular and media culture. Students will examine media organizations and their participants in their role in shaping popular culture. Finally, students will study the various ways that Latino communities exercise cultural citizenship as a form of resistance and in their struggle for just representation in an increasingly global society. This is an upper-level undergraduate/graduate inter-disciplinary seminar that draws on readings in cultural economy, political economy, cultural studies, history and sociology. Students who choose to take the class for JYEL credit are required to do a minimum of 25 hours of service. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 394 | LATINO CULTURAL LITERACY AND COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores local Chicago histories and institutions and their engagement in politics and advocacy for Latinos. This is a Junior Year Experiential Learning (JRYR) course, and as such requires 25 hours of service. One of the following courses recommended: SPN 201, SPN 202, SPN 205 or SPN 206 (or equivalent or permission of instructor).

SPN 395 | FOREIGN LANGUAGES ACROSS THE CURRICULUM | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The two credit FLAC course allows students to enrich their experience in the co-required course through added reading, writing, listening and speaking activities in Spanish. Students must have the equivalent of 106 or higher ability in Spanish to take this two credit component. Please contact the Department of Modern Languages if you have questions about this courses or about language placement.

SPN 451 | SPANISH IN THE U.S. | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

Spanish is the second most widely spoken language in the United States; it has been spoken in this country longer than English has. This course is an introduction to the varieties of Spanish spoken in the US. Students will examine the evolution of the phonological, grammatical, and lexical linguistic system of the Spanish of US Latino/a communities. Students will also explore how sociolinguistic concepts such as bilingualism, diglossia, code-switching, linguistic variation, linguistic change, standard vs. non- prestigious varieties, language attitudes, manifest in the US Spanish context. This course is intended to familiarize the students with issues of language use in social context. Students will discuss results of research on the relationship between language and society in US Spanish-speaking communities. They will become familiar with sociolinguistic concepts. Students also acquire experience in carrying out sociolinguistic research. SPN 242 strongly recommended.

SPN 452 | SPANISH PHONOLOGY AND PHONETICS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This is an introductory course on the nature and structure of the sound system of the Spanish language. This course is offered to students who, having studied the language for at least two years, need a solid grounding of Spanish phonology and—in the case of non-native speakers of Spanish—a systematic practice of correct pronunciation patterns. It is also a requirement for Spanish majors. After a thorough study of the Spanish sound system, students will explore some related topics such as Spanish orthography, the history of the Spanish language, its place among Romance, Iberian, and American languages, and its rich dialectal variation. Lectures and discussions will be based on the required textbook and on additional materials (both written and audio). This class will be conducted in Spanish.

SPN 476 | SOR JUANA INES DE LA CRUZ | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This advanced course in literature will explore the main works of the most influential Mexican poet of the Colonial period, Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz (1648-1695). One of the major themes in Sor Juana's work is the right of women to education. Sor Juana wrote poetry, plays, and essays in seventeenth-century Mexico, a society in which women's intellectual inquiry and access to knowledge was an unsafe endeavor and controlled by patriarchal hierarchies. Students will examine the relationship between politics, gender and writing in the context of the historical period, and analyze the spaces and borders occupied and visited by Sor Juana's lyric, ludic, astronomical, polemical, theatrical, theological, cosmological, culinary, colonial, and criollo writings.

SPN 477 | PERUVIAN REALITIES IN A MULTICULTURAL SOCIETY: HISTORY, CULTURE, POLITICS, VIOLENCE & SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This interdisciplinary course will introduce students to the history, culture, politics, and general life of the peoples of Peru. Through an exploration of a vast array of interdisciplinary readings, visual arts and films, students will gain a deep understanding of Peru's history from its extraordinarily pre-Columbian civilizations to its citizens' twenty-first century post civil war struggles to achieve dignity and justice in a multicultural, multilingual and multiethnic nation where Andean, Amazonian, African, Asian and European traditions meet. As a consequence of immense economic and social inequalities, Peru has a long history of violence. This resulted in an internal war that ended ten years ago. Particular attention will be given to contemporary developments in terms of the interaction between culture and politics. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism/Literature category #4 (Latin American literature from Modernism to present)).

SPN 478 | FOUNDATIONAL FICTIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This advanced course in Latin American literature explores the relationship of national consolidation and romantic novels. This course is based on the reading, discussion and critique of major representative "Foundational Fictions" in 19th century Latin American literature. Students will examine how the construction of gender and race in these novels portrays the quest to forge new national identity/ies. At the same time, students will analyze how the novels use their characters' romantic relationships to suggest their nation's political relationships, and thus contribute to the discourse on building the new society/ies that would replace Spain's colonial empire and serve as a prototype for the modern Latin American state. (Literature category #3: Latin American literature from origins through Romanticism).

SPN 491 | THE SOCIOLINGUISTICS OF HERITAGE LANGUAGE LITERACY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A heritage language learner has been described as "a student who is raised in a home where a non-English language is spoken, who speaks or merely understands the heritage language, and who is to some degree bilingual in English and the heritage language" (Valdes 2000:1). It is well-documented that for such students, literacy in the heritage language is often lost within just one or two generations. In this third course of DePaul's series on Latino Literacy, students will identify the prominent sociolinguistic issues that intersect with heritage language literacy. Through the reading of selected bibliography and guided reflections on both personal and service learning experiences, each student will arrive at a personalized assessment of the key topics affecting heritage language literacy. Possible topics include language socialization, language ideology and identities, and issues related to language contact with English such as code-switching and language shift/loss.

SPN 492 | TRANSNATIONALISM AND SOCIAL JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the overarching theme of violence across different Latin American social realities. This course uses an interdisciplinary approach to explore the experience of revolution and repression in contemporary Latin America. Focusing on twentieth-century literature, films and culture, students will explore the making and unmaking of revolutionary political projects and human rights issues, the construction of distinct forms of cultural resistance and the different expressions of violence.

Strategies and methods for addressing the needs of middle and high school students with literacy deficits will also be addressed. Emphasis will be placed on understanding literacy development PK-12, utilizing the Common Core standards, analyzing and applying research-based instructional practices, and using assessment to guide instruction to meet the need of diverse literacy learners (at-risk and with disabilities). The course also examines informal assessments to determine student progress in reading and, spelling.

SER 301 or SER 346 is a prerequisite or a corequisite for this class.

SER 315 | TEACHING LITERACY FIELD EXPERIENCE LAB | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this lab, candidates provide reading instruction to exceptional students and use informal assessments and progress monitoring to guide instructional practices and differentiation. Supervision, coaching, and mentoring in implementing effective instructional strategies for struggling readers are provided by program faculty. The course develops the concept of documenting impact on student learning. This experience is offered in an on-campus facility that serves at-risk literacy learners and students with disabilities. (2 credit hours)

SER 314 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 316 | TEACHING LITERACY TO EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS II: INSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on literacy development for diverse, at-risk, and exceptional, learners in third grade and higher, including those with mild-moderate disabilities. Differences in reading abilities will be examined in light of providing appropriate, effective, and meaningful literacy instruction. Philosophical approaches, theoretical models, assessment measures, and practical implications for working with exceptional readers will be analyzed. Attention will be given to the literacy learning process, Common Core standards, the interaction of reading and learning in the content areas, and the connections between reading and writing in the upper grades. The course continues the examination of informal assessment to determine monitor exceptional student progress in reading, spelling, and writing. Uses of technology in literacy learning will also be examined.

SER 317 | TEACHING LITERACY LAB II | 1 quarter hour
(Undergraduate)

In this Lab, taken with LSI 316, candidates provide reading and writing instruction to exceptional students in the upper grades and use informal assessments and progress monitoring to guide instructional practices and differentiation. Supervision, coaching, and mentoring in implementing effective instructional strategies for exceptional students are provided by program faculty. The course develops the concept of documenting impact on student learning. This experience is offered in an on-campus facility that serves at-risk literacy learners and students with mild-moderate disabilities. (1 credit hour)

SER 320 | COLLABORATION IN SCHOOLS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course covers theoretical models as well as ethical and practical strategies for collaborating with professionals and paraprofessionals in schools and communities as well as students with disabilities and their families. Candidates consider models of co-teaching and Response - to - Intervention and learn strategies for effective collaboration with general education teachers and training of paraprofessionals. Candidates also consider the dynamics of families and of schools and how to plan for and initiate family involvement to maximize the learning experience of the student with disabilities. Attention is given to interpersonal communication strategies and how to use communication strategies to foster collaboration. This course requires 10 hours of field experience. (SER 301 or SER 346) and (SER 303, SER 321, SER 322 or SER 323) are prerequisites for this class.

SER 321 | FORMAL ASSESSMENT IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course considers the theoretical, legal, ethical, and technical aspects of formal assessment in special education as well as models of nondiscriminatory assessment in the context of the requirements of special education law. Candidates gain knowledge of a variety of formal assessments including their purposes, characteristics, and limitations. They learn how to select, adapt, administer, score, interpret, and communicate the results of class-wide and individual assessments. Attention is given to collaborative assessment and educational planning based on assessment results, particularly the development IEP goals, objectives, and recommendation for instruction.

SER 301 or SER 346 is a prerequisite or a corequisite for this class.

SER 322 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH SIGNIFICANT DISABILITIES I: ACADEMICS, LIFE SKILLS, & TRANSITION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides the theoretical and practical basis for teaching academic and life skills to students with more significant disabilities as well as the theoretical and practical aspects of educational transitions for students with disabilities. Candidates will learn the principle of partial participation and how to align curriculum with state learning goals as well as strategies for teaching academic skills to the greatest possible extent while keeping goals high but attainable so that learners can succeed. Candidates will also learn how to balance teaching of academics with independent living skills, participation in community activities, personal safety, health, and relationship skills, self-management, and decision-making. Candidates learn outcomes-based special education planning for early transitions, transitions between educational levels, and transition to work or higher education.

SER 301 or SER 346 is a prerequisite or a corequisite for this class.

SER 323 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH SIGNIFICANT DISABILITIES II: COMMUNICATION & SOCIAL SKILLS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course offers strategies for assessing and teaching oral language and communication skills to students with more significant disabilities, including ways to increase communication and generalize across settings. Candidates learn how to employ technology to aid communication, including selection and use of augmentive and alternative communication (AAC) devices. Equal attention is given to the theoretical and developmental aspects of behavior and social skills as well as curriculum and strategies for teaching social skills. Training and support of paraprofessionals related to communication and social skills are also covered. This course includes 10 hours of field experience.

SER 301 or SER 346 is a prerequisite or a corequisite for this class.

SER 324 | PRACTICUM: INCLUSION SETTING | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Two school morning per week for eight weeks of supervised practicum (40 hours total). In this course, candidates are introduced to teaching in a general education inclusion classroom. Candidates will interact with students and will plan and conduct small-group and large-group instruction in collaboration with the cooperating teacher. Taken in conjunction with SER 325 Topics in Special Education. Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate practicum placements. (2 credit hours). COREQUISITE: SER 325.

SER 302 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 325 | TOPICS IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will cover professional and ethical standards in special education and other variable topics such as inclusion, technology, managing a resource room, Common Core Standards, and lesson planning for students with disabilities. In addition, the course functions as a seminar for SER 324 Practicum: Inclusion Setting and provides support as candidates participate in practicum experiences. The course continues to develop skills for documenting impact on student learning, improving practice, and using data to drive instruction. COREQUISITE: SER 324. (2 credit hours)

SER 328 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 326 | TRANSITIONAL AND VOCATIONAL PLANNING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the theoretical and practical aspects of educational transitions for students with disabilities. Processes of human change will be considered as well as the importance of networking and collaboration among families, educators, other service providers to facilitate transitions. The course focuses on outcomes-based special education planning for early transitions, transitions between educational levels, and transition to work or higher education. The course includes prioritizing social, vocational and community living goals, IEP transition requirements, and writing transition plans. Attention will be given to vocational assessment, planning, and curricula.

SER 327 | PRACTICUM: SELF-CONTAINED SETTING | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

One school morning per week for eight weeks of supervised practicum (30 hours total). In this course, candidates are introduced to teaching in a self-contained, special education classroom. Candidates will interact with students and plan and conduct 1:1, small-group, and/or large-group instruction in collaboration with the cooperating teacher. Taken in conjunction with SER 328 Contemporary Issues in Special Education. Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate practicum placements. (2 credit hours)

SER 322 or SER 323 is a prerequisites for this class.

SER 328 | CONTEMPORARY ISSUES IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 2 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will review professional and ethical standards in special education and address timely or controversial issues in special education instruction. In addition, this course functions as a seminar for SER 327 Practicum Experience: Self-Contained Setting and provides support as candidates move into practicum experience. The course continues to develop skills for documenting impact on student learning, improving practice, and using data to drive instruction. COREQUISITE: SER 327. (2 credit hours)

SER 322 or SER 323 is a prerequisites for this class.

SER 329 | TEACHING LITERACY IN THE CONTENT AREAS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course addresses the integration of reading, writing, and oral language into the content areas. Candidates learn to assess the reading needs of students in content area courses and to design, select, modify, and evaluate a wide range of materials for the content areas. The course goes beyond teaching a set of isolated generic reading comprehension skills and provides strategies that can be applied across content areas to prepare diverse, at-risk, and exceptional students to read, write, talk, and think critically about complex texts, and to develop positive literacy identities. Attention is given to incorporating Common Core standards into instruction.

SER 314 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 346 | STRATEGIES FOR MAINSTREAMING AND INCLUSION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Focus will be on the practical problems related to the integration of exceptional children and youth into regular classrooms. Identification, characteristics, programs, curricular variations, and techniques for securing maximum development of students with a variety of special needs with emphasis on learning disabilities. The course also covers historical background, as well as current legal and service provision issues, including mainstreaming and inclusion.

An education major or minor or TCH 302 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 383 | STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This seminar course provides support for candidates as they begin their student teaching experience. In addition to and in conjunction with student teaching, candidates will complete a project designed to document their ability to impact student learning based on teaching. This course includes 30 hours of field experience prior to student teaching.

SER 324 and SER 325 are prerequisites for this class.

SER 384 | CAPSTONE IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Designed primarily as a culminating and integrating experience, this course uses a seminar approach to support candidates during student teaching and to help them clarify and reflect upon the relationship of concepts of their major with those in the liberal studies program. Candidates will make connections between their own theoretical and professional orientations, their liberal studies education, and the Urban Professional Multicultural Model.

SER 386 is a corequisite for this class.

SER 385 | STUDENT TEACHING IN SPECIAL EDUCATION: ELEMENTARY | 8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Five school days per week in supervised teaching experience for 8 weeks. Candidates will also attend a student teaching seminar (SER 383 or SER 384). Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate student teaching placements. (8 credit hours)

SER 383 is a corequisite for this class.

SER 386 | STUDENT TEACHING IN SPECIAL EDUCATION: SECONDARY | 12 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Five school days per week in supervised teaching experience for 8 weeks. Candidates will also attend a student teaching capstone seminar (SER 383 or SER 384). Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate student teaching placements. (12 credit hours)

SER 384 is a corequisite for this class.

SER 387 | FOUNDATIONS OF LITERACY AND SPECIAL EDUCATION FOR THE MIDDLE GRADES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Introduction to disabilities and the historical and legal foundations of special education. This course will prepare candidates to address the emotional, social, psychological, and cognitive needs of students with disabilities, with a particular emphasis on addressing the needs of students with reading and learning disabilities at the middle school level, including developmental and remedial instruction and support. This course counts toward Reading Teacher endorsement. Co-requisites for this course are MGE 321 and MGE 331. In this course, students will: 1.

MGE 300, MGE 301 and Junior standing are prerequisites for this class.

SER 402 | INSTRUCTION AND DIFFERENTIATION IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course provides an introduction to teaching exceptional students with mild, moderate and severe disabilities and includes state learning standards, curriculum, assessment, planning, instruction in the content areas, accommodations, grouping, and technology for diverse students with disabilities in a variety of settings. Candidates learn to use research and assessment data to guide planning and differentiate instruction in the content areas. Applied activities will focus on teaching science and social studies to student with disabilities K-12.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 403 | CLASSROOM AND BEHAVIOR MANAGEMENT IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course covers theoretical approaches to and associated strategies for classroom and behavior management, the development of supportive learning environments to maximize motivation, attention, and engagement for exceptional learners in a variety of educational settings. Candidates learn to use assessment data to understand behavior and guide selection and application of principles of social-emotional learning and classroom/behavior in culturally and linguistically diverse classrooms. Candidates are introduced to social/emotional learning standards, functional behavioral assessment (FBA) and behavior intervention plans (BIP), as well as how to monitor growth and development in targeted areas. Strategies to increase the individual's self-awareness, management, control, reliance, and esteem and decrease self-injurious behaviors are considered.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 405 | TEACHING LITERACY TO EXCEPTIONAL LEARNERS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course focuses on understanding literacy development in general, and for diverse, at-risk, and exceptional learners with mild-moderate disabilities, specifically. Differences in reading abilities will be examined in light of providing appropriate, effective, and meaningful literacy instruction. Philosophical approaches, theoretical models, assessment measures, and strategies and techniques for working with exceptional learners will be analyzed. Attention will be given to the literacy learning process, including the interaction between language, reading, and writing abilities. An overview of informal assessments that can be used to monitor exceptional student progress in reading, spelling, and writing will be provided and the uses of technology in literacy learning examined.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 409 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH SIGNIFICANT DISABILITIES | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course offers strategies for assessing and teaching academic, life, communication, and social skills to students with more significant disabilities, including transition and vocational planning. Candidates will learn how to align curriculum with state learning standards and how to balance the teaching of academics with independent living skills, participation in community activities, and personal safety and health. Candidates will learn to manage physical and health concerns as well as learn how to employ technology to aid communication, including selection and use of augmentive and alternative communication (AAC) devices. In addition, candidates will train support staff in each of these areas.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 410 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS TO EXCEPTIONAL LEARNERS | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course provides the theoretical, content, and pedagogical knowledge and skills for teaching mathematics through problem solving across all grade levels to diverse exceptional learners. Candidates review and deepen their own knowledge of basic math content with emphasis on number, number systems, operations, fractions, decimals, percent and measurement, algebra and geometry. They learn how to develop exceptional students' abilities to think and reason as well as build computation and problem-solving skills. Attention is given to Illinois Common Core standards and how to support exceptional students when introducing new concepts and correcting misconceptions. The course provides a comprehensive model for effective instruction for exceptional learners that include using assessment data to plan instruction and match instruction to exceptional student needs, flexible grouping, skilled content delivery, progress monitoring, and technology to support learning.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 416 | LITERACY PRACTICUM IN SPECIAL EDUCATION I | 2 quarter hours

(Graduate)

In this course, candidates provide literacy (i.e., language, reading, spelling, writing) instruction to exceptional students and use informal assessments and progress monitoring to guide instructional practices and differentiation. Supervision, coaching, and mentoring in implementing effective instructional strategies for exceptional students is provided by program faculty. The course develops the concept of documenting impact on student learning. Faculty advisors and the Director of Field Experience and Student teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate placements. (2 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 417 | PRACTICUM IN SPECIAL EDUCATION II | 2 quarter hours

(Graduate)

In this field-based course, candidates are introduced to teaching in a general education inclusion classroom. Candidates will interact with students and will plan and conduct small-group and large-group instruction in collaboration with the cooperating teacher. Faculty advisors and the Director of Field Experience and Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate practicum placements. (2 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 418 | PRACTICUM IN SPECIAL EDUCATION III | 2 quarter hours

(Graduate)

In this field-based course, candidates are introduced to teaching in a self-contained, special education classroom. Candidates will interact with students and will plan and conduct small-group and large-group instruction in collaboration with the cooperating teacher. Faculty advisors and the Director of Field Experience and Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate practicum placements. (2 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 419 | TEACHING LITERACY LAB | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, candidates provide literacy (i.e., language, reading, spelling, writing) instruction to exceptional students and use informal assessments and progress monitoring to guide instructional practices and differentiation. Supervision, coaching, and mentoring in implementing effective instructional strategies for exceptional students is provided by program faculty. The course develops the concept of documenting impact on student learning. This experience is offered in an on-campus facility that serves at-risk literacy learners and students with mild-moderate disabilities. (4 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 421 | FORMAL ASSESSMENT IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course considers the theoretical, legal, ethical, and technical aspects of formal assessment in special education as well as models of nondiscriminatory assessment in the context of the requirements of special education law. Candidates gain knowledge of a variety of formal assessments including their purposes, characteristics, and limitations. They learn how to select, adapt, administer, score, interpret, and communicate the results of class-wide and individual assessments. Attention is given to collaborative assessment and educational planning based on assessment results, particularly the development Individual Education Program (IEP) goals, objectives, and recommendation for instruction.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 430 | INTRODUCTION TO READING ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the foundational concepts of reading assessment, with an emphasis on the multiple roles of assessment in today's schools: to evaluate, to classify, and to guide instruction. Students will be introduced to formal and informal measures of reading achievement and development, and will have scaffolded opportunities to administer, interpret, and use results for instructional planning. Additional topics to be covered include characteristics of informal and formal assessment (e.g., test construction, reliability and validity, and non-discriminatory testing), and the roles of assessment in the diagnosis and identification of reading disabilities. Students will be introduced to case report writing to deepen their understanding of reading difficulties as well as to clearly communicate assessment findings to a variety of individuals, including parents.

SER 405 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 431 | FOUNDATIONS OF LITERACY: ASSESSMENT AND INSTRUCTION I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on understanding the foundations of literacy across the grade span, with a particular emphasis on the development of reading abilities among emergent and developing learners (preschool through 3rd grade). The history of theoretical models is explored in relation to current educational policies and practices. Topics include understanding the developmental process, utilizing a variety of informal assessments, and selecting research-based instructional practices. A strong emphasis is placed on designing standards-based lesson plans and the integration of narrative and expository texts to meet the unique needs of individual children, including those with identified disabilities and/or who exhibit learning challenges.

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 432 | DEVELOPING LITERACY: ASSESSMENT AND INSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on the development of literacy across the grade span, with a particular emphasis on the development of written language abilities among students at the intermediate and secondary levels (4th-12th grade). Topics include understanding the developmental process, utilizing a variety of formal and informal assessments, and selecting research-based instructional practices. A strong emphasis is placed on designing standards-based lesson plans to meet the unique needs of individual students. Strategies for providing differentiated instruction and interventions for students who require remediation of foundational skills, including those with identified disabilities and/or who exhibit learning challenges, are also explored.

SER 405 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 433 | ASSESSMENT AND DIAGNOSTIC TEACHING OF READING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to give the student an understanding of the characteristics of children with reading difficulties, the process of diagnostic evaluation, test interpretation and report writing, and strategies for intervention. It is also designed to give practical experience with selected tests used to identify specific reading needs. Emphasis will be given to the use of case study material to analyze and interpret assessment data, write assessment results, and develop instructional recommendations.

SER 430 and status as a Graduate Education student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 434 | LITERATURE FOR SUCCESSFUL AND STRUGGLING READERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will familiarize students with different genres of quality children's literature and how to select and use books that are appropriate and meaningful for children and youth with and without reading disabilities. Students will discuss, analyze, and critique literary elements (author's style of writing, character development, setting, mood, and theme), determine estimated readability levels, and engage in reader response activities that promote critical discussion and a personal interaction with text. Students will become familiar with authors, illustrators, and books that represent diverse cultures, races, ethnic and ability groups, and develop meaningful literature extensions that support various curricular areas, develop literacy skills, and promote an enjoyment of reading.

Status as a student in the Graduate Special Education and Reading Program is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 435 | LITERACY PROGRAMS: CURRICULUM AND COLLABORATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will prepare students to assume a leadership role within a school or district in selecting, implementing, and evaluating literacy instructional programs. Students will be supported in using educational research to inform decision-making and identifying effective methods and curriculum, particularly for students with identified disabilities and/or those who exhibit learning challenges. Approaches to collaborating with relevant stakeholders (e.g., administrators, teachers, school-based professionals, parents, and community members) and advocating for curricular change will also be explored.

SER 405 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 437 | LEADERSHIP AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN LITERACY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

In this course, an emphasis will be placed on developing the necessary skills to support school-based professionals in the effective implementation of literacy instruction and assessment. Applying models of professional development and coaching, students will identify a variety of resources to design professional development activities that include modeling, scaffolding, evaluation, and reflection. Aspects of change theory and its application to creating school-wide professional development plans will also be examined.

SER 405, SER 542 and SER 543 and status as a Graduate Education student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 438 | LITERATURE-BASED AND CONTENT AREA LITERACY INSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course addresses the integration of reading, writing, and oral language into the content areas. Candidates learn to assess the reading needs of students in content area courses and to design, select, modify, and evaluate a wide range of materials for the content areas. Attention is given to the characteristics of engaging, quality literature and well-structured, accessible expository texts, as well as applying these qualities to select books to engage K-12 students of a variety of backgrounds and skill levels. The course goes beyond teaching a set of isolated generic reading comprehension skills and provides explicit, research-based instructional strategies that can be applied across content areas to prepare students to read, write, talk, and think critically about complex texts, as well as to develop positive literacy identities and motivation to read.

SER 405 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 440 | SURVEY OF EXCEPTIONAL LEARNERS: PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A survey of exceptional learners and characteristics of students with both high- and low-incidence disabilities, with consideration of placements appropriate for children with such disabilities. Emphasis on historical, theoretical, practical and legal implications and issues. The course also addresses the importance of developing and maintaining collaborative relationships with parents and professionals in order to maximize the academic, social, and emotional benefits of all learners.

SER 442 | SURVEY AND CHARACTERISTICS OF THE EXCEPTIONAL LEARNER | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A survey of exceptional learners and characteristics of students with both high and low incidence disabilities, with consideration of alternative placements appropriate for children with various disabilities including the learning disabled. Emphasis on historical, theoretical, practical and legal implications and issues, as well as on the roles of special education professionals, including consultation and collaboration, in inclusion of exceptional learners.

SER 443 | PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTS AND METHODS IN DIAGNOSIS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Principles of measurement and test construction including an evaluation of standardized test instruments. Principles of broad-based assessment involving case history, criterion-referenced tests and informal assessment. Emphasis on understanding the strengths and limitations of a wide variety of assessment instruments.

SER 446 | PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATION OF THE EXCEPTIONAL CHILD | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Identification, characteristics, programs, schools, curricular variations, techniques for securing maximal development. Includes historical background, current legal and service provision issues including mainstreaming and inclusion.

(TCH 402 or T&L 424) and status as a Graduate Education student or status as a TEACH student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 456 | ADVANCED ISSUES AND STRATEGIES IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course will examine current trends, issues, and strategies in the field of special education. This is an advanced course that will consider topics related to inclusion, overrepresentation, and transition services such as modifying curriculum, positive behavioral supports, collaboration and co-teaching, teacher scheduling, student scheduling, behavioral and academic data collection within general education classrooms, communication with families, developing and implementing IEP's, and managing paraprofessionals. Prerequisite: LSI 442 or LSI 446 or equivalent.

SER 457 | SEMINAR AND RESEARCH IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course examines current research in special education including topics such as the social construction of special education; the assumptions of deficit vs. difference models of educational services; the overrepresentation of students of color and students from lower socioeconomic status backgrounds in special education; placement settings, inclusion, and service delivery models; and issues related to the short and long-term effects of special education on the lives of students with disabilities. Students select and pursue a topic of research interest and complete a professional portfolio.

SER 458, SER 467, SER 468, SER 469 are prerequisites for this course.

SER 458 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH HIGH INCIDENCE DISABILITIES I | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Introduction to the theoretical and practical approaches to instruction for students with high incidence disabilities across ages and levels of severity. Emphasis on developing an understanding of supportive learning environments, classroom and behavior management; developing collaborative practices with multiple service providers and families to meet the needs of diverse learners with high incidence disabilities. Strategies and materials for improving the social, emotional, and academic adjustment and functioning of students with high incidence disabilities are examined. Includes teaching social and emotional curricula; developing and implementing functional behavioral assessment; and monitoring growth and development in targeted areas. Strategies to increase the individual's self awareness, self-management, self control, self reliance, and self esteem are considered.

(SER 440 and Learning Behavior Specialist 1) or (SER 442 and SEE program) are prerequisites for this class.

SER 461 | COLLABORATIVE PRACTICE AND SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The purpose of this course is to develop pre-service teachers' understanding of the importance of developing and maintaining collaborative relationships with parents and professionals in educational environments. Students will develop an understanding of professional and legal responsibilities, networks, organizations, and services available for students with disabilities and their families. Students will also examine various educational models for working collaboratively with teachers, parents, and support personnel in classrooms and schools. Students will articulate a personal philosophy and strategies for working collaboratively with families, teachers, paraprofessionals, and other professionals within educational environments.

SER 462 | INSTRUCTIONAL STRATEGIES FOR STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES I: ACCESSING GENERAL EDUCATION CURRICULUM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses general theories of learning, instructional modifications, accommodations, grouping strategies, technology, and assessments used for helping to provide students with disabilities access to general education curricula. Course topics will focus on the effectiveness of these strategies for working with students with mild, moderate, and severe disabilities. Students will begin to articulate a personal philosophy and approaches designed to enhance the educational experiences of children and youth with disabilities and they will begin to examine the relationship between schooling and long term outcomes.

SER 464 | CONTEMPORARY ISSUES IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Current issues and problems in special education and reading will be discussed. Focus will be current research and best practices.

SER 465 | INDUCTION INTO THE FIELD OF EDUCATION I | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Designed primarily as a way to support student teachers through edTPA, this course utilizes a seminar approach to help students clarify their understanding of issues related to special education, general education, and teaching in urban schools. All students will prepare a an electronic portfolio based on planning for instruction and assessment, instructing and engaging the focus learner, and assessing learning.

SER 466 | INDUCTION INTO THE FIELD OF EDUCATION II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Designed primarily as a culminating course experience at the graduate level, this course utilizes a seminar approach to help students clarify their understanding of issues related to special education, general education, and teaching in urban schools. All students will prepare a portfolio based on their experiences within the graduate program. These portfolios will contain evidence of each student's development during the program and students will make connections between their own theoretical, philosophical, and professional orientations and the Urban Professional Multicultural Model.

SER 467 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH HIGH INCIDENCE DISABILITIES II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Continued study of the theoretical and practical approaches to instruction for students with high incidence disabilities across ages and levels of severity. Translation of diagnostic information into teaching strategies and development of an instructional plan (IEP) including transition needs. Emphasis on understanding theoretical models of literacy, literacy development, instructional strategies, and adjusting literacy instruction to meet the needs of diverse learners. Principles of diagnostic teaching will be discussed. Specific teaching techniques and materials will be reviewed, including appropriate uses of technology. (SER 440 and Learning Behavior Specialist 1) or (SER 442 and SEE program) are prerequisites for this class.

SER 468 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH LOW INCIDENCE DISABILITIES I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to the theoretical and practical approaches to instruction of children with low incidence disabilities including functional assessment and instructional strategies, curricular options and adaptations, as well as levels of participation and accommodation in the general curriculum. Emphasis will be placed on understanding theoretical models of language development and communication, instructional strategies for language and communication, and adjusting language instruction to meet the needs of diverse learners. Candidates will explore individualized planning (IEPs), transition needs, integration of related services into the instructional program, and strategies and materials for improving the social, emotional, and academic functioning of diverse students with low-incidence disabilities. (SER 440 and Learning Behavior Specialist 1) or (SER 442 and SEE program) are prerequisites for this class.

SER 469 | TEACHING STUDENTS WITH LOW INCIDENCE DISABILITIES II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Continued study of the theoretical and practical approaches to instruction for diverse students with low incidence disabilities. Focuses on addressing the intellectual, educational, physical, motor, health, social, and transitional needs of diverse students with more severe low incidence disabilities. Examination of etiological factors, growth, development, and long-term outcomes. Developing collaborative efforts with family and multiple care and service providers is addressed. Provides strategies to facilitate maintenance and generalization of both academic and non-academic skills across learning environments. Includes experiences with assistive technology, community-based instruction, and designing and implementing a functional curriculum when needed. (SER 440 and Learning Behavior Specialist 1) or (SER 442 and SEE program) are prerequisites for this class.

SER 470 | STUDENT TEACHING IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

Five school days per week in supervised teaching experience for 12-weeks. Candidates will also attend a student teaching seminar (SER 471) one day per week where they will discuss special education topics related to this experience. Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate student teaching placements. (6 credit hours) .Status as a Graduate Education student and SER 440, 402, 403, 409, 410, 421, 416, 417, 418, 419 (or equivalent) are prerequisites for this class

SER 471 | STUDENT TEACHING IN SPECIAL EDUCATION SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This seminar course provides support for candidates as they begin their student teaching experience. In addition and in conjunction with student teaching, candidates will complete a project designed to document a candidate's ability to impact student learning based on three to five days of teaching (edTPA).

.Status as a Graduate Education student and SER 440, 402, 403, 409, 410, 421, 416, 417, 418, 419 (or equivalent) are prerequisites for this class

SER 475 | METHODS OF TEACHING EARLY CHILDHOOD STUDENTS WITH LOW INCIDENCE DISABILITIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will focus on examining the developmental and learning characteristics of young children with low incident disabilities. In specific, this course will focus on educating early childhood students with Autism Spectrum Disorders and those with Intellectual Disabilities. One of the primary goals of this course is to understand the learning needs of these children, and examine and evaluate various educational and therapeutic methods of working with them. A major part of this course will be devoted to characteristics associated with and interventions for children with Autism Spectrum Disorders.

SER 476 | SPECIAL EDUCATION CURRICULUM AND STRATEGIES FOR EARLY CHILDHOOD: HIGH INCIDENCE DISABILITIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Study of the theoretical and practical approaches to instruction for young children with high incidence disabilities. Emphasis placed on the development of supportive learning environments, using special curricular and behavioral management strategies for all early childhood settings; application of collaborative practices with multiple service providers and families to meet the needs of diverse learners with high incidence disabilities. Strategies and materials for improving the social, emotional, and academic adjustment and functioning of young children with high incidence disabilities are examined. Includes teaching social and emotional curricula; implementing functional behavioral assessment; and monitoring growth and development in targeted areas. Strategies to increase the young child are self-awareness, self-management, self control, self reliance, and self esteem are considered. Application of diagnostic information into teaching strategies and implementation of an instructional plan (IEP) is a central tenet of the course. (Pre-requisite: SCG 404 and T&L 427) 25 clock hours for Level II Experience.

SER 487 | FOUNDATIONS OF LITERACY AND SPECIAL EDUCATION FOR THE MIDDLE GRADES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Introduction to disabilities and the historical and legal foundations of special education. This course will prepare candidates to address the emotional, social, psychological, and cognitive needs of students with disabilities, with a particular emphasis on addressing the needs of students with reading and learning disabilities at the middle school level, including developmental and remedial instruction and support. This course counts toward Reading Teacher endorsement. Co-requisites for this course are MGE 421 and MGE 431. In this course, students will: 1. MGE 401 is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 542 | PRACTICUM IN LITERACY ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This practicum course provides students with an opportunity to apply theory to practice in assessing and teaching struggling literacy learners. Under the supervision of program faculty, students are responsible for completing a comprehensive assessment battery with a struggling literacy learner, interpreting results across assessments, developing and implementing an instructional plan, writing a case report, and discussing results with family members and/or other stakeholders.

SER 430 and status as a Graduate Education student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 543 | PRACTICUM IN LITERACY INSTRUCTION AND ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This practicum course provides students with an opportunity to apply theory to practice in teaching struggling literacy learners. Under the supervision of program faculty, students are responsible for developing, implementing, and evaluating an individual learning plan for a client(s) that includes on-going assessment of learning objectives. Students write a case report, summarizing outcomes of instructional sessions, to communicate progress towards goals to a variety of individuals, including parents.

SER 405 and status as a GRAD Education student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 544 | PRACTICUM IN LITERACY INSTRUCTION, ASSESSMENT, AND COLLABORATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This practicum course provides students with an opportunity to apply theory to practice in teaching struggling literacy learners. Under the supervision of program faculty, students are responsible for developing, implementing, and evaluating an individual learning plan for a client(s) that includes on-going assessment of learning objectives. Students write a case report, summarizing outcomes of instructional sessions, to communicate progress towards goals to a variety of individuals, including parents. Collaboration with peers for professional growth, which involves providing feedback on each other's practices, is also emphasized.

SER 405, SER 543 and status as a Graduate Education student are prerequisites for this class.

SER 548 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN READING AND OTHER LEARNING DISABILITIES | 2-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

REREQUISITE(S): Permission of instructor, department chair and associate dean. (2 credit hours)

SER 549 | THESIS RESEARCH IN SPECIALIZED INSTRUCTION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A Master of Arts candidate conducts original research, writes a thesis, and presents an oral defense before a committee of faculty members. PREREQUISITE(S): SCG 410 and approved thesis proposal.

SER 552 | PRACTICUM EXPERIENCE WITH HIGH INCIDENCE DISABILITIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Six weeks of supervised field experience in a cooperating school working with students with high incidence disabilities, together with structured opportunities for feedback and discussion of issues and problems encountered.

SER 440, SER 458, and SER 467 are prerequisites for this class.

SER 553 | PRACTICUM EXPERIENCE WITH LOW INCIDENCE DISABILITIES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Six weeks of supervised field experience in a cooperating school working with low incidence disabilities, together with structured opportunities for feedback and discussion of issues and problems encountered.

SER 585 | STUDENT TEACHING IN SPECIAL EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Five school days per week in supervised teaching experience for a full academic quarter. Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate student teaching placements. Permission required. (4 credit hours)

SER 586 | STUDENT TEACHING IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Five school days per week in supervised teaching experience for a full academic quarter. Faculty advisors and the Director of Student Teaching, working in conjunction with individual students, will determine appropriate student teaching placements. Permission required. (4 credit hours)

SER 597 | EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION SPECIAL EDUCATION PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Supervised teaching in a cooperating school serving young children with disabilities for three hundred clock hours; arranged in collaboration with supervising faculty member and the Field Experience Office. Candidates will reflect upon their teaching experiences with young children with disabilities; collaborate with colleagues and instructor to identify alternative strategies for problematic situations. Application and approval required. Open only to DePaul students.

SER 600 | REGISTERED STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Registration in this course is open to students who are not registered for any other courses but need to complete requirements/assignments for previously taken courses. It provides access to University facilities. Permission of advisor required. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

SER 606 | REVIEW OF LITERATURE | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

This paper will give students the opportunity to develop and demonstrate written competence in a subfield of their disciplines and to enhance life-long learning. Specifically, they will broaden their knowledge base and inform themselves about a topic, issue, theory, etc., reviewing and synthesizing existing literature. To do so, students will need a variety of bibliographic skills including searching data bases. In other words, students will need to be able to ask and answer such questions as "What is known about? What are major issues and themes?" (0 credit hours)

SER 607 | INTEGRATIVE PAPER | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will observe and/or participate in the reciprocal interaction of theory and practice, by investigating actual practice in the field as it relates to theory. This might take the form of investigating how a particular theory is applied in the field, developing a practical application of a theory, or conversely, developing/refining a theory based on investigations made in the field. In other words, as graduates encounter new theories and practices they will need to be able to investigate and evaluate them, asking and answering questions about "How theories work." (0 credit hours)

SER 608 | CAPSTONE IN SPECIALIZED INSTRUCTION | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Culminating experience(s) that help(s) students acquire the qualities of professionalism and leadership needed to play a significant role in one's professional education community. Students are expected to situate and understand educational issues in a larger context; keep current in and be able to organize and present a body of research on an education-related question; connect research with practical, professional activity; demonstrate mastery of a sub-field of a discipline; write in a format that meets accepted scholarly criteria and participate in an ongoing professional conversation. A final product such as master's paper(s), comprehensive exam, or collection of professional work products is required. (0 credit hours)

SER 625 | CANDIDACY CULMINATING PROJECT (STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING) | 0 quarter hours(Graduate)

Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing culminating projects for their program of study, including theses, papers, and final portfolios. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of advisor required. Registration limited to three terms. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

Speech Language Pathology (SLP)

SLP 101 | INTRODUCTION TO COMMUNICATION SCIENCES AND DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Overview of the field of communication and its disorders with emphasis on speech-language pathology and audiology as a profession; current requirements for professional practice; professional ethics; definition, identification, and classification of disorders of hearing, speech, language, cognition and swallowing. Students will acquire 5 clinical observation hours in this course.

SLP 210 | PHONETICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course examines the articulatory, acoustic, and linguistic properties of speech. Instruction in using the International Phonetic Alphabet for phonetic transcription is provided.

SLP 310 | NORMAL CHILD LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An overview of normal language acquisition, focusing on theories, experimental findings and milestones in typically developing children will be addressed. Students will acquire 5 clinical observation hours in this course.

SLP 320 | INTRODUCTION TO SPEECH SOUND DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Study of phonological and articulatory development in children, as well as the etiology, symptomatology, evaluation, and treatment of articulation and phonological disorders will be examined. Students will acquire 5 clinical observation hours in this course.

SLP 330 | INTRODUCTION TO AUDIOLOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Review of the history of audiology as a profession; study of symptoms, causes, and treatment of hearing losses; and principles and application of basic audiometry.

SLP 332 | AURAL REHABILITATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Examination of methods for assessing and treating hearing disorders in adults and children, as well as conditions that result in hearing loss.

SLP 340 | ANATOMY & PHYSIOLOGY OF THE SPEECH, LANGUAGE, SWALLOWING & HEARING MECHANISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Study of anatomic and physiologic mechanisms underlying respiration, phonation, and articulatory mechanisms. Overview of the peripheral auditory system, neuroanatomy, and normal swallowing will also be addressed.

SLP 342 | SPEECH AND HEARING SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Consideration of the physiology of the speech production, psychoacoustics and perceptual aspects of speech.

SLP 400 | INTERPROFESIONAL EDUCATION | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Interprofessional education is defined as occasions when two or more professions learn with, from and about each other to improve collaboration and quality of patient care. This course focuses on developing the core competencies that define the skills and interprofessional behaviors that health professionals across the continuum need in order to participate effectively in collaborative practice and team-based care. This course will afford students the opportunity to work with other pre-professional students as well with patient simulation activities.

SLP 401 | NEUROGENIC BASIS OF COMMUNICATION DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Advanced study of neuroanatomy and neurophysiology with emphasis on the structures and circuits in the human nervous system mediating motor, sensory, perceptual, linguistic, and cognitive functions important for speech, language and hearing function. Material related to normal and abnormal neurological development over the lifespan will also be explored. The course integrates neuroanatomy with cognitive neuroscience through assigned readings, lectures, and laboratory experiences. Brain dissection laboratory experiences enhance mastery of neurological concepts introduced in the course.

SLP 402 | CULTURAL AND LINGUISTIC DIVERSITY IN SPEECH AND LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT AND DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an exploration of evidence-based practice to discuss cultural and linguistic diversity across the lifespan to provide minimally biased assessment and treatment of communication disorders. Bilingual speech and language acquisition in typically and atypically developing children will be examined. The course will focus on developing cross-cultural competence through understanding cultural diversity, multilingual acquisition, multilingualism, effective use of interpreters and translators, and service delivery strategies.

SLP 403 | PROFESSIONAL ISSUES AND ETHICS IN SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The scope of practice for the speech-language pathology profession will be examined. Students will explore expectations for professional behavior based upon standards of practice and the ASHA Code of Ethics. Emphasis will be placed on issues of ethical and professional integrity in clinical practice, and will include topics such as certification and licensure, quality assurance, evidence-based practice, and reimbursement topics.

SLP 410 | RESEARCH METHODS | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Research methods commonly used in the field of speech-language pathology, including basic research concepts, common research designs, and methods of data analysis will be examined.

SLP 411 | TOPICS IN RESEARCH FOR SLPS: EBP | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students will gain experience critiquing professional literature relevant to clinical and/or research practices. Emphasis will be on the integration of research evidence and critical thinking into practice. Students will complete a literature review on a topic of interest and use it to inform evidence-based, clinical decisions.

SLP 412 | THESIS | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Individual research in the various areas of speech and language science. Approved for satisfactory/unsatisfactory grading only. May be repeated. SLP 410 and SLP 411 are prerequisites for this class.

SLP 420 | SPEECH SOUND DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course addresses speech sound disorders of developmental or linguistic origin. Highlights include practice collecting and analyzing comprehensive speech samples, administering standardized tests, and planning therapeutic interventions, with an emphasis on case presentations of clients with articulation and phonological impairment.

SLP 421 | LANGUAGE DISORDERS IN EARLY CHILDHOOD | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The study of early language milestones, processes, and theories; and the examination of the nature and characteristics of disordered language acquisition in young children (birth through age 5) will be examined in this course. Topics include the speech-language pathologist's role in prevention, communication and language assessment and intervention techniques, models of service delivery, relevant legislation, and speech and language resources available to families, educators, and service providers. Students will practice language sampling and analysis.

SLP 422 | LANGUAGE DISORDERS IN SCHOOL-AGE POPULATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Language disorders of school-age children and adolescents, with an emphasis of the social, cognitive and linguistic aspects of language impairment will be examined in this course. Formal and informal assessment methods will be reviewed, along with intervention models commonly used in school and private settings. Students will practice narrative analysis.

SLP 421 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 423 | AUTISM & OTHER DEVELOPMENTAL DISORDERS | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, students will examine pediatric communication disorders related to the autism spectrum, genetic syndromes, and craniofacial anomalies. The etiologies of these conditions and co-morbid disorders will be discussed. Assessment and intervention models will be reviewed. SLP 421 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 424 | LANGUAGE, LITERACY & LEARNING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the theoretical models of language, literacy and learning related to Speech Language Pathology. The relationships between reading, writing, speaking and listening will be examined, including the impact on school performance. Reading and writing assessment and intervention models will be examined for clients with communication disorders.

SLP 420 and SLP 421 are prerequisites for this class.

SLP 430 | APHASIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The causes, assessment, and treatment of acquired language disorders in adults, including aphasia, right hemisphere syndromes, and dementia will be examined. Etiologies of these conditions, including neurological correlates for presenting symptoms, will be reviewed. Assessment and intervention models will be discussed, with attention to the cognitive, linguistic, and social aspects of resulting communication disorders.

SLP 401 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 431 | DYSPHAGIA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Study of the anatomic and physiologic systems involved in normal swallowing and swallowing disorders (dysphagia) in adults and children will be explored. Emphasis on the role of the speech-language pathologist in the areas of assessment and treatment of dysphagia and as a team member in the areas of dysphagia related counseling, ethical and quality of life issues.

SLP 401 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 432 | ACQUIRED NEUROLINGUISTIC AND NEUROCOGNITIVE DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examination of the neural bases and characteristics that result from acquired conditions, with emphasis on traumatic brain injury, dementia, and other degenerative neurological conditions will be explored. Principles of assessment, differential diagnosis, prognosis, treatment and recovery processes associated with these disorders will be examined.

SLP 401 is prerequisite for this class.

SLP 433 | MOTOR SPEECH DISORDER | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course covers assessment and treatment of neurogenic speech disorders, including the various types of dysarthria and apraxia. The complex process of differential diagnosis of these conditions will be addressed, along with numerous treatment approaches designed to target respiration, phonation, articulation, resonance and prosodic components of motor speech disorders.

SLP 401 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 440 | VOICE AND RESONANCE DISORDERS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students examine the anatomical and physiological correlates of phonation and oral/nasal resonance, as well as the exploration of diagnosis and management of congenital, acquired, and non-organic disorders of phonation. This course teaches evaluative and therapeutic aspects of voice and resonance disorders, including laryngectomy, cleft lip/palate, vocal fold hyperfunction, and therapies associated with a variety of neurogenic communication disorders.

SLP 401 is a prerequisite for this class.

SLP 441 | FLUENCY DISORDERS | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an overview of potential etiologies and characteristics of fluency and related disorders in children and adults. Focus on assessment, diagnosis, and effective treatment of stuttering across the lifespan is discussed. Consideration of the experience of stuttering from the point of view of the person who stutters will be explored.

SLP 442 | AUGMENTATIVE AND ALTERNATIVE COMMUNICATION ACROSS THE LIFESPAN | 3 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will address the complex communication needs of individuals with severe communication, sensory and/or physical impairments who may require the use of augmentative and alternative communication systems (AAC). Students will become familiar with various types of assistive technologies used for AAC. Cognitive, educational, physical, psycho-social, and linguistic aspects are considered together with symbol characteristics, teaching strategies, and research issues that impact AAC selection and implementation. AAC assessment and intervention strategies will be addressed, including interdisciplinary contributions from physical and occupational therapists.

SLP 443 | AURAL REHABILITATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Discussion of auditory skill development, impact of hearing disorders on communication, as well as assessment and treatment planning for hearing disorders across the lifespan, including speechreading, auditory training, and hearing assistive technology.

SLP 450 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN SPEECH LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an in-depth study of current issues in Speech-Language Pathology. Content and format of these courses are variable. Subject matter will be indicated in the class schedule. The Speech-Language Pathology department offers special topics in a variety of areas. Students may take more than one special topics course as an elective. This course is repeatable.

SLP 460 | RESEARCH TO PRACTICE IN BILINGUAL SPEECH LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This course is intended to be a collaborative and interactive course in which the examination and implementation of current professional and legal policies, procedures, and ethical issues as it impacts and safeguards bilingual individuals with speech and language disorders will be analyzed. Case studies specific to service delivery practices for bilingual individuals with acquired and developmental speech and language disorders will be examined.

SLP 461 | PROFESSIONALISM AND ADVOCACY IN BILINGUAL SPEECH LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

Issues of advocacy and professionalism in the field of bilingual speech language pathology will be explored. Solutions and alternatives will be evaluated through case studies.

SLP 462 | ASSESSMENT AND INTERVENTION OF YOUNG BILINGUAL CHILDREN WITH COMMUNICATION DISORDERS | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Typical and atypical bilingual speech and language development as applied to assessment and intervention of communication disordered bilingual young children and adolescents will be examined. Etiology, psychological, linguistic and cultural characteristics with specific attention to developmental and acquired disorders will be discussed. Principles, models and theories for evidence-based assessment and treatment of bilingual speech and language disordered young children and adolescents will be reviewed. A service learning experience will be completed.

SLP 463 | BILINGUAL SERVICE PROVIDER, FAMILY, COMMUNITY AND INTERDISCIPLINARY INVOLVEMENT | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

This course will examine the dynamic interactions and effects of bilingual speech and language service delivery across clients, family, caregivers, community and interdisciplinary members. Case study analysis will be used to problem solve, critically explore solutions and make evidence-based decisions.

SLP 464 | ASSESSMENT AND INTERVENTION OF BILINGUAL ADULTS WITH COMMUNICATION DISORDERS | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Evaluation and intervention of linguistic and cognitive systems in normal and disordered bilingual adults will be examined. Assessment and intervention strategies and cross-linguistic issues as it pertains to speech, language, and swallowing disorders will be discussed. A service learning experience will be completed.

SLP 465 | CULTURAL RESPONSIVENESS IN BILINGUAL SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Culturally responsive practice and adaptation variables pertinent to the evaluation and intervention process of bilingual children and adults with developmental and acquired speech and language disorders will be generated through thoughtful problem solving. A case analysis approach and collaborative decision making will be applied.

SLP 466 | BILINGUAL SPEECH LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY SERVICE PROVISION ACROSS SETTINGS | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Issues of accountability, eligibility, and service provision across various settings for bilingual individuals with speech and language disorders will be evaluated. Case studies specific to acquired and developmental speech and language disorders will be examined.

SLP 480 | CLINICAL METHODS IN SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The fundamentals of clinical methods, including assessing and treating individuals with communication disorders, the concepts of behavior change, session design, and functional, client-focused treatment will be explored. Discussion of data collection and documentation methods, as well as the basics of clinical writing.

SLP 481 | CLINICAL PRACTICUM I | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first of four supervised part-time speech-language pathology practicum experiences at the DePaul University Clinic, or other community-based sites. Students will work with a licensed speech-language pathologist faculty member to plan and conduct assessment and intervention sessions for clients with communication disorders.

SLP 480 is a prerequisite for this class

SLP 482 | CLINICAL PRACTICUM II | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the second of four supervised part-time speech-language pathology practicum experiences at the DePaul University Clinic, or other community-based sites. Students will work with a licensed speech-language pathologist faculty member to plan and conduct assessment and intervention sessions for clients with communication disorders.

SLP 480 and SLP 481 are prerequisites for this class

SLP 483 | CLINICAL PRACTICUM III | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the third of four supervised part-time speech-language pathology practicum experiences at the DePaul University Clinic, or other community-based sites. Students will work with a licensed speech-language pathologist faculty member to plan and conduct assessment and intervention sessions for clients with communication disorders.

SLP 480 and SLP 481 and SLP 482 are prerequisites for this class

SLP 484 | CLINICAL PRACTICUM IV | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the fourth and final supervised part-time speech-language pathology practicum experiences at the DePaul University Clinic, or other community-based sites. Students will work with a licensed speech-language pathologist faculty member to plan and conduct assessment and intervention sessions for clients with communication disorders.

SLP 480 and SLP 481 and SLP 482 and SLP 483 are prerequisites for this class

SLP 485 | EXTERNSHIP: SCHOOL PRACTICUM | 8 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is a full-time supervised speech-language pathology clinical experience in a school setting. Students will acquire experience in individual and group therapy, assessment and consultation. This course consists of a 10-week, full-time school site placement.

SLP 480 and SLP 481 and SLP 482 and SLP 483 and SLP 484 are prerequisites for this class

SLP 486 | EXTERNSHIP: MEDICAL PRACTICUM | 8 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is a full-time supervised speech-language pathology practicum in a healthcare or other clinical setting, including hospitals, rehabilitation centers, skilled nursing facilities, outpatient facilities, early intervention, private practices, or private schools. Students will acquire experience in individual and group therapy, assessment, consultation and interdisciplinary staffing. This course consists of a 10-week, full-time clinical site placement.

SLP 480 and SLP 481 and SLP 482 and SLP 483 and SLP 484 are prerequisites for this class

SLP 487 | FOUNDATIONS IN CLINICAL PRACTICE LAB | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

This course will provide students with foundational clinical skills obtained through screenings and simulations. Students will gain clinical experiences and earn clinical competencies in the areas of assessment, prevention, and treatment. The screenings will take place in our community partner preschools in Chicago. These preschools provide education to students who are historically denied access to high-quality education and their goals align with our Vincentian mission to provide equitable access of speech and language services to historically underserved individuals with communication disorders in our Chicago community. Students will be immersed in Vincentian social justice and the need for working for systemic change.

SLP 488 | EXTERNSHIP: PART-TIME | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a part-time supervised speech language pathology clinical experience. This course requires the graduate program director approval.

SLP 490 | BUSINESS PRINCIPLES FOR THE SPEECH LANGUAGE
PATHOLOGIST | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This course is a basic overview of the functional areas of business providing a general framework for understanding the development, structure, and social responsibility of business as it applies to the profession of speech language pathology. Emphasis is placed on the interaction of management, marketing, entrepreneurship, finance, accounting and insurance within the corporate, education and healthcare settings.

SLP 491 | PUBLIC SCHOOL METHODS FOR SPEECH LANGUAGE
PATHOLOGISTS | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This course serves as an overview to prepare graduate clinicians for their work as speech-language pathologists in the public school system. The course begins with a brief history of school-based speech-language pathology (SLP) services, highlighting significant legal mandates (e.g., IDEA, No Child Left Behind Act) and additional court cases that have shaped school based services. Additionally, students will learn various service delivery models, work analysis approaches to caseload standards, and practical strategies for using evidence-based practice, proactive behavior management, conflict resolution, professional collaboration, goal writing, testing accommodations, and informal assessment procedures.

SLP 492 | COUNSELING FUNDAMENTALS FOR SPEECH LANGUAGE
PATHOLOGISTS | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This course focuses on counseling theory and methods used by speech language pathologists in clinical practice used when working with caregivers and individuals who have communication disorders.

SLP 493 | CRANIOFACIAL ANOMALIES AND SYNDROMES | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This course provides a comprehensive study of embryology, normal and abnormal development of oral facial structures as it relates to cleft lip and palate and craniofacial syndromes. A review of Anatomy and physiology, and genetics provide a platform for this case-based class. This course provides insight into the need for a multidisciplinary team approach to the evaluation and treatment of cleft lip and palate and craniofacial anomalies. Emphasis is placed on the speech language pathologist's role in identification, assessment of speech language and resonance disorders and treatment of this population.

SLP 494 | TRACHS, VENTS AND LARYNGECTOMIES FOR THE SLP | 1 quarter hour
(Graduate)

This is a course for students who are interested in clinical management skills of pulmonary function, swallowing and communication for clients after tracheostomy tubes, with and without mechanical ventilation, and following a total laryngectomy. Students will learn about tracheostomy and ventilator dependent assessments and treatment approaches including types of tracheostomies, speaking valves, and communication options.

SLP 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is for Master's students. Topic of the course varies. Credit hours vary. Course requires graduate program director approval each quarter.

Sports Communication (SPRTCMN)

SPRTCMN 276 | SPORTS PHOTOJOURNALISM | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Visuals are an important part of sports journalism. This class teaches students how to use photography to tell visual stories about sports. Students will learn how to freeze action in a variety of sports and settings, including indoor, outdoor and water sports. Students will also learn how to make meaningful portraits of athletes, fans, and other actors in the sports world. Students do not need their own camera equipment to take this class. Cameras are available through the university equipment center. (*Course will be first offered in WINTER 2019)

SPRTCMN 290 | BOOK CLUB: THE SPORTING LIFE | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a two-credit book club class for students interested in reading books with a sports focus. Selections will include novels, biographies, collections of sports commentary, and history. If you have always wanted to join a book club, but didn't know where to get started, this course is for you. The emphasis is on reading for pleasure and lifelong learning. A variety of sports will be covered, such as tennis, football, baseball, ice skating, hockey and soccer. Discussions are a central part of the course.

SPRTCMN 300 | TOPICS IN SPORTS COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Course topic varies by term and focuses on a specific issue related to the study and practice of the field of sports communication. For a detailed course description, click the course link and view the Class Notes in the Enrollment Information tab.

SPRTCMN 308 | SPORTS & MASCULINITIES - A SURVEY OF HOW
SPORTS INFORM GENDER IN AMERICAN CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Organized sports, now an American institution, emerged in the late 19th and early 20th centuries as a reaction to the alleged feminization of men as Western culture completed its shift from an agrarian society to an industrial society. Organized sports - whether professional or amateur - contribute to an ideological account of men's supposed superiority over women. By "Sports" we refer in this class to organized activities that emphasize physical rather than cognitive ability although, clearly, both are required to compete successfully. Race, gender, socioeconomic status, and physical ability intersect to complicate masculinity and sports. Title IX and cable television are just two ways of thinking about how communication, media, and rhetorical claims have changed sports in the last 50 years, particularly with regard to gender. Students are invited to consider how sports and gender intersect with politics, economics, culture, and representation.

SPRTCMN 310 | SPORTS, MEDIA, AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines the role of sports and media in shaping and reflecting culture and society. Students analyze media on topics such as journalism, programming, race, gender, sexuality, business, and power in a variety of media contexts. Students focus on ethical and social responsibility roles of various entities in sports media. (*Course will be first offered in WINTER 2019)

SPRTCMN 322 | LIVE SPORTS EVENT PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the basic principles, procedures, and techniques needed for careers in Live Sports Event Production. Students explore the various aspects of sports television as it relates to entertainment, storytelling and journalism. This includes production of live events and studio shows, to programming, operations and new media. Students will get an inside look at the industry from award-winning professionals in an interactive class format, and also learn about careers in this field, such as producing, directing, announcing, and even technical roles.

SPRTCMN 323 | SPORTS PODCASTING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Podcast listening and revenue have reached all-time highs. Sports podcasts, in particular, allow hosts and guests greater freedom to delve deeper into respective sports, games, and subjects than live radio and television. Podcasts are personal, portable, and flexible. Students may work individually or in groups in this course. Students will also produce a final podcast project that can be customized to the learning and career goals of individual students. Students do NOT need any previous radio or podcasting experience to succeed in this course. Some experience with Garageband or similar programs will definitely benefit students in this course. (Formerly SPRTCMN 389)

SPRTCMN 324 | SPORTS BLOGGING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students learn by doing in crafting interactive and engaging content for sports blogs focused on teams and leagues, including multimedia content, social media engagement and event coverage.

SPRTCMN 325 | SPORTS OPINION WRITING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores several forms of persuasive writing on sports: editorials, criticism, op-ed columns and personal columns. Course work emphasizes thorough reporting, critical thinking and sound argumentation along with effective, stylish writing adaptable to any medium. Class sessions include extensive discussion of professional practices, sophisticated writing techniques, ethics and legal issues.

SPRTCMN 326 | SPORTS MEDIA LAW | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Even as non-lawyers, it is important that professionals working in the sports industry have knowledge of applicable laws and ethical considerations. Students learn about the intersection between the media and sports businesses on legal topics such as management, contracts, regulations and intellectual property.

SPRTCMN 327 | SPORTS STATS AND ANALYTICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class offers hand-on experience understanding how to calculate and analyze statistics and analytics that are key to the sports industry and sports media. Students learn how analytics influence games and teams and develop an understanding for the mathematical and statistical principles underpinning common data used in sports.

SPRTCMN 328 | SPORTS SOCIAL MEDIA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students learn how individuals, teams, leagues and other sports entities use sports media for branding, promotion and disseminating information. Students also learn by creating social media content and observing best practices for sharing information and multimedia about sports.

SPRTCMN 329 | SPORTS AUDIO PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Students learn about various aspects of producing audio for sports in a variety of digital formats for multiple purposes, including game coverage, shows, pre and post-game coverage, podcast and other audio elements.

SPRTCMN 330 | SPORTS & MASCULINITIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Race, gender, socioeconomic status, and physical ability intersect to complicate masculinity and sports. Title IX and cable television are just two ways of thinking about how communication, media, and rhetorical claims have changed sports in the last 50 years, particularly with regard to gender. Students are invited to consider how sports and gender intersect with politics, economics, culture, and representation.

SPRTCMN 331 | SPORTS BUSINESS NEWS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Naming rights. Sponsorship deals. Labor agreements. The business of sports has become an essential element of sports journalism. In this class, we will practice several types of sports business stories, interact with leaders in the field, and learn the business language of the NFL, NBA, Major League Baseball and NHL.

SPRTCMN 337 | SPORTS CAMPAIGNS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class replicates the new business process for a public relations or sports marketing agency. Our partner firms provide two "real world" assignments from clients for a sports sponsorship or related sports business activity. Teams "compete" to win the business, which results in presentations to the agencies during the final. Students prepare a comprehensive new business pitch, including situation analysis, primary research, key insights, a big idea with tactical executions and evaluation. (*Course will be first offered in AUTUMN 2019)

PRAD 244 or PRAD 255 is a prerequisite for this class.

SPRTCMN 373 | SPORTS MEDIA ENTREPRENEURS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Entrepreneurship is at the core of many aspects of digital sports media entities as new business and opportunities merge insight from sports communication and business training. This course provides students with a grounding in the process of planning, funding, launching, growing and managing a successful new sports media-related business; working in sports communication for an entrepreneurial venture; or freelancing/consulting. Through assignments, class discussions, site visits to entrepreneurial businesses and interaction with guest speakers, students will learn the risk, control and reward that comes with self-employment and working with startups in sports communication. (*Course will be first offered in SPRING 2019)

SPRTCMN 374 | SPORTS MEDIA RELATIONS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sports Media Relations is designed for sports communications, public relations and business students who require an understanding of how both sports-focused and general interest media outlets operate as they cover sports topics. The course will demonstrate how sports communication professionals and general communications professionals who work on sports projects can: 1) connect and build relationships with media outlets, reporters, editors, producers, bloggers and other media influencers, 2) operate as a conduit or facilitator between their teams, leagues, school athletic department and/or organization and media that cover them, and 3) use of digital and social media to reach both journalists and fans/customers. The course will examine sports media across the spectrum of journalistic standards and credibility levels. Taught by an instructor with both PR counseling and major media sports reporting experience, the course will provide insight into strategies and tactics that resonate with media, as well as how sports journalists work and think. The course taps the expertise of other sports media relations professionals - including from Chicago's professional and collegiate teams - and other sports journalists to explore how sports media relations is evolving in the changing landscape of traditional, digital and social media. (*Course will be first offered in WINTER 2019)
PRAD 255 and instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

SPRTCMN 375 | SPORTS CONTENT CREATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Sports media content is increasingly produced using journalism skills by in-house talent working for teams, leagues and other entities outside of traditional news organization. In this course, taught by top professionals working at outlets such as ESPN and The Big Ten Network, students learn skills and approaches to navigating audiovisual and text content across platforms, including documentaries, social media, and streaming coverage.

SPRTCMN 376 | SPORTS CRISIS CMN MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on crisis communication management efforts by sports-related organizations including sports leagues, governing bodies, and university athletic program as well as the misdeeds of sports officials, individual athletes and the organizations or sponsorships linked to them. The course will emphasize the practical application of theories, strategies, tactics, and messaging in the crisis management process. Additionally, there will be a focus on planning for and preventing crises as well as experience in managing full-blown crises including Stakeholder communication. (*Course will be first offered in SUMMER 2019)

PRAD 255 and instructor permission are prerequisites for this class.

SPRTCMN 396 | SPORTS COMMUNICATION CAPSTONE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This culminating experience for Sports Communication majors integrates the knowledge and skills learned during their undergraduate years with a forward-thinking professional sports-focused curriculum designed to prepare students for the competitive 21st century workplace. The course will cover such essential career-building topics as social media management, creating and leveraging a professional network; understanding effective teamwork strategies; ethical considerations in sports communication; and creating a plan and fine-tuning the skills needed to begin a career in the sports industry. Only SPRTCMN majors who have 144 hours or above are eligible to register for capstone. SPRTCMN majors may not earn credit for either CMN396 or PRAD396. (*Course will be first offered in SUMMER 2019)

Senior status and a major in Sports Communication are prerequisites for this class.

SPRTCMN 397 | FOX SPORTS UNIVERSITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Each year, we receive a specific real world assignment from Fox Sports involving one of their broadcast shows or major sports sponsorships. 20 students work in four groups of five over the quarter and compete to be selected by Fox Sports representatives as the winning marketing campaign. Students develop marketing, PR and sometimes advertising recommendations for the specific assignment. Students fully research the assignment, develop key insights, big ideas, complete tactical executions and evaluation. (*Course will be first offered in SPRING 2019)

Strategy Execution Valuation (SEV)

SEV 611 | RETURN DRIVEN STRATEGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides a framework and strategic skills that will enable Kellstadt students to make a significant impact on the future of their organizations and in their careers. The seminar course focuses on the Return Driven Strategy framework which describes the 11 tenets of successful business strategy, leveraging genuine assets, managing significant forces of change and understanding strategic valuation. This seminar course will focus on a deep analysis of the strategies and successful value creation of great companies. Each student will participate in a team project to apply the tenets of Return Driven Strategy to a high performance company. The Return Driven Strategy framework will be useful for MBA candidates working in various areas of corporate management, management consulting, investment banking, equity research, and for entrepreneurs. The seminar-driven course will include an executive seminar session for the morning session of the first day which will include presentations by executives and top thought leaders in strategy.

(ACC 500 or ACC 502 or its equivalent) or (status as an MS Audit and Advisory Services student) is a prerequisite for this course.

SEV 621 | STRATEGY EXECUTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course focuses on strategy execution and strategic performance measurement, including the balanced scorecard and value-based management as frameworks for describing and executing strategy. The course includes the latest developments in Strategic Risk Management and the implications for strategy and performance measurement. The course will study how high performance companies measure and manage performance, strategic risk, and corporate sustainability performance, as well as the ethical dimensions of strategy and execution. The seminar-driven course will include an executive seminar session for the morning session of the first day which will include presentations by executives and top thought leaders in strategy execution.

(ACC 500 or ACC 502 or its equivalent) or (status as an MS Audit and Advisory Services student) is a prerequisite for this course.

SEV 641 | STRATEGIC VALUATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on leading practices in valuation and practical methods for driving valuations from strategic corporate analysis. The course shows the link between strategic analysis and valuations - converting our qualitative understanding of company initiatives into quantitative forecasts and valuation models. The guiding principles for developing valuation models, and the tools and techniques for enhancing that analysis are introduced. This course builds a skillset for evaluating other valuation models and a first-hand experience in building valuation models for companies. The course differs from traditional treatments in its focus on the actual building of valuation models directly from financial performance and the valuation projects based on real-time data. This course is co-designed and co-taught by Dr. Mark L. Frigo, and Joel C. Litman, Clinical Professor of Business Strategy at DePaul's Kellstadt Graduate School of Business. They have been combining their efforts in the research, study, and development of business strategy models and frameworks for execution and value-creation and have assisted a wide range of public and private companies in the application of these concepts.

(ACC 500 or ACC 502 or its equivalent) or (status as an MS Audit and Advisory Services student) is a prerequisite for this course.

SAP VIEN01 | SHORT-TERM PROGRAM: VIENNA | 0 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This study abroad program introduces students to the peoples, locations, and traditions significant in Vienna of both the fin-de-siecle and today. Present-day Vienna still bears the stamp of the great personalities that shaped its culture and identity in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, yet it is also a modernizing place, one that combines traditions of the past with innovations of the present, and exists as a global, multicultural center that straddles Western and Central Europe. It is also an ideal site for discovering how culture operates in people's lives by closely examining the things they eat, how those things are acquired in a large city, and how what people eat can tell us who they think they are. As a city of modern tastes, Vienna is shown through an exploration of music, visual arts, architecture, coffeehouse culture, as well as an examination of Viennese foods and systems of eating. Sustainable Urban Development (SUD)

SUD 401 | SUSTAINABLE URBAN DEVELOPMENT I: PLANNING, POLICY & COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course addresses the concepts, practices, and tools for sustainable planning and provides an understanding for how to apply these to urban communities. The course is an intensive, topics-based overview of sustainable land use, housing, transportation, infrastructure, and community and economic development practices. The course is largely directed at contemporary policy issues and technical processes within the United States.

SUD 402 | SUSTAINABLE URBAN DEVELOPMENT II: APPLIED ANALYSIS OF URBAN ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This class focuses on the environmental aspects of city planning, including: resource management, environmental policy, transportation, LEED ratings and measures of environmental impact, integration of ecosystems within a land use planning framework, and community-based solutions to historical environmental injustice.

SUD 403 | BROWNFIELDS REDEVELOPMENT: PRACTICE AND IMPLEMENTATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students form a grounded understanding of the Brownfield lifecycle: how and why they were created and the general processes governing their redevelopment. The class will review the current regulatory, economic, environmental, community, public health, and development conditions of brownfields, through site visits and, when possible, discussions with stakeholders from public agencies, community organizations, and the private sector. Through a practice component, class members work in teams to apply their general brownfields knowledge to particular challenges in the field and gain hands-on experience in applied environmental and economic development research and analysis, community brownfield practices, and sustainability planning.

SUD 404 | URBAN DESIGN LABORATORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course teaches digital methods of creating visual information. Software used may include: Adobe Creative Suite, Google SketchUp, and advanced techniques for Microsoft PowerPoint, which can be applied by students in the SUD 501 and 502 courses.

SUD 420 | SUSTAINABLE URBAN FOOD SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

SUD 420 offers a critical analysis of the policies and practices that contribute to development of sustainable urban food systems in the North American context. The course surveys current literature on urban food systems and explores ways that cities have become centers for capital investment in (re)localization and regionalization of food production and distribution to serve higher income residents and to encourage community building, enhance education, improve food access and nutrition, and spur environmental restoration in economically distressed neighborhoods. Particular attention is paid to the concept of community food system as it is employed as an alternative narrative and practice to the concept global food system. Attention is paid to the way that historically marginalized groups seek to take control over food as a means to assert self-determination of communities. And a centerpiece of the course is engagement in field service with community groups that engage in local food systems development. Readings, lectures, films, guest speakers, site visits, and field service provide students with an overview of emerging efforts to build sustainable urban food systems within the context of climate change, gentrification, racial segregation, labor exploitation and wage suppression. Emphasis will be placed on (1) for-profit, nonprofit, and community-based food projects within urban contexts in North America; (2) whether or not these projects constitute more environmentally, socially, and economically sustainable approaches to provisioning cities; and (3) the degree to which such projects enhance access to and control over food by urban populations. Cross-listed with CSS 320.

SUD 430 | SUSTAINABLE URBAN TRANSPORTATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

The course introduces transportation geography and explores the characteristics of sustainable transportation systems. From electric vehicles to new services like car and bike sharing, the course examines the role that transportation plays in environmental, social, and economic sustainability. Students will learn about current issues in urban transportation (both passenger and freight), and receive an introduction to tools and techniques used by transportation planners, e.g., Geographic Information Systems (GIS).

SUD 433 | URBAN PLANNING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A seminar on the intellectual history and theories of urban planning and design, and their application in urban settings in the U.S. and abroad. Systematic study of case studies leads to the investigation of current urban planning issues in Chicago and other cities globally.

SUD 451 | SUSTAINABLE CITIES AND FOOD JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

While the need for food is universal, geographies of urban food production, distribution and consumption are anything but even. This course critically examines the contemporary global food system with the goal of providing students with skills and knowledge to understand the intersection of food justice activism and the development of sustainable cities. Students explore literature focused on current and past food justice campaigns that focus on how activists create policies and practices in support of more just urban food systems. Through examining—and taking part in—contemporary food justice advocacy campaigns, the course specifically explores urban food justice movements in the U.S. and internationally and guides students to form a critique of how literature on alternative food systems is incorporated into theories of sustainable urban development. Cross-listed with GEO 351 and PAX 351.

SUD 490 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A course related to sustainable urban development.

SUD 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Intensive study of a topic of special interest; requires that the student and instructor work together independently on a specific topic or project. Instructor consent required.

SUD 501 | PROFESSIONAL SEMINAR IN SUSTAINABLE URBAN DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

SUD 501 seeks to develop professional, communication and consultancy skills of SUD students through exploring transdisciplinary approaches to urban development. Engagement with urban planners, policymakers, community advocates, government employees, and other sustainability practitioners through guest lectures and site visits is combined with a set of assignments that move students toward defining and/or deepening their career or academic interests. Students are guided toward developing a set of questions about their particular specialty areas and then to utilize oral history methods to engage with leaders to learn more deeply about SUD issues and careers. The course culminates in an annual symposium where students present on a topic within SUD to a public audience. During the MA program, students must complete 100hrs of internship or approved off campus work related to Sustainable Urban Development. Therefore, the grade for SUD 501 is awarded after (a) successfully completing the internship and (b) Successfully completing the SUD 501 course requirements.

SUD 502 | CAPSTONE - PROFESSIONAL PORTFOLIO | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A discussion seminar that puts the skills learned on site into the wider academic context of the course. Students will draw from their internship to complete a project report as the culmination of this course.

SUD 592 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN SUSTAINABLE URBAN FOOD SYSTEMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A one-quarter, 4-credit class for Non-SUD students enrolled in the Graduate Certificate in Sustainable Urban Food Systems. In concurrence with a required 100-hour off-campus internship, the course includes five online or in-person sessions with the SUD Internship Coordinator consisting of: critical analysis and reflection on internship activities in relation to literature on sustainable urban food systems, discussion on successes and challenges during the internship, discussion of readings and journal entries, development of a final reflective essay, and advising and mentoring on career development in sustainable urban food systems.

SUD 420 or SUD 451 is a prerequisite for this class

SUD 600 | CANDIDACY CONTINUATION | 0 quarter hours

This course does not carry an equivalent enrollment status and students in it are not eligible for loan deferment or student loans. This course is not graded. (0 credit hours)

TEACH Program (TCH)

TCH 302 | INTRODUCTION TO MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces middle grades and secondary education teacher candidates to the field of education and the role of teachers. It explores the expectations of and for teachers and students from fifth through twelfth grade. Students examine and critique goals and theories of middle grades and secondary education. They consider the meaning and practice of fostering equitable, intellectually rich, socially just, compassionate learning environments. Students will come to recognize the importance of, articulate the meaning of, and begin to practice critical, creative, reflective teaching practice. They also create instructional plans that reflect clearly articulated purposes and understanding of adolescents. 25 Level I Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.

TCH 303 | CONCEPTIONS OF HEALTHY ADOLESCENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces varying conceptions of healthy adolescence, taking into account physical health and development, social and emotional health, mental health, and the contextual factors that shape healthy adolescence. Students will articulate diverse theories of what it means to be "healthy" throughout adolescence, develop instructional plans that consider the diverse interpretations of a healthy adolescence, create classroom environments that are sensitive to the health of adolescents, and communicate, model, and engage adolescents in the habits of mind necessary for healthy adolescence. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.

TCH 311 | THE NATURE OF ENGLISH | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (it's Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: "What does it mean to be a student of language and literature?" and, "What are the ways of knowing characteristics of English and Writing, Rhetoric, & Discourse majors?" In doing so, students will relate the disciplinary content of their major to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of middle grades and high school students. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 321. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 312 | THE NATURE OF HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on the content course work students have done in the seven disciplines grouped under the heading "social sciences" (history, political science, geography, sociology, anthropology, economics, and psychology). In this class students will get further exposure to the basic concepts of the social science disciplines and consider the connections as well as differences between them. The course emphasizes how different disciplinary backgrounds lead students to bring different perspectives to their study of social phenomena and helps them see these phenomena from multiple vantage points. The course will employ a case study approach framed around social issues of interest to all seven disciplines (e.g. social control, threats, development, natural disasters). By the end of the course, students will have applied the knowledge and skills of multiple social science disciplines to evaluate social phenomena, considered the relationship and differences between those disciplines, and be prepared to enter TCH 322 where they will apply their content knowledge to inquiry and teaching in the field. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 313 | THE NATURE OF MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on students' mathematics understanding by emphasizing the universality of mathematics as a cultural endeavor. In it, students will explore the historical trends in mathematics and how those trends have been taught. Students will understand that, mathematics, at its core, is deductive; however, it also requires intuition. Thus, the course examines the interaction among intuition, experimentation, conjecture, abstraction, and deductive reasoning not only in the classroom but also in the everyday use of mathematics. It also examines the interplay between concrete problem-solving and generalization. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 314 | THE NATURE OF SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is about the nature of science and the interactions between science and society. It will build on the foundation of understandings that students already have about the processes and conventions of science developed through their years as science students to create opportunities for deeper understandings of the beliefs and assumptions inherent to the creation of scientific knowledge. These opportunities will be developed through direct interactions with professional scientists as well as through case studies and readings that illustrate the strengths, limits and pitfalls of the scientific endeavor as well as provide opportunities for students to relate science to their daily lives and interests and to a larger framework of human endeavor and understanding (e.g., relationships among systems of human endeavor including science and technology; relationships among scientific, technological, personal, social and cultural values). Cases will be drawn from different scientific disciplines as well as from modern and historic times. In this way, science students will have a better understanding of what it means to be a scientist and how science interfaces with society. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 324. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 320 | EXPLORING TEACHING IN THE URBAN HIGH SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(JYEL CREDIT) This course is an invitation to secondary education as a profession, an opportunity for students considering education as a career to explore the reality of teaching and learning a disciplinary content area in a variety of Chicago-area schools. Students will become familiar with different narratives of teaching through teacher and student biographies, testimonials, literature, film, and classroom observations. They will explore the interrelationships between, for example, popular cultural beliefs about schooling; teacher and student identities; and classroom interaction. The instructor will coordinate observations in several classrooms as the basis for intensive, guided reflective work, aimed at supporting students' initial and subsequent efforts of developing identities as disciplinary content educators (25 hours of high school classroom observation required). Course is also an introduction to the TEACH Program. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.

TCH 321 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING ENGLISH PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course builds on TCH 311 by preparing teacher candidates to distinguish between what needs to be taught (content) and how it is taught (pedagogy), with an emphasis on understanding the historical shifts in the teaching of content and how these shifts inform teaching and learning in today's English language arts classrooms. The course also introduces students to methods of inquiry and reflection on pedagogical content knowledge. Student will examine their own educational experience through the lens of the historical trends, focusing on how they learned and what they understood their teachers to be doing. This initial case study will serve as an introduction into case study methods. Students will also develop expertise in one of the three historical trend areas -reading, writing, and language - and examine how the trend has informed teaching and learning and shaped curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment. Students will develop a case study of a practicing teacher using the lens of the historical trend in which they are developing expertise. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 311 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 322 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCES PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course builds on the content knowledge students developed and reinforced in TCH 312. More, it asks them to make the shift from considering how a person prepared in the social sciences analyzes social phenomena to how such a person teaches the social sciences. Students will do this by developing two units of inquiry-based case studies that they could use in their own classrooms. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the course work they have done in the content areas as well as the instruction they see teachers delivering in their field experiences. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections between the social science disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the high school level? What are the differences between the social science disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about social events but also the freedom to pursue their interests and make sense of the world on their own terms?" By the end of this course, students through readings and their projects will have advanced their learning about the nature of inquiry, its implementation in the classroom, and the connections and differences between the social science disciplines. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 312 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 323 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING MATHEMATICS PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course builds on TCH 313 by introducing students to inquiry methods to understand the teaching and learning of mathematics. Students will explore how mathematics has been and is taught by examining major paradigm shifts in mathematics education and the impact those paradigms and shifts have on pedagogical content knowledge, or knowledge of how to teach disciplinary content. Students will use case study methods to look at instructional practices and begin to articulate their own mathematics teaching pedagogy. With the completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of mathematical literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching mathematics, as well as being able to identify what makes an exceptional math teacher who is able to address the needs of all students. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 313 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 324 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SCIENCE PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Following TCH 314, this course transitions from asking "what does a scientist do?" to a consideration of why science literacy in the general public has been so difficult to achieve. The focusing questions for TCH 324 are: "How do we teach science? What is science literacy? Why is an understanding of science important to the general public? and What are the major obstacles and strategies to achieving science literacy?" The course begins by participants self-reflecting on their own educational experiences that led to their paths in science education: what have been their successful learning strategies, how have teachers influenced their education and what have been successful (and less than successful) classroom instructional strategies? Students will read seminal literature on science literacy and explore cases challenging their notions of the teacher-learner relationship and the relationship between science and society. As a result of this course, students will gain a deeper understanding of scientific literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching science as well as identify what makes an exceptional science teacher able to prepare both future scientists and a knowledgeable public. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 314 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 325 | LITERACY IN THE CONTENT AREAS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course analyzes the relationships among reading, writing, speaking and listening. It encourages middle level and high school teachers in all disciplines to take these interrelationships into account and to plan curricula that include current teaching strategies to enable students to become better readers, writers and thinkers in their various content-areas. Language use, learning and teaching are considered from a multicultural perspective. Offered during Winter and Spring terms.

TCH 366 | TEACHER AS ARTIST | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course builds on the work in TCH 365, which alongside TCH 366 is intended as a two course sequence each complimenting the other. As TCH 365 focuses on the art of teaching the visual arts, TCH 366 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art content. Historically, artistic movements have shaped and currently identify the theories we use to define our most immediate environment. The major concepts can be connected to the artist studio and to the descriptions some artists make about the studio as a teaching space. In the course students will be introduced to a wide range of artists and their work, artistic movements and the individual artists who use teaching as a medium. How does an emerging artist or pre-service teaching artist draw on the understanding of their own work as a platform to build core principles of pedagogy? What is the link that combines a dynamic studio practice with an inspired methodology for teaching visual art? We will address these questions through creating a visual art teaching curriculum portfolio and writing a reflective artist monograph, produce a final exhibition of their work and work alongside teachers and artists in the field. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours.

SEC 364 and Education major or minor are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 371 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the English language arts in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Whenever possible, Field Experience hours should be completed in student teaching placement. Offered during Fall term.

(TCH 302 or SEC 364) and (SEC 321 or TCH 321) are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 372 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching history and the social sciences in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

(TCH 302 or SEC 364) and (SEC 322 or TCH 322) are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 373 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching mathematics in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

(TCH 302 or SEC 364) and (SEC 323 or TCH 323) are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 374 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the sciences in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

(TCH 302 or SEC 364) and (SEC 324 or TCH 324) are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 380 | THE TEACHER AS PROFESSIONAL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, students pull together significant elements from their prior courses as well as their experiences in the field to further their development as professional educators. Significant themes include understanding the socio-emotional needs of adolescents, the role and impact of using action research strategies to understand and adapt curriculum for students and to reflect on instructional strategies for potential professional development. Other considerations within the course include the role of teachers within building-, district-, and local communities; how teachers can continue to professionalize themselves and the profession by engaging in professional development opportunities and finding ways to model and motivate learning within relevant communities. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 381, TCH 382, TCH 383, or TCH 384. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 381 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 321 and TCH 371. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities, with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 371, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Whenever possible this field experience is completed in the same school site as the student teaching placement. (TCH 371 or SEC 371) is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 380.

TCH 382 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 322 and TCH 372. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 372, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 380. Offered during Winter term. (TCH 372 or SEC 372) is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 380.

TCH 383 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 323 and TCH 373. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 373, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 380. Offered during Winter term. (TCH 373 or SEC 373) is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 380.

TCH 385 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 324 and TCH 374. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. TCH 390 | CAPSTONE: INTEGRATING EDUCATION & DISCIPLINARY FOUNDATIONS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help students conceptualize issues and opportunities in teaching their disciplinary content to diverse students and in different classroom contexts. In this course, students will analyze and reflect on how teaching in their disciplines is informed by diverse cultures of schooling and youth, including the influences of economic, social, cultural, political, gender, and religious factors on schooling, educational policy and opportunity. Students will use disciplinary content to critically and creatively reflect on the teaching of that content in secondary schools. Students will be introduced to issues and ways of presenting essential disciplinary content in ways that engage diverse learners, including learners who have not been served well by formal education. Students will also develop a theory of teaching that emphasizes the intersection of disciplinary content with multicultural perspectives. Offered during Spring term only.

TCH 392 | MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING | 10 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is the culminating experience for Middle Grades and Secondary Education Program students and requires 11 weeks of onsite student teaching in a middle school or high school content area classroom. The course requires students to be in the school full-time, participating in both in-class instruction and extra-curricular activities related to the school. Student teaching application and approval required. (10 credit hours)

TCH 395 | ASSESSMENT PRACTICES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces candidates to theoretical and philosophical issues related to educational assessment. It addresses the range of assessments teachers will encounter in school settings, including individual cognitive and social and emotional assessments; course material, curricula, and disciplinary program assessments; and large scale high-stakes testing. The course provides candidates opportunities to explore student, program, and curricular assessment issues, including assessment methods and tools; standardized, quantitative, and qualitative assessments; formal and informal assessments; formative and summative assessments; integrated, self-, and peer assessments; cultural, social, economic, and language influences on assessments; and issues of reliability and validity in assessment.

This class is taken concurrently with (TCH 371 or TCH 372 or TCH 373 or TCH 374) OR (TCH 381 or TCH 382 or TCH 383 or TCH 385).

TCH 401 | TEACHING AS A PROFESSION IN SECONDARY SCHOOL | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the TEACH Program, including the College of Education's conceptual framework and teacher dispositions, and to the professional world of secondary school teaching, including the policy bodies and stakeholders that impact teaching. Within this developing understanding of the larger context of secondary education, students will begin to articulate clearly professional identities and the behaviors inherent in those identities, including their impact on student learning. Drawing on previous coursework and their growing understanding of differences in individual, ethnic, and cultural group attitudes, values, and needs, students also will learn to recognize the complexities of teaching and learning in a pluralistic society. Ultimately, students will be committed to teaching as a responsible professional who acts in an ethical and collegial fashion. 25 Level 2 field experience required. Offered during Fall term only.

TCH 402 | INTRODUCTION TO MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces middle grades and secondary education teacher candidates to the field of education and the role of teachers. It explores the expectations of and for teachers and students from fifth through twelfth grade. Students examine and critique goals and theories of middle grades and secondary education. They consider the meaning and practice of fostering equitable, intellectually rich, socially just, compassionate learning environments. Students will come to recognize the importance of, articulate the meaning of, and begin to practice critical, creative, reflective teaching practice. They also create instructional plans that reflect clearly articulated purposes and understanding of adolescents. 25 Level I Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.

TCH 403 | CONCEPTIONS OF HEALTHY ADOLESCENCE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces varying conceptions of healthy adolescence, taking into account physical health and development, social and emotional health, mental health, and the contextual factors that shape healthy adolescence. Students will articulate diverse theories of what it means to be "healthy" throughout adolescence, develop instructional plans that consider the diverse interpretations of a healthy adolescence, create classroom environments that are sensitive to the health of adolescents, and communicate, model, and engage adolescents in the habits of mind necessary for healthy adolescence. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms.

TCH 411 | THE NATURE OF ENGLISH | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (it's Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: "What does it mean to be a student of language and literature?" and, "What are the ways of knowing characteristics of English and Writing, Rhetoric, & Discourse majors?" In doing so, students will relate the disciplinary content of their major to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of middle grades and high school students. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 421. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 412 | THE NATURE OF HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on the content course work students have done in the seven disciplines grouped under the heading "social sciences" (history, political science, geography, sociology, anthropology, economics, and psychology). In this class students will get further exposure to the basic concepts of the social science disciplines and consider the connections as well as differences between them. The course emphasizes how different disciplinary backgrounds lead students to bring different perspectives to their study of social phenomena and helps them see these phenomena from multiple vantage points. The course will employ a case study approach framed around social issues of interest to all seven disciplines (e.g. social control, threats, development, natural disasters). By the end of the course, students will have applied the knowledge and skills of multiple social science disciplines to evaluate social phenomena, considered the relationship and differences between those disciplines, and be prepared to enter TCH 422 where they will apply their content knowledge to inquiry and teaching in the field. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 413 | THE NATURE OF MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on students' mathematics understanding by emphasizing the universality of mathematics as a cultural endeavor. In it, students will explore the historical trends in mathematic and how those trends have been taught. Students will understand that, mathematics, at its core, is deductive; however, it also requires intuition. Thus, the course examines the interaction among intuition, experimentation, conjecture, abstraction, and deductive reasoning not only in the classroom but also in the everyday use of mathematics. It also examines the interplay between concrete problem-solving and generalization. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 414 | THE NATURE OF SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is about the nature of science and the interactions between science and society. It will build on the foundation of understandings that students already have about the processes and conventions of science developed through their years as science students to create opportunities for deeper understandings of the beliefs and assumptions inherent to the creation of scientific knowledge. These opportunities will be developed through direct interactions with professional scientists as well as through case studies and readings that illustrate the strengths, limits and pitfalls of the scientific endeavor as well as provide opportunities for students to relate science to their daily lives and interests and to a larger framework of human endeavor and understanding (e.g., relationships among systems of human endeavor including science and technology; relationships among scientific, technological, personal, social and cultural values). Cases will be drawn from different scientific disciplines as well as from modern and historic times. In this way, science students will have a better understanding of what it means to be a scientist and how science interfaces with society. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 424. Offered during Winter term only.

TCH 421 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING ENGLISH PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on TCH 411 by preparing teacher candidates to distinguish between what needs to be taught (content) and how it is taught (pedagogy), with an emphasis on understanding the historical shifts in the teaching of content and how these shifts inform teaching and learning in today's English language arts classrooms. The course also introduces students to methods of inquiry and reflection on content pedagogical knowledge. Student will examine their own educational experience through the lens of the historical trends, focusing on how they learned and what they understood their teachers to be doing. This initial case study will serve as an introduction into case study methods. Students will also develop expertise in one of the three historical trend areas -reading, writing, and language - and examine how the trend has informed teaching and learning and shaped curriculum, pedagogy, and assessment. Students will develop a case study of a practicing teacher using the lens of the historical trend in which they are developing expertise. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 411 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 422 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCES PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on the content knowledge students developed and reinforced in TCH 412. More, it asks them to make the shift from considering how a person prepared in the social sciences analyzes social phenomena to how such a person teaches the social sciences. Students will do this by developing two units of inquiry-based case studies that they could use in their own classrooms. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the course work they have done in the content areas as well as the instruction they see teachers delivering. They will contemplate such questions as: "What are the connections between the social science disciplines? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about social events but also the freedom to pursue their interests and make sense of the world on their own terms?" By the end of this course, students through readings and their projects will have advanced their learning about the nature of inquiry, its implementation in the classroom, and the connections and differences between the social science disciplines. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 412 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 423 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING MATHEMATICS PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course builds on TCH 413 by introducing students to inquiry methods to understand the teaching and learning of mathematics. Students will explore how mathematics has been and is taught by examining major paradigm shifts in mathematics education and the impact those paradigms and shifts have on pedagogical content knowledge, or knowledge of how to teach disciplinary content. Students will use case study methods to look at instructional practices and begin to articulate their own mathematics teaching pedagogy. With the completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of mathematical literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching mathematics, as well as being able to identify what makes an exceptional math teacher who is able to address the needs of all students. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 413 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 424 | INQUIRY & APPLICATION IN DEVELOPING SCIENCE PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Following TCH 414, this course transitions from asking "what does a scientist do?" to a consideration of why science literacy in the general public has been so difficult to achieve. The focusing questions for TCH 424 are: "How do we teach science? What is science literacy? Why is an understanding of science important to the general public? and What are the major obstacles and strategies to achieving science literacy?" The course begins by participants self-reflecting on their own educational experiences that led to their paths in science education: what have been their successful learning strategies, how have teachers influenced their education and what have been successful (and less than successful) classroom instructional strategies? From this, students will begin science classroom observation, discussing their observations with their peers, and speaking with educators about their experiences teaching high school science and about the goals and short-comings of science education. Throughout this process, students will read seminal literature on science literacy and explore cases challenging their notions of the teacher-learner relationship and the relationship between science and society. As a result of this course, students will gain a deeper understanding of scientific literacy and the barriers to understanding and teaching science as well as identify what makes an exceptional science teacher able to prepare both future scientists and a knowledgeable public. Offered during Spring term.

TCH 414 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 451 | RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: ENGLISH | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to education research methods and discipline-specific research and inquiry. During the first five weeks, the course focuses on basic questions, issues, and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conducting, writing, reading and using education research as a means for informing education theory, practice and policy. Candidates will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform education research and various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data. During the last 6 weeks of the course, the course focuses on research related to the teaching of the English language arts in the middle school and high school and pedagogical content knowledge, including research on teaching and learning, curricula and instructional delivery, assessment, and the relationship of socio-cultural, economic, and language use to teaching and learning disciplinary-specific content. Students will develop and implement small discipline-specific research projects, identifying research questions, conducting a literature search, developing a theoretical framework, and collecting and analyzing data. NOTE: Offered concurrently with TCH 481.

TCH 452 | RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to education research methods and discipline-specific research and inquiry. During the first five weeks, the course focuses on basic questions, issues, and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conducting, writing, reading and using education research as a means for informing education theory, practice and policy. Candidates will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform education research and various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data. During the last 6 weeks of the course, the course focuses on research related to the teaching of history and the social sciences in the middle school and high school and pedagogical content knowledge, including research on teaching and learning, curricula and instructional delivery, assessment, and the relationship of socio-cultural, economic, and language use to teaching and learning disciplinary-specific content. Students will develop and implement small discipline-specific research projects, identifying research questions, conducting a literature search, developing a theoretical framework, and collecting and analyzing data. NOTE: Offered concurrently with TCH 482.

TCH 453 | RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to education research methods and discipline-specific research and inquiry. During the first five weeks, the course focuses on basic questions, issues, and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conducting, writing, reading and using education research as a means for informing education theory, practice and policy. Candidates will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform education research and various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data. During the last 6 weeks of the course, the course focuses on research related to the teaching of mathematics in the middle school and high school and pedagogical content knowledge, including research on teaching and learning, curricula and instructional delivery, assessment, and the relationship of socio-cultural, economic, and language use to teaching and learning disciplinary-specific content. Students will develop and implement small discipline-specific research projects, identifying research questions, conducting a literature search, developing a theoretical framework, and collecting and analyzing data. NOTE: Offered concurrently with TCH 483.

TCH 454 | RESEARCH METHODS & DISCIPLINARY INQUIRY: SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to education research methods and discipline-specific research and inquiry. During the first five weeks, the course focuses on basic questions, issues, and theoretical frameworks central to the purpose, conceptualization, conducting, writing, reading and using education research as a means for informing education theory, practice and policy. Candidates will be exposed to the multiple frameworks that inform education research and various methodologies employed in collecting and analyzing data. During the last 6 weeks of the course, the course focuses on research related to the teaching of the sciences in the middle school and high school and pedagogical content knowledge, including research on teaching and learning, curricula and instructional delivery, assessment, and the relationship of socio-cultural, economic, and language use to teaching and learning disciplinary-specific content. Students will develop and implement small discipline-specific research projects, identifying research questions, conducting a literature search, developing a theoretical framework, and collecting and analyzing data. NOTE: Offered concurrently with TCH 484.

TCH 455 | READINGS IN AMERICAN HISTORY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Prepares students for teaching American history at the secondary level. Readings focus on the foundational texts of American history from the colonial era to the late 20th century, with an emphasis on gaining content knowledge and applying it to teaching in the secondary classroom. Class discussions focus on matters of interpretation, evidence, and historiography. Offered during Fall term.

TCH 465 | ART AND PEDAGOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course alongside TCH 466 is intended as a two-course sequence each complementing the other. As TCH 466 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art's content, TCH 465 focuses on teaching visual art. Building from the content requirements from their program or experience, students will understand how the art studio (content) experiences where ideas are developed translate to the preparation of teaching. Students will do this through multiple curriculum based projects intended for use in their own classrooms, including a K-12th grade general course reader to assist in introducing an art historical overview that influences and connects to general middle and high school studio practices. As students work on these projects, they will continue to reflect on the coursework they have done in the content area as well as watching and learning from classroom teachers and teaching artists in the field. They will contemplate such questions as: What are the connections among the arts disciplines? How can they be taught together, creating interdisciplinary courses at the middle and high school levels? What are the differences among the arts disciplines and what does this mean for secondary pedagogy? How can teachers use inquiry with their students, making sure they have enough guidance to learn about artists, artistic periods and the nature of how artworks are produced. Site visits required. 25 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 471 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the English language arts in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

TCH 402 or T&L 425 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 472 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching history and the social sciences in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

TCH 402 or T&L 425 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 473 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching mathematics in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

TCH 402 or T&L 425 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 474 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 1 | 4 quarter hours

(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the theoretical and practical issues of teaching the sciences in middle grades and secondary classrooms. The course introduces candidates to research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics. Students will practice and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods, including the use of technology resources, that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. Students will reflect on their own emerging educational philosophies and theories. They will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall term.

TCH 402 or T&L 425 is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 480 | THE TEACHER AS PROFESSIONAL | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

In this course, students pull together significant elements from their prior courses as well as their experiences in the field to further their development as professional educators. Significant themes include understanding the socio-emotional needs of adolescents, the role and impact of using action research strategies to understand and adapt curriculum for students and to reflect on instructional strategies for potential professional development. Other considerations within the course include the role of teachers within building-, district-, and local communities; how teachers can continue to professionalize themselves and the profession by engaging in professional development opportunities and finding ways to model and motivate learning within relevant communities. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 481 | TEACHING ENGLISH IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 421 and TCH 471. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills and sensibilities, with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 471, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 480. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 471 is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 480.

TCH 482 | TEACHING HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 422 and TCH 472. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the basic concepts of the seven social science disciplines with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 472, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 480. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 472 is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 480.

TCH 483 | TEACHING MATHEMATICS IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 423 and TCH 473. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of mathematics in all its representations with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 473, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 480. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 473 is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 480.

TCH 484 | TEACHING THE SCIENCES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND HIGH SCHOOL 2 | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course continues students' immersion into the pedagogical content knowledge development and practices that began in TCH 424 and TCH 474. The course provides students opportunities to continue to explore and develop research-based and theoretically grounded best practices in the teaching of the different sciences, including biology, chemistry, environmental science, and physics with an emphasis on reflective and collaborative practice. The course provides extensive opportunities for planning, using, and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies, including the use of technology resources, through teaching demonstrations and modeling and field experiences. Students will fine-tune and reflect on writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, creating a classroom environment, and implementing instructional delivery strategies and methods that meet the needs of diverse learners, including English language learners and students who speak nonmainstream dialects of English. And like in TCH 474, students will reflect on and clearly articulate orally, in writing, and through practice an educational philosophy and theory. Students will also demonstrate commitment to teaching as a professional who acts responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian personalism. 25 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. COREQUISITE(S): Taken concurrently with TCH 480. Offered during Winter term.

TCH 474 is a prerequisite for this class. This class is taken concurrently with TCH 480.

TCH 495 | ASSESSMENT PRACTICES IN THE MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces candidates to theoretical and philosophical issues related to educational assessment. It addresses the range of assessments teachers will encounter in school settings, including individual cognitive and social and emotional assessments; course material, curricula, and disciplinary program assessments; and large scale high-stakes testing. The course provides candidates opportunities to explore student, program, and curricular assessment issues, including assessment methods and tools; standardized, quantitative, and qualitative assessments; formal and informal assessments; formative and summative assessments; integrated, self-, and peer assessments; cultural, social, economic, and language influences on assessments; and issues of reliability and validity in assessment. 10 Level 2 Field Experience hours required. Offered during Fall, Winter, and Spring terms. COREQUISITE(S): Taken in conjunction with TCH 471/TCH 472/TCH 473/TCH 474 OR TCH 481/TCH 482/TCH 483/TCH 484.

This class is taken concurrently with (TCH 471 or TCH 472 or TCH 473 or TCH 474) or (TCH 481 or TCH 482 or TCH 483 or TCH 484).

TCH 525 | READING, WRITING, AND COMMUNICATING ACROSS THE CURRICULUM | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course analyzes the relationships among reading, writing, speaking and listening. It encourages middle level and high school teachers in all disciplines to take these interrelationships into account and to plan curricula that include current teaching strategies to enable students to become better readers, writers and thinkers in their various content-areas. This course will also concentrate on group process and its role in effective teaching within and across content-areas. Language use, learning and teaching are considered from a multicultural perspective. Offered during Winter and Spring terms.

TCH 471 or TCH 472 or TCH 473 or TCH 474, and status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

TCH 565 | INDEPENDENT STUDIO TOPICS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is a self-directed graduate course in the K-12 Visual Arts Education Program. Candidates who consider this course must develop a written proposal for their work and identify professional expectations of this quarter long immersion in advanced study. Candidates may select from a range of possible pursuits from preparing a new body of work or preparing an exhibition to working within a host of selected museums or galleries as an art education intern throughout the city and suburbs. All candidates are required to meet with a faculty member for an initial interview to discuss contact hours, needs and limitations, critique times and locations and the required documentation from the 11-week experience. All proposals must be approved by a faculty member in the program.

TCH 589 | THESIS RESEARCH IN TEACHING AND LEARNING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A student writing a thesis registers for this course for four quarter hours of credit. Where the thesis research and the writing of the thesis itself are prolonged beyond the usual time, the program advisor may require the student to register for additional credit.

TCH 480 and an approved thesis proposal are prerequisites for this class.

TCH 590 | MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is the culminating experience for Middle Grades and Secondary Education Program students and requires 11 weeks of onsite student teaching in a middle school or high school content area classroom. The course requires students to be in the classroom full-time, participating in both in-class instruction and extra-curricular activities related to the school. Student teaching application and approval required. (6 credit hours)

TCH 591 | MIDDLE GRADES AND SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course must be taken concurrently with TCH 590. The seminar format provides students an opportunity to reflect on their student teaching experiences and to reach back and consider what they have learned in their teacher preparation programs and their next steps as practicing teachers. COREQUISITE(S): TCH 590. (2 credit hours)

Teaching and Learning (T&L)

T&L 311 | THE NATURE OF ENGLISH | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course is designed to help students to see that the field of English Studies is bigger than the component they probably identify as English (it's Literature, Writing, and Linguistics/Grammar). Students will explore the formation of the discipline up to the current day, focusing on the shifting understanding of ways of reading, writing and thinking about language. They will strive to answer the questions: "What does it mean to be a student of language and literature?" and, "What are the ways of knowing characteristics of English and Writing, Rhetoric, & Discourse majors?" In doing so, students will relate the disciplinary content of their major to their daily lives and interests and to the larger framework of human endeavor and understanding, including identifying its importance to the personal lives of middle grades and high school students. The course is a prerequisite for TCH 321.

T&L 400 | CLINICAL EXPERIENCES WITH INFANTS AND TODDLERS | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Teacher candidates will observe and interact with infants and toddlers (25 clock hours). Appropriate lesson planning and assessment techniques and tools will be emphasized in the seminar. (1 credit hour)

T&L 401 | CLINICAL EXPERIENCE IN EARLY LANGUAGE AND LITERACY DEVELOPMENT | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Teacher candidates will observe and interact with young children and their families in programs, related to language and literacy development. A weekly seminar is required. (1 credit hour)

T&L 402 | CLINICAL EXPERIENCES WITH PRE-SCHOOLERS | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Candidates will observe and interact with preschool-age children (25 clock hours). Appropriate early childhood curricula, assessment and instructional methodologies will be emphasized. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 407. (1 credit hour)

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 403 | CLINICAL EXPERIENCES IN PRIMARY GRADES | 1 quarter hour (Graduate)

Students will observe, interact with, and teach primary-age children (25 clock hours). Appropriate curricula, assessment and instructional methodologies for children in the primary grades (K-3) will be emphasized. (1 credit hour)

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 404 | INTRODUCTION TO ELEMENTARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This is the first in a sequence of theory and practice courses that serves to familiarize teaching candidates with the world of elementary schools. Through observation and participation in schools, self-reflection, independently created assignments, cooperative learning assignments and classroom discussion, candidates will acquire familiarity with schools and classrooms including: social/cultural context, classroom climate, classroom management, curricular coherence, standards-based instruction, and teacher professional beliefs and practices. Written critical reflections and papers serve as initial foundation for the development of teaching philosophies.

T&L 405 | INTRODUCTION TO THE ROLE OF SCHOOL SERVICE PERSONNEL: SCHOOL NURSE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on organizational aspects of the school environment including the role of the school nurse as the administrator of the school health program, and as an advocate for children. The course also explores legal mandates that impact school communities, parent communication, common psychological issues impacting today's children, and the importance of collaborating with the school counselor, social worker, special education teacher, and other relevant personnel. Only students in the School Nurse program may take this course.

T&L 406 | LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT IN EARLY CHILDHOOD (BIRTH TO 8) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines language acquisition and development in young children, including culturally and linguistically diverse learners and children with atypical language development. Attention will be given to dialectical issues as these apply to growth and development of linguistic competencies through the early childhood years. Explored in this course are the core topics of linguistic: morphology, syntax, semantics, pragmatics, phonetics, and phonology. Psycholinguistic and sociolinguistic theories anchor the discussion of language learning in childhood. Issues of language delay and processing of symbolic information to facilitate the development of articulation, fluency, voice, and functional language are included.

T&L 407 | PREPRIMARY PROGRAMS: CURRICULUM AND STRATEGY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Students will plan, implement and evaluate activities that promote the physical, emotional, social, spiritual, creative, and cognitive development of preschool children from diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds. Methods of facilitating children's play, individualization through building on children's experiences, learning styles and interests, using technology, and developing learning centers will be emphasized. Assessment practices are incorporated in this experience.

T&L 408 | CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION IN PRIMARY GRADES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides an examination of the objectives, content, methods and materials used in the primary grades of elementary schools. A variety of teaching methods and classroom management strategies will be discussed and illustrated, including teacher-led instruction and student-centered instruction. Students will be encouraged to reflect upon their own emerging educational philosophies and teaching styles as they take part in laboratory and clinical experiences. Many opportunities for planning, using and evaluating a variety of teaching methods will be offered. Each student will prepare one teaching unit on a primary social studies theme. Appropriate tests and assessment are included.

T&L 409 | PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the professional roles required of elementary school teachers. Students will develop a knowledge-based framework for considering the many factors involved in decision-making in an elementary classroom. This framework will serve to guide students as they create a social studies curriculum unit, which integrates planning skills, teaching strategies, classroom management and evaluation techniques. Daytime clinical hours are required during this course. (Only for Special and Elementary Education (SEE) majors).

T&L 410 | CHILDREN'S LITERATURE AND FAMILY LITERACY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course addresses literacy development in young children and the roles of families and early childhood programs in fostering that development. Strategies for enhancing literacy, such as word play, storytelling, conversations will be provided and all appropriate genres of children's literature will be explored. Finally, the course features appropriate poetry, early books for infants and toddlers, read-aloud materials, and all genres of children's literature for young children.

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 411 | ASSESSMENT IN EARLY CHILDHOOD INCLUSIVE SETTINGS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Candidates will study, use, and evaluate early childhood assessment methods and tools that are appropriate for young children with diverse learning, cultural, and socioeconomic experiences. Focus of the course is on the teacher candidate's acquisition of knowledge and skill regarding an array of formal and informal assessment instruments and techniques used to gather information needed for making decisions about typical and atypical children served in individual and group learning situations. Focus is directed toward the development of curricular goals and instructional approaches that evolve from the assessment information. Such information is used to create learning plans, including Individualized Family Service Plans (IFSP) and Individualized Education Plans (IEP), serving child and family responsively.

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 412 | EMERGING READING AND LANGUAGE ARTS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the curriculum content and sequence, instructional and assessment strategies as well as considerations integral to the creation of authentic, effective emergent literacy environments and engagements for first through third grade. Theory and practice principles are woven into course assignments and required field experiences designed to observe, teach, and reflect upon instructional decisions made for individual as well as groups of children. Prevailing curricular and instructional models (e.g., code-based, meaning-oriented, balanced) and their histories are compared and contrasted. The influences of development, home language(s) and dialect(s) (especially those of U.S. metropolitan areas), and educational settings are studied and applied to candidate instructional planning and teaching. Case studies and lesson planning facilitate the application of course content.

T&L 404 and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 413 | READING/LANGUAGE ARTS IN THE INTERMEDIATE GRADES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course extends Emerging Reading and Language Arts to facilitate increased independence in students as strategic readers and competent writers. It focuses on the further development of reading comprehension and writing abilities in the intermediate grades. Emphasis is placed on the complex nature of literacy addressing issues such as content-area literacies, learning in and across languages, and critically consuming and producing a wide variety of texts (including online, multimedia and print based). Application of course material is facilitated through fieldwork focusing on the design, teaching, and reflection on literacy lesson(s) for intermediate learners.

T&L 412 and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 415 | TEACHING AND LEARNING ELEMENTARY SCHOOL SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to materials, methods and strategies for helping students in grades 1-6 become scientifically literate: i.e., to understand the nature of science and its impact on technology. Particular attention will be given to theoretical views about how children learn science, the proper use of materials and equipment, the development of scientific thinking, e.g., skills in observing, classifying, collecting, and interpreting data, questioning strategies, and ways to assess student progress. Inquiry-based lesson plans and case studies invite application of course content. Daytime field required during this course.

(T&L 404 or T&L 409) and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 416 | TEACHING AND LEARNING ELEMENTARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to materials, processes for developing, and strategies for mathematical literacy in grades 1-6. Particular attention will be given to the theoretical views about how children learn mathematics, the proper use of manipulative materials, the development of mathematical thinking, e.g., skills in estimation, pattern recognition, or spatial perception; the use of technology, and ways to assess student progress. Lesson planning, teaching, and critical reflection are an integral component of this course. Clinical hours required.

(T&L 404 or T&L 409) and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 418 | LEARNING THROUGH THE ARTS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on the arts (visual art, music, drama and dance) as an integral component of teaching and learning in the elementary school curriculum. Students will explore a variety of art forms and disciplines to develop a critical aesthetic and artistic vocabulary. Students learn to help children utilize artistic media in the exploration and expression of thoughts and feelings. Emphasis is placed on design, construction, and implementation, and assessment of authentic conceptual classroom arts activities that integrate the arts with other classroom curricula. Daytime clinical hours (10) are required during this course.

T&L 419 | CURRICULUM AND STRATEGIES: SOCIAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to an integrated view of social studies for engaged citizenship. Through the study of strategies (such as concept formation, historical inquiry, role-play, etc), materials (such as primary sources) teacher candidates will learn and apply principles of curricular integration to create curriculum/units that engage elementary learners in the exploration of issues, ideas, and perspectives that impact our world.

T&L 404 and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 420 | MATH AND SCIENCE IN EARLY CHILDHOOD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course applies child development principles to the planning of science and mathematics experiences for both typically and atypically developing young children. Emphasis is placed on understanding how children develop problem-solving skills, and on recognizing how teachers can facilitate inquiry-discovery experiences for young children with diverse learning styles and needs. Course assignments include participation in experiments and field-based experiences in mathematics and sciences. Teacher candidates are required to develop and provide developmentally and culturally appropriate activities in science and mathematics activities for young children.

SCG 404, T&L 432, and admission to a College of Education graduate program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 421 | CHILD AND FAMILY IN THE URBAN COMMUNITY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on understanding the diversity of children and families in approaches to development, learning, and disability. Strategies in developing positive and supportive relationships with families of young children with special needs, including family-centered practices, will be explored. Particular attention is given to the challenges faced by teachers and other professionals in early intervention in assessing children's needs and providing services, which are reflective of the child's development within his/her diverse cultural and community context. In addition, the course examines ways to develop and maintain productive and collaborative relationships among professionals and families, communities, and other professionals across the range of support systems in the IFSP and IEP planning processes.

T&L 422 | CLASSROOM ASSESSMENT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on study, use, and evaluation of assessment practices in diverse, elementary school contexts. Assessment is addressed as part of instructional systems, attending to issues including: the appropriate use of standardized measures, formal and informal classroom assessment, portfolio development, as well as reporting to all stakeholders. This course also emphasizes ways of involving students and parents in assessment processes, how to observe and assess children individually and in classroom settings, and the use of numerous technologies as components of a classroom assessment system.

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 423 | FUNCTIONAL BEHAVIOR ASSESSMENT: INTERVENTION AND SUPPORT IN EARLY CHILDHOOD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to prepare early childhood pre-service teachers to work with children who present a variety of challenging behaviors in the classroom. Grounded in principles of Applied Behavior Analysis, the philosophy of the course is based on the premise that understanding the underlying causes of children's externalizing and internalizing behavior enables the teacher to utilize appropriate techniques in conducting behavior intervention and classroom management. Using Positive Behavioral Support and Functional Behavior Analysis (a competency required for all teachers under the provisions of IDEA), students will learn how to design and develop a Behavior Intervention Plan. Diverse methods for addressing a variety of behaviors are explored and practiced through field-based assignments that include application of behavioral assessment and intervention tools, as well as techniques. Understanding the impacts of current legislation, policy and research on practice is fostered and developed.

SCG 404 and admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 424 | INTRODUCTION TO SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the DePaul Secondary Education program as well as the professional world of secondary school teaching. In this course, candidates develop the knowledge and skills necessary for being a reflective practitioner. Candidates focus on understanding themselves (professional identity) and their behaviors in teaching situations with students in schools. These insights, combined with subject-matter knowledge, guide the development of various course assignments. Candidates will learn how to observe effectively in a school setting, to identify school governance issues, to understand school environment and the current social issues that shape it, and will experience a variety of teaching methods and resources for their future teaching. Candidates will acquire knowledge of important social concepts and theories that affect education, especially as they affect educational change in urban societies. As candidates become aware of differences in individual, ethnic, and cultural group attitudes, values and needs, they also will learn to recognize the complexities of teaching and learning in a pluralistic society. Candidates will be committed to teaching as responsible professionals who act ethically as well as in a collegial fashion. In addition to class attendance, candidates are required to complete 15 daytime fieldwork hours as part of the course. It is highly recommended that this course be taken concurrently with SCG 406.

T&L 425 | CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION IN SECONDARY EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will examine materials, methods, and techniques appropriate for teaching in secondary schools. Topics include writing instructional objectives, developing lesson plans, designing a curriculum unit, understanding classroom management and assessment related issues. Students will be encouraged to reflect upon their own emerging educational philosophies as well as draw from previous courses they have taken. Students will be given many opportunities for planning, using and evaluating a variety of instructional strategies while preparing and teaching a micro lesson in front of their peers. Students will be committed to teaching as a professional acting responsibly, ethically, and collegially in accordance to Vincentian Personalism. 30 hours Level 1 Field Experience required.

T&L 426 | TEACHING WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Prepares teacher candidates for teaching writing and composition at the middle and secondary school levels. The course focuses upon methods of teaching composition, examination of literature and research about the composing process, the development of language and reading skills, and the assessment and evaluation of writing. The development of writing curriculums will also be explored. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 427 | YOUNG EXCEPTIONAL CHILD: METHODS AND CHARACTERISTICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is a survey of the field of early childhood special education, including the Early Intervention System. Characteristics of infants, toddlers, and young children with special needs are examined in this course. Methods of working with different disabilities during children's early years will be explored. Strengths and needs of families of young children with disabilities and collaboration with family members will be emphasized. Understanding the impacts of current legislation, policy, and research on practice is fostered and developed.

SCG 404 and admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 428 | TEACHING LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Prepares teacher candidates for teaching literature at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in the teaching of literature, explores methods of teaching major literary genres, addresses problems of literacy and focuses on the transactional nature of reading and writing. Emphasis on developing a repertoire of ways of teaching literature and a variety of literature curriculums. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 429 | TEACHING YOUNG ADULT LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is devoted to the study of Young Adult Literature: an exciting, emerging field. Issues and ideas to be examined include the following: current debates regarding issues in curriculum and teaching; selecting, reading, evaluating, and teaching young adult literature; cultivation of life-long reading habits and literacy development. Students will become familiar with major writers of young adult literature, read diverse texts, explore major genres, review award winning novels, consider the role of the media, and develop creative projects.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 430 | TEACHING LITERACY K-12 | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course provides an overview of the curriculum, instruction, and assessment strategies used in K-12 classrooms to foster and develop students' L1 and L2 literacies. Through guided examination of prevailing theories of language acquisition and development that currently influence classroom practices across the K-12 continuum, this course enables future teachers of world languages to grow in their understanding of the literacy-learning contexts that students will bring to their language classrooms. Issues that emerge in planning and conducting literacy instruction in schools are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required field experiences (15 hours, minimum; level 1). Course participants enjoy multiple opportunities to apply and analyze theories; to observe, critique, and practice instructional strategies; to make informed curricular and instructional decisions; and to use assessment to inform one's planning.

T&L 431 | EARLY LANGUAGE AND LITERACY DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will focus on enhancing language development and promoting early literacy in young children. It addresses instruction and assessment of language and literacy skills. Students will learn how family/child and teacher /child interactions promote language and literacy development and learning. Implementation of language and literacy curricula and activities that lead to growth in the key areas of literacy development for preschool and primary aged children will be explored. (Combination of previous T&L 406 and T&L 412).

T&L 432 | EARLY CHILDHOOD CURRICULUM STRATEGIES AND PHILOSOPHY (BIRTH-8) | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Operating from a constructivist curricular perspective that considers individual child and the social learning context, candidates will plan, implement and evaluate activities that promote the physical, emotional, social, spiritual, aesthetic, creative, and cognitive development of young children from diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds. Methods of facilitating children's play; individuation through building on children's experiences, learning styles and interests; using technology and, developing learning centers will be emphasized. A variety of teaching methods and classroom management strategies will be discussed and illustrated, including teacher led instruction and student-centered instruction. Students will be encouraged to reflect upon their own emerging educational philosophies and teaching styles as they take part in laboratory and field experiences. Many opportunities for planning, using and evaluating a variety of teaching methods will be offered. Each student will write at least one teaching unit on a primary social studies theme. (Combination of previous T&L 407 and T&L 408)

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 433 | EARLY CHILDHOOD SPECIAL EDUCATION STRATEGIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course focuses on a range of curricular and instructional strategies that foster individual abilities and meet the individual learning needs within the contexts of group and individualized instruction in a variety of learning situations: classrooms, community and home environments. Teacher candidates acquire knowledge and skill to develop individual long-term and short-term educational service plans based on knowledge of children's needs and abilities; families' goals, priorities, and concerns for their children; communities; content areas; and early childhood curriculum goals. (Replaced HSC 408).

T&L 434 | LITERACY, LITERATURE, & THE YOUNG CHILD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course addresses the phenomenal process of literacy development in young children. Strategies for enhancing literacy through unlocking the phonemic code, acquiring vocabulary, and comprehending oral as well as print messages are emphasized within the context of choosing and using high-quality literature for children from birth through age 8. Curriculum content and sequence, instructional strategies, and assessment processes are interwoven across course assignments and field experiences. The influences of development, home languages and dialects (especially those of U.S. metropolitan areas), and educational settings are studied and applied to candidates' instructional planning and teaching.

SCG 404 and admission to a College of Education program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 436 | TEACHING AND LEARNING SECONDARY SCHOOL MATHEMATICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Prepares teacher candidates for teaching mathematics at the middle school and secondary school levels. Examines contemporary issues in teaching mathematics, methods of teaching secondary mathematics, and recent history in mathematics curriculum development of alternative teaching strategies and the implementation of the NCTM Standards. Lesson and unit development, evaluation and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 439 | METHODS OF SECONDARY SCIENCE EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to update teachers in the methods of teaching science. This involves reviewing the processes of science, theories of learning, and instructional strategies appropriate to laboratory science. This course also provides an update on the current trends and issues in science education as well as an analysis of successful science curricula programs. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 440 | EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION CROSS-CULTURAL STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

The course will discuss the historical, philosophical and cultural foundations of the education of young children in a multicultural society, emphasizing the role of ethnicity in development of young children within the context of families, childcare centers, and educational systems. Topics include: history of immigration and predictions for the future; the effects of population shifts on the education of English Language Learners; the impact of laws, litigation and executive orders on bilingual/English-as-a-Second- Language education; understanding cultural and linguistic differences regarding locating and using educational resources.

T&L 441 | METHODS AND MATERIALS FOR DUAL LANGUAGE AND MULTILINGUAL LEARNERS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course focuses on best practices in teaching and learning in ESL and bilingual early childhood classroom contexts. Students will learn about different approaches and methodologies currently used to support the development of listening, speaking, reading and writing in social and academic contexts in learners of English as a second or additional languages. Curriculum based-assessment, cultural awareness and self-reflective practice will also be addressed. 17 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 442 | EARLY LITERACY DEVELOPMENT AND SECOND LANGUAGE ACQUISITION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will examine the process of learning and using a second language. Research in second language acquisition (SLA) is multi-disciplinary in nature, reflecting the complexity of language learning and use. Linguistic, psychological and social processes that underlie language(s) learning and use will be introduced and applied to the understanding of this learning in young children. In this course, language acquisition theory concerning relationships between early literacy and oral language development in first and subsequent languages will be addressed.

T&L 443 | ASSESSMENT OF DUAL LANGUAGE AND MULTILINGUAL LEARNERS (DLL/ML) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will focus on the discussion of basic principles and current approaches to assessment of dual language and multilingual learners (DLLs/MLs) in ESL and bilingual early childhood and early elementary educational settings. The different purposes of process and product assessment tools, authentic and curriculum-based forms of assessment, issues in the assessment of DLLs and MLs, and assessment in academic areas for early elementary MLs will be explored. Research on language and literacy acquisition in MLs vis a vis instruction and assessment will be discussed. Candidates will have opportunities to critically examine and learn how to administer assessment tools used in current practice. 17 hours Level 2 Field Experience Required.

T&L 444 | INTERNSHIP IN EARLY CHILDHOOD ESL/BILINGUAL EDUCATION SETTINGS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course will focus on application of the theories in effective teaching practices, and assessment procedures appropriate for young English Language learners. It will emphasize on application of knowledge gained from previous ESL/ELL courses, and demonstration of skills necessary to work collaboratively and effectively with families of young English Language learners. Professional behaviors that respect, value, and support all children's native language and culture will be reinforced. (100 clock hours)

T&L 440, T&L 441, T&L 442, T&L 443, (BBE 408 or BBE 409), BBE 425 and BBE 466 are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 449 | STANDARD AND CONTENT-BASED METHODS OF TEACHING WORLD LANGUAGES K-12 | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course prepares candidates to teach world languages at the elementary, middle and secondary school levels consonant with an aligned approach to meeting national and state WLE standards and Common Core standards. It examines the theory and practice of traditional or standard methods of teaching world languages (e.g., communicative approach, natural approach, etc.) with an emphasis on developing alternative, post-method strategies and using diverse resources, as well as on reformulating world languages instruction to integrate subject matter content into the curriculum, including science, social studies, math, fine arts, etc. Engages candidates in understanding and applying the "Five Cs" - Communication, Cultures, Connections, Comparisons, and Communities outlined in the national standards - toward this end. Lesson and unit development, evaluation/assessment, and classroom management also will be discussed. Issues that emerge in planning and instruction are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required fieldwork (20/15 hours; level 1 in language of certification).

T&L 453 | TEACHING HISTORY AND SOCIAL SCIENCE IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Teaching, History and Social Science in Secondary Schools. Prepares for teaching history and social sciences at the middle and secondary school levels. Examines the nature and purpose of history and social sciences curriculum within secondary schools, the current status of social studies materials and practices, and issues confronting today's secondary social studies teachers. Emphasis on alternative teaching strategies, resources for teaching and learning, teachers' responsibilities in curriculum development and decision-making, and methods and materials for addressing cultural diversity. Lesson and unit development, evaluation and classroom management also will be discussed. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 466 | TEACHER AS ARTIST | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course builds on the work in T&L 465, which alongside T&L 466 is intended as a two-course sequence each complementing the other. As T&L 465 focuses on the art of teaching the visual arts, T&L 466 explores the source materials and major concepts of visual art content. Historically, artistic movements have shaped and currently identify the theories we use to define our most immediate environment. The major concepts can be connected to the artist studio and to the descriptions some artists make about the studio as a teaching space. In the course students will be introduced to a wide range of artists and their work, artistic movements and the individual artists who use teaching as a medium. How does an emerging artist or pre-service teaching artist draw on the understanding of their own work as a platform to build core principles of pedagogy? What is the link that combines a dynamic studio practice with an inspired methodology for teaching visual art? We will address these questions through creating a visual art teaching curriculum portfolio and writing a reflective artist monograph, produce a final exhibition of art and work alongside teachers and artists in the field. Site visits are required. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

T&L 425 and admission to a College of Education program are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 480 | INTERNSHIP WITH INFANTS AND TODDLERS | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Candidates conduct 75 hours of intense supervised fieldwork in an infant/toddler center where they are observing and documenting behavior and interactions, planning activities, and assessing development in children ages birth to 3. Candidates will also participate in a twice a quarter, hour and a half, seminar to reflect and discuss aspects of infant/toddler development and care, making connections between theory and practice. Onsite meetings with groups of candidates will be held weekly for supervision and reflection on practice. (2 credit hours)

T&L 481 | INTERNSHIP IN PRESCHOOL SETTING (35 CLOCK HOURS OF SUPERVISED EXPERIENCE) | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

Candidates conduct 35 hours of supervised field work in preschool during the winter quarter. The internship is designed for advanced ECE candidates to be taken before student teaching. Candidates taking this internship have either taken ECE 310: Preprimary Programs: Curriculum and Strategy (at the undergraduate level), or T&L 407: Preprimary programs: Curriculum and Strategy (at the graduate level) in a previous quarter, or they are taking these courses as co-requisites with this internship. (2 credit hours)

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 482 | INTERNSHIP IN PRIMARY SETTING (35 CLOCK HOURS OF SUPERVISED EXPERIENCE) | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

Candidates conduct 35 hours of supervised field work in a primary grade (K-3) during the spring quarter. The internship is designed for advanced ECE candidates to be taken before student teaching. Candidates taking this internship have either taken ECE 311: Curriculum and Instruction in Primary Grades (at the undergraduate level), or T&L 408: Curriculum and Instruction in Primary Grades (at the graduate level) in a previous quarter, or they are taking these courses as co-requisites with this internship. (2 credit hours)

Admission to a College of Education graduate program is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 495 | DESIGNING CURRICULUM FOR INFANTS AND TODDLERS | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

Research in neuroscience indicates that the brain developmental foundation for all later learning is created in the first three years of life. The impact and impetus for the adults (families and caregivers) who nurture and teach children from birth to three will be explored in this course. The course will examine the developmental milestones, as well, as each child's developmental profile to create a developmentally appropriate curriculum to enhance the foundation for all later learning. The course explores ways to provide a safe and challenging environment; to focus on play as a vehicle for learning for optimal developmental outcomes. Collaboration with families in addressing each child's development is featured in the course. Candidates will be expected to design curricula to meet the needs of linguistically and culturally diverse children, as well as young children with special needs.

T&L 498 | TEACHING COMPUTER SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course provides an examination of the objectives, content, and methods used for teaching computer science, with a special focus on the development of computational thinking skills. A variety of teaching methods and classroom management strategies will be discussed and illustrated, with an emphasis on inquiry-based strategies and culturally responsive pedagogical approaches.

T&L 525 | READING, WRITING, AND COMMUNICATING ACROSS THE CURRICULUM | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course analyzes the relationships among reading, writing, speaking and listening. It encourages middle level and high school teachers in all disciplines to take these interrelationships into account and to plan curricula that include current teaching strategies to enable students to become better readers, writers and thinkers in their various content-areas. This course will also concentrate on group process and its role in effective teaching within and across content-areas. Language use, learning and teaching are considered from a multicultural perspective. 30 hours Level 2 Field Experience required.

TCH 471 or TCH 472 or TCH 473 or TCH 474, and status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 575 | WLE HISTORY, POLICY, AND CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course engages students in WLE curriculum development and language program advocacy, creation, and sustainability based on an examination of federal and state WLE history and policies and on a review of national and state standards. Reviews theory and application of curriculum development to world language instructional programs, such as design, scope and sequence, organizational patterns, materials and media, teacher training, parent and community involvement, and evaluation. Principal world language education program models are examined and analyzed in light of WLE history, policy, and standards (20/15 hours; level 1).

T&L 449, BBE 407, BBE 526, BBE 560 and BBE 570 are prerequisites for this class.

T&L 583 | FIELD EXPERIENCE LAB | 1 quarter hour(Graduate)

This field-based course will facilitate pre-service teacher candidates' experiences working in elementary and middle school classrooms. This supervised field experience is an opportunity to apply content and pedagogical knowledge in authentic settings. Approximately 24 clock hours are scheduled at school sites and visible during registration though subject to modification based on changes in schools' schedules. Students will enroll in this course multiple times during their program across diverse sites and will engage in different activities aligned with concurrent courses. (1 credit hour)

T&L 584 | PRE-STUDENT TEACHING FIELD EXPERIENCE | 1 quarter hour(Graduate)

This field-based experience occurs in teacher candidates' student teaching sites. Scheduling is negotiated between teacher candidate and mentor teacher based on classroom social studies and science content area schedule. This supervised field experience is an opportunity to apply content and pedagogical knowledge as well as gain introductory contextual understandings of student teaching site. For T&L EE majors, completed application to student teaching. (1 credit hour)

T&L 585 | ELEMENTARY STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will be placed for a minimum of 10 weeks in an elementary school. Seminar will meet once a week, in the participating schools and/or at DePaul. At first, they will focus on issues of immediate concern to student teachers. As the students gain experience the seminar will examine six or eight classroom issues, that is, topics which students have found to be significant on the basis of their experience. These would include such things as assessment, evaluation, classroom management, curriculum planning, and relationships with colleagues. After delineating what the issues are, students would be expected to analyze and discuss readings which relate to the issues. Open only to DePaul students.

COREQUISITES: T&L 586. (6 credit hours)

T&L 586 | ELEMENTARY STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is taken concurrently with T&L 585, Elementary Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 585 (2 credit hours)

T&L 588 | INDEPENDENT STUDY IN TEACHING AND LEARNING | 1-4 quarter hours(Graduate)

PREREQUISITE(S): Permission of instructor, department chair and Associate Dean. (1 credit hour)

T&L 589 | THESIS RESEARCH IN TEACHING AND LEARNING | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

A student writing a thesis registers for this course for four quarter hours of credit. Where the thesis research and the writing of the thesis itself are prolonged beyond the usual time, the program advisor may require the student to register for additional credit.

SCG 451 and an approved thesis proposal is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 590 | SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours(Graduate)

Students will be placed for a minimum of 10 weeks in a secondary school. Seminar will meet once a week, in the participating schools and/or at DePaul. At first, they will focus on issues of immediate concern to student teachers. As the students gain experience, the seminar will examine six or eight classroom issues; that is, topics which students have found to be significant on the basis of their experience. These would include such topics as assessment, evaluation, classroom management, curriculum planning, and relationships with colleagues. After delineating what the issues are, students would be expected to analyze and discuss readings that relate to the issues. Open only to DePaul students. (6 credit hours)

T&L 591 | SECONDARY STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course is taken concurrently with T&L 590, Secondary Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 590 (2 credit hours)

T&L 592 | WORLD LANGUAGES STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

Student teaching is the culminating experience of the World Languages certification program. It is a ten-week, 30-hour/week experience. Students must successfully complete student teaching with a grade of B- or better in a language classroom in which they are seeking certification to teach. The course is taken concurrently with T&L 593, World Languages Seminar. Open only to DePaul students. (6 credit hours)

T&L 593 | WORLD LANGUAGES SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is taken concurrently with T&L 592, World Languages Student Teaching. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and careers as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): T&L 592 (2 credit hours)

T&L 595 | EARLY CHILDHOOD STUDENT TEACHING | 6 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course requires students to participate in supervised teaching at a cooperating school, five full days per week, for an academic quarter. Part of the teaching will be in a preprimary setting and part will be in a primary setting. Feedback and discussion of issues encountered in student teaching as well as new materials and techniques of student teaching will be included. Open only to DePaul students. (6 credit hours)

T&L 596 | EARLY CHILDHOOD STUDENT TEACHING SEMINAR | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this seminar, candidates will reflect upon their teaching experiences with young children, and collaborate with colleagues and instructor to identify alternative strategies for problematic situations. Candidates will outline ways to maintain strategies for lifelong learning. In addition, candidates will share resume development and job-search strategies. COREQUISITE: T&L 595.

T&L 600 | REGISTERED STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

Registration in this course is open to students who are not registered for any other courses but need to complete requirements/assignments for previously taken courses. It provides access to University facilities. Permission of advisor required. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

T&L 606 | SCHOOL NURSE INTERNSHIP | 8 quarter hours (Graduate)

In this eleven week supervised experience, the school nurse intern has the opportunity to develop and use school nursing methods, materials, and programs in public schools. He or she will work under the guidance of a licensed school nurse and will be supervised by a DePaul supervisor who is also a licensed school nurse.

T&L 614 | INDUCTION INTO THE TEACHING PROFESSION: EARLY CHILDHOOD | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is designed to assist first-year early childhood teachers in making the transition from student teaching to teacher. It creates a bridge between first-year teachers' formal education and the realities of their classrooms, providing assistance with: understanding their induction into the profession; analyzing their new educational contexts; actualizing their educational philosophies; developing their pedagogical knowledge; and identifying and making the most of professional support systems within their schools.

T&L 595 is a prerequisite for this course.

T&L 615 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN TEACHING AND LEARNING | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Current issues and problems in education will be discussed. Focus will be current research and best practices.

T&L 625 | CANDIDACY CULMINATING PROJECT (STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING) | 0 quarter hours (Graduate)

Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing culminating projects for their program of study, including theses, papers, and final portfolios. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of advisor required. (0 credit hours)

Status as a Graduate Education student is a prerequisite for this class.

Telecommunications (TDC)

TDC 599 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours (Graduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. (variable credit)

TDC 690 | RESEARCH SEMINAR | 1-4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Readings and discussion on current research topics. Students may register for this course no more than twice. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of the instructor. (variable credit)

TDC 696 | MASTER'S PROJECT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

(4 credit hours) Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their project. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor. Independent study form required.

TDC 698 | MASTER'S THESIS | 2 quarter hours (Graduate)

Students may register for this course only after their advisor has approved a written proposal for their thesis. Students must continue to register for this course every quarter after their first registration in it until they complete their project or thesis to the satisfaction of their advisor. They earn two hours of credit for each such registration but only four hours of credit will apply for degree credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of advisor. Independent study form required. (2 quarter hours)

Theatre Studies (THE)

THE 105 | HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Second course in a 3 course sequence.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 106 | HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE: CLASSICAL GREECE AND ROME | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 141 | DESIGN WORKSHOP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

First course in a 3 course sequence. This course will introduce the student to the art of theatre design through the examination of the principles of design and composition, the elements of theatrical design, and the nature of collaboration and communication. It is intended for those who plan to work in the theatre in areas other than design. The focus is on the aesthetic, rather than the technical, aspects of design and on how design fits into the framework of the study of theatre in general. The class is intended to prepare those pursuing a career in theatre for communicating and working with designers. Assignments will emphasize the development of creative skills and a common vocabulary in order to establish a framework for informed choices, and for an appreciation of theatre design and its various areas of specialization. In this first course we will explore the fundamentals of visual design. Students will do several basic design projects during the quarter. The process of theatrical design will be introduced by working with a classic script for design analysis and preliminary design parameters.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 142 | DESIGN WORKSHOP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second course in a 3 course sequence. In the second quarter the class will focus on applying the fundamentals of the first course to the specific task of theatre design. The emphasis is on scenic design, but costumes, lighting, and sound will also be featured. The script analyzed in the first course will continue to be used to explore the integration of design parameters with the aesthetic and conceptual goals of production. We will also discuss the design process and some of the techniques utilized by designers. Later in the quarter another classic script will be used as the foundation for a final design project culminating in a scenic design for that script.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 143 | DESIGN WORKSHOP | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence. In the third quarter the emphasis is on group artistic work. In this 'practicum' quarter students will collaborate in small groups on a design for a mythological story. Following that, and for the bulk of the quarter, students will be assigned to design teams consisting of director and designers. These teams will follow the entire design process, using a Shakespeare script, culminating in the formal presentation of a fully designed production. It is important to understand that the focus of this course is on design process and communication. The technical aspects of theatre design are kept to a minimum. The course aims to help theatre artists in their collaboration with theatre designers.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 201 | THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: INTRODUCTION TO MANAGEMENT CONCEPTS IN THE PERFORMING ARTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Through lecture, discussion, readings, videos, research and projects, the student learns about styles of arts leadership, contemporary issues and best practices in the field of non-profit arts management, the history of non-profit arts administration in the US including leaders in the field and opportunities for careers in the arts. Emphasis is placed on how non-profit organizations balance their commitment to the Art, the Artist and the Audience. Specific areas of non-profit arts management to be addressed include the role of the arts manager; the primacy of the mission; planning, change and adaptation; leadership and group dynamics; and human resources. (Cross Listed with PAM 301)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 202 | THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE AND FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Through lecture, discussion and projects, the student learns about non-profit arts organizational structures, short-and long-term planning, intersection of mission/vision/values and programming with growth and sustainability, producing vs. presenting organizations, financial management, management information systems and budgeting. (Cross-listed with PAM 302)

THE 201 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student are prerequisites for this class.

THE 203 | THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: MARKETING FOR THE ARTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Through lecture, discussion and projects, the student learns about strategies and objectives in marketing and promoting the performing arts. Specific focus is given to integrated marketing and communication strategies; market research and evaluation techniques; organizational image and branding; patron support services; and audience development. Students will create marketing and public relations plans and materials, both independently and on teams, which incorporate targeting audiences; promotions, publicity, and advertising; and working with various forms of media, including social networking and technology-based platforms. (Cross-listed with PAM 303)

THE 202 and status as an Undergraduate Theatre student are prerequisites for this class.

THE 204 | HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

First course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 205 | HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 206 | HISTORY OF DRAMATIC LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence. A study of the development of playscripts, the physical theatre, and means of production from ancient Greek and Roman societies through contemporary theatre. The course emphasizes theatre's changing role in society.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 207 | THEATRE MANAGEMENT I: INSTITUTIONAL ADVANCEMENT AND COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Through lecture, discussion and special projects, the student learns about institutional advancement and development as well as collaborations with internal and external constituencies. Topics include forming partnerships, community outreach, board development and engagement, fundraising and grant writing, donor cultivation, and the philanthropic community. This course is the final course in the four-course sequence on Performing Arts Management, and integrates the topics, vocabulary, themes, and subjects introduced in the previous three courses. (Cross-listed with PAM 304)

THE 203 and status as an Undergraduate Theatre student are prerequisites for this class.

THE 208 | UNDERAGE ONSTAGE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This class examines theatrical literature from the Ancient Greeks through today to uncover how and why playwrights include children in their works and what effect this has on audiences. Contributing variables examined while studying these plays include the time period in which they were written, the social, political, and cultural context, the playwright's style, and the genre. The class will also explore the choice faced by a number of directors: whether to use children true to the age in the script, or adults who can still play young people. The vocabulary of Dramatic Text Analysis will be taught and used when providing written and oral examination of plays covered.

THE 210 | SCRIPT ANALYSIS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A study of classical text analysis. Using dramatic literature from naturalism to the avant garde, students will dissect how the plays work structurally.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 211 | GAGA, GUNS & GAULTIER - THE POWER OF THEATRE IN POP CULTURE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course investigates popular culture's influence on theatre and performance, and theatre's influence on pop culture. We will look at plays that were written as spectacle performances, plays written based on pop culture trends, and essays relating to pop culture and its relation to the concept of performance. The course investigates complex ways in which popular culture in performance generates meaning and effect, and will also examine traditions of vaudeville, spectacle theatre, fashion shows, and the rise of the pop-cultural icon. Through readings of plays, essays, and videos, this course will address the following questions: How does the cross-fertilization between pop culture and theatre work, and why? How has dramatic literature used pop culture trends to communicate to audiences? How have other art forms used theatre to create, or enhance their performative aesthetics?.

THE 212 | INTRODUCTION TO THEATRE STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a general introduction to the aesthetics of the various forms and permutations of theatrical performance. It is a study of performance as an art, with particular emphasis upon its cultural and social influences in our society, and its relationship with the other arts and humanities. The course will emphasize the development of skills for articulate verbal and written response to performances.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 214 | ETHICAL DECISION MAKING IN THE THEATRE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Ethical decisions are a challenging part of every profession. Ethical Decision-Making in the Theatre assumes two basic questions: What is an ethical decision, and why is ethics of particular resonance for theatre professionals? Through readings, writing assignments, and class discussions, this course will work to define ethics by examining examples of both ethical and unethical behavior, will examine the ethical role that theatre plays in our society, and will debate the responsibilities that we carry into the profession as theatre artists and professionals. Through group work we will determine a framework for ethical thinking and will apply this framework to specific situations facing the theatre profession today, ultimately determining whether or not the result is an ethical decision.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 224 | DRAMATIC THEORY: TRAGEDY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the major developments in dramatic theory from Aristotle to the present. Each week students apply these principles to the writing and presentation of short theatrical works. The goal of this course is to expose students to a wide array of approaches to dramatic form.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 234 | DRAMATURGY I: INTRODUCTION TO DRAMATURGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The first course in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence. Through reading about the history of dramaturgy, the course develops the intellectual framework necessary to think about the art and science of the discipline and focuses on the study of dramaturgical issues of the past two decades. Students work on theoretical projects. Some attendance at theatre productions may be required.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 235 | DRAMATURGY I: INTRODUCTION TO PRODUCTION
DRAMATURGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The second class in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence, this course continues the work of THE 234 and emphasizes writing in a workshop context as well as the process of collaboration and hands-on collaboration itself. Much of the student work focuses on in-house theoretical theatre productions. Students who are dramaturgy-criticism majors prepare to work on their first dramaturgy project, the MFAI short plays.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 236 | DRAMATURGY I: TYA AND PLAYWORKS DRAMATURGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The third class in the three-term Dramaturgy I sequence, this course focuses on the dramaturgy for theatrical productions aimed at young audiences. A major emphasis in the class is the preparation of the actor packets and study guides for The Theatre School's Playworks series.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 246 | STAGE DESIGN FOR NON-MAJORS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The course introduces the essential principles of designing for the stage. The art of stage design is explored through the analysis and interpretation of dramatic literature. Students will engage in script analysis, creative research, critical writing, model building and rendering to present visual and written work that represents their personal reflection on the plays examined in the class.

THE 254 | POLITICAL THEATRE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course surveys political theatre from the ancient Greeks right up until today. Through an examination of the political contents of specific plays and of theoretical reading, such as manifestos, the course instructs students in critical thinking, the relationship between form and content, and between a society and one genre of art.

THE 256 | THEATRE FOR YOUNG AUDIENCES DRAMATIC LITERATURE:PLAYS FOR THE ONCE AND FUTURE AMERICAN AUDIENCE
| 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Over the past one hundred years or so, artists and educators in the United States have specifically dedicated themselves to sharing and creating aesthetic, creative experiences for young people. But what have been the impulses behind these plays and creations? Why specifically devise a theatre for young audiences (TYA)? Are children just little adult theatre goers or has an approach and methodology developed through the years to speak directly to young people? The goal of this introductory course is find some answers to these questions by surveying the history of dramatic literature for children in the United States from the beginning of the last century to the present day. Through readings, lectures, workshops, and discussions students will gain insight into the TYA theories, philosophies, styles, and practices that have accumulated over the years. By excavating the past and examining the present, students will achieve further appreciation and understanding of the spectrum of theatrical experiences written and improvised for children.

THE 258 | SHADOWS OF UNDERSTANDING: THE HOLOCAUST IN
THEATRE AND PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Holocaust of the 20th Century perpetrated and executed by Nazi Germany, has both seared itself into people's consciousness and become very much a part of world culture. Theatre and performance have been created to try to understand this event and search for meaning. Created through multiple perspectives and styles - historical and political, philosophical and religious, realistic and surrealistic, using dark humor and the power of memory, focusing on gender relations -- there is no one method of presenting the Holocaust artistically. Through a close investigation of key theatre and performances, students will discover many works that were unknown to them and that will help to shed some light on these representations more deeply, reflecting the complexity of the Holocaust in a search for understanding and ultimately seeking to answer this imperative, "Can and should art be made from representations of genocidal atrocity?."

THE 259 | PERFORMING MOSAIC: JEWISH CULTURE'S INFLUENCE ON AMERICAN THEATRE AND PERFORMANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Over the years the abundance of artistic contributions from Jewish creators--playwrights, performers, composers and lyricists, acting teachers and producers-- has helped to shape the American Theatre as we know it. Through a critical reading of the plays in their context and viewing performances on video this course will explore the unique synthesis and the long and colorful relationship between Jews and theatre in America. Critical questions to be asked are: How does the ethnic mosaic of America and American values and multi-culturalism act as an incubator? How did anti-Semitism and stereotypes play a role? Does the cultural memory of the Jew as the outsider and survivor in history" provide a particular aesthetic?.

THE 260 | CHICKS, MEAN GIRLS AND FEMMES FATALES: WOMEN WRITING IN THE AMERICAN THEATRE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines ninety years of women's dramatic writing in America from the jazz age to today. We will look at plays written by women, and theoretical essays about the plays and playwrights; biographies, as well as historical materials illuminating plays; themes and forms. Identity has always been important to American dramaturgy and women have always occupied a unique place in the theatre: as actresses, as spectators, as icons, as demons, and finally as creators. Women have been playwrights but they have also been producers and theatre adventurers.

THE 261 | OCULAR PROOF: SHAKESPEARE'S INFLUENCE IN CINEMA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Shakespeare's plays explore the scope and depth of the human experience. Using the visual elements of cinema, these epic stories translate effectively for modern audiences. Students will read four plays by Shakespeare, and explore their thematic and dramatic interpretations on film: two adapted from Shakespeare's themes and two cinematic versions of the plays themselves which will elucidate the 'ocular proof' of Shakespeare's influence on cinema.

THE 268 | INTRODUCTION TO THE PRODUCTION PROCESS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the specifics of the production process and focuses on similarities and differences between the curricular perspective of the production process at The Theatre School and that of the professional world. Through readings, lecture, and discussion, students will gain an orientation to the responsibilities and expectations of first-year crew assignments, basic skills involved in stage management, examples of the production process from both the Chicago and national theatre scenes, and the concept of collaboration as a fundamental component of all production work.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

THE 269 | STAGE MANAGEMENT WORKSHOP | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

TEC 359 | CONSTRUCTION AND RIGGING II | 3 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence. Lecture and demonstration in building, rigging, and handling of stage scenery. Special attention is given to the proper use of tools, materials, and stage hardware. (3 quarter hours)

TEC 358 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 367 | STAGE MANAGEMENT II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

First in a 3 course sequence. This course will simultaneously cover two main elements in the world of the stage manager. The first will explore the stage manager's place in the world of legitimate theatre. The second will explore options outside of that world. To this end, guest members of the professional community will provide insight regarding the role of the stage manager in these many different settings. Additionally, a portion of each class will be dedicated to discussion of practical problems encountered in the students' productions.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 368 | STAGE MANAGEMENT II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second in a 3 course sequence. This course will simultaneously cover two main elements in the world of the stage manager. The first will explore the stage manager's place in the world of legitimate theatre. The second will explore options outside of that world. To this end, guest members of the professional community will provide insight regarding the role of the stage manager in these many different settings. Additionally, a portion of each class will be dedicated to discussion of practical problems encountered in the students' productions.

TEC 367 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 369 | STAGE MANAGEMENT II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third in a 3 course sequence. This course will simultaneously cover two main elements in the world of the stage manager. The first will explore the stage manager's place in the world of legitimate theatre. The second will explore options outside of that world. To this end, guest members of the professional community will provide insight regarding the role of the stage manager in these many different settings. Additionally, a portion of each class will be dedicated to discussion of practical problems encountered in the students' productions.

TEC 368 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 371 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

First course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 372 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 373 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY: TECHNICAL | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Independent Study: Technical.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 424 | SPECIAL TOPICS IN THEATRE TECHNOLOGY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Intensive study of a unique production experience: may be history, innovative, theatrical, or film based. The course may be organized around individual and/or group projects.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 454 | COSTUME CONSTRUCTION II: PERIOD COSTUMES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An introduction to making period costumes. Both women's wear and men's wear will be covered in alternating years. Focus will be on pattern development, fit, construction techniques, sewing accuracy, and finishing techniques. Time management and meeting deadlines will be emphasized.

TEC 356 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 455 | COSTUME CONSTRUCTION II: TAILORING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Focus on 20th century tailoring techniques. Specific skills and techniques will be taught in alternating years. One year will focus on suit jackets alternating with pants and vests. Potentially both men's wear and women's wear will be covered.

TEC 356 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 456 | COSTUME CONSTRUCTION II: SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will change topics at minimum every other year.

Topics for the class could include: period understructures, couture sewing techniques, stretch fabrics, dancewear, leatherwork, fabric embellishment, and costumes for film. Content will be chosen based on student population and unique opportunities that may come up.

TEC 356 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student or permission of instructor is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 457 | PRODUCTION MANAGEMENT SEMINAR | 3 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Explores through lectures and projects the roles of the managerial staff in the modern theater. A basic knowledge of theater terminology and some knowledge of management practice is required. (3 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 458 | PRODUCTION MANAGEMENT SEMINAR | 3 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Explores through lectures and projects the roles of the managerial staff in the modern theater. A basic knowledge of theater terminology and some knowledge of management practice is required. (3 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 459 | PRODUCTION MANAGEMENT SEMINAR | 3 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Explores through lectures and projects the roles of the managerial staff in the modern theater. A basic knowledge of theater terminology and some knowledge of management practice is required. (3 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 460 | THEATRE MANAGEMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Theatre Management.

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 467 | STAGE MANAGEMENT III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of 369 - this course will simultaneously cover two main elements in the world of the stage manager. The first will explore the stage manager's place in the world of legitimate theatre. The second will explore options outside of that world. To this end, guest members of the professional community will provide insight regarding the role of the stage manager in these many different settings. Additionally, a portion of each class will be dedicated to discussion of practical problems encountered in the students' productions. With the addition of a lab session.

TEC 369 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 468 | STAGE MANAGEMENT III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of 467 with the addition of a lab session.

TEC 467 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 469 | STAGE MANAGEMENT III | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A continuation of 467 with the addition of a lab session.

TEC 468 and status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 471 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE III | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

First course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience. (5 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 472 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE III | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Second course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience. (5 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 473 | TECHNICAL PRODUCTION PRACTICE III | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Third course in a 3 course sequence. For all technical students, assignments will be commensurate with ability and experience. (5 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

TEC 490 | INTERNSHIP | 5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The internship provides the student with an opportunity to learn by working with experienced professionals in an area related to his or her area of study at The Theatre School. (5 quarter hours)

Status as an Undergraduate or Graduate Theatre student is a prerequisite for this class.

User Experience Design (UXD)

UXD 101 | DESIGN PRINCIPLES FOR USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN
(FORMERLY ISM 101) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces user experience design principles using code. User experience design principles include: affordance, conceptual model, consistency, constraint, discoverability, feedback, mapping, and signifiers. Students will analyze user experience design principles through activities and group discussion. Students will apply user experience design principles through design exercises and projects. This is an introductory-level course, prior experience is not expected, beginners are welcome.

UXD 205 | INTERSECTIONAL THEMES AND DESIGN (FORMERLY ISM 205)
| 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This lecture and user experience design research course focuses on contemporary feminist theoretical debates and explores the complex relations and tensions between gender, sexuality, race/ethnicity and class as they relate to and intersect design. Through critical readings, central theories will be scrutinized to see how they are able to theorize other power dimensions such as heteronormativity, racism, (post)colonialism and classism.

UXD 208 | VIRTUAL WORLDS AND ONLINE COMMUNITIES (FORMERLY
ISM 208) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Environments such as social networking sites, multiplayer online games and other online communities are becoming an increasingly large part of how we work, play, and learn. This course introduces the fundamentals for the interdisciplinary study of cyberculture and online social behavior. By examining core scholarship in this area, together with analyzing an existing virtual world, game, or online community, students will learn to research and understand new technologically-enabled social forms as they are emerging.

WRD 104 is a prerequisite for this class.

UXD 210 | INTRODUCTION TO USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN (FORMERLY
ISM 210) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course familiarizes students with the user-centered design process, including user and task analysis, interaction design, prototyping, and evaluation. Students study human perception, cognition and motor abilities as they relate to the design of interactive systems. In a series of projects, students design and revise both low-fidelity and high-fidelity interactive prototypes as they apply a user-centered design process. Emphasized topics include user profiles, information architecture, and usability testing. Students provide written analysis of their research and process.

UXD 220 | PROTOTYPING METHODS I (FORMERLY ISM 220) | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on designing information and interaction through prototyping, with an emphasis on information architecture and interaction design. Students create working low to mid-fidelity prototypes that demonstrate a range of design patterns for interactive systems.

UXD 101 and UXD 210 are prerequisites for this class.

UXD 222 | DATA VISUALIZATION DESIGN (FORMERLY ISM 222) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course discusses the basic problems and techniques of visualizing quantitative and qualitative data. Topics include: perception, types of information, representation of univariate and multivariate data and relational information, analysis of representations, presentation, and dynamic and interactive visualizations. Students will create visualizations using graphical software.

UXD 101 is a prerequisite for this class.

UXD 225 | CODING DESIGN FRAMEWORKS (FORMERLY ISM 225) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

User Experience Designers facilitate communication between people, communities, and computer-based systems. We think in terms of code, without necessarily writing the code ourselves. This class introduces user experience design students to code-facilitated systems thinking: breaking down people's activities and community activity into a set of steps that allows the use of computer-based systems as tools. Students work with code to build prototype systems based on the needs of people, with a focus on ethical and inclusive design. Topics include: algorithms, system thinking, instruction sets, UXD software design and engineering, and use-case scenarios.

UXD 210 and IT 130 are prerequisites for this class.

UXD 227 | COMPUTING HUMAN LIVES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Data structures shape and organize the data that keeps track of people's lives online. This class will introduce students to multiple types of data structures as they relate to designing user experiences in interactive applications. Students will learn via direct experience, working with code and data relevant to user experience design. Conceptual topics include: ethics, inclusion, accessibility, and human-centered approaches to data privacy and control.

UXD 101 is a prerequisite for this class.

UXD 251 | UI/UX PROTOTYPING WORKSHOP | 2-2.25 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to creating interactive software prototypes through hands on, in-depth experience with a professional prototyping software package. Students will explore fundamental strategies in executing the design of cross-platform websites and applications, from mobile to desktop. Topics and techniques covered during lectures will be reinforced through in-class exercises and projects. Specific tools selected by the instructor. Tools covered vary with each offering. Contact instructor for more information. Course may be repeated with different topics.

UXD 101 is a prerequisite for this class.

UXD 260 | USER EXPERIENCE RESEARCH AND EVALUATION (FORMERLY ISM 260) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course provides in-depth knowledge about user research and usability evaluation methods. Students will engage with user research methods including (but not limited to) interviews, personas, and scenarios as well as prototype evaluation methods including (but not limited to) expert inspections and usability testing. Students will learn when to apply particular research and evaluation methods, the advantages and disadvantages of each method, and how to integrate such methods into their professional practice. Students will also learn to effectively and professionally communicate their findings.

UXD 210 is the prerequisite for this class.

UXD 270 | USER-CENTERED WEB DESIGN (FORMERLY ISM 270) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Principles of interactive design for web pages and sites. Design patterns for information navigation. Use of HTML and CSS to produce standards- and accessibility-compliant web pages. Overview of technologies supporting dynamic and interactive content.

IT 130 or HCI 201 is a prerequisite for this class

UXD 320 | PROTOTYPING METHODS II (FORMERLY ISM 320) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will deepen skills in design and prototyping by challenging students to solve real-world problems. Students will apply organizational and analytical strategies learned in UXD while developing more advanced prototyping skills with a range of tools and methods.

UXD 220 or GD 215 or GD 216 are the prerequisites for this class.

UXD 329 | AI APPROACHES FOR USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Artificial intelligence is an increasingly important part of design processes, including user experience design. In this class, students will encounter both simple and complex artificial intelligence, using code libraries to experiment with intelligent agents, chat bots, as well as automated and generative design. This forward-thinking class prepares students for the near future of design processes in which human designers work closely with AI programmers. Topics include: machine and deep learning, data science and predictive analytics for UXD, and designing for adaptive systems.

UXD 225 or IT 130 is a prerequisite for this class.

UXD 336 | INTERACTIVE MEDIA SCRIPTING FOR PROGRAMMERS (FORMERLY ISM 336) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Object-oriented programming in ActionScript for students who already know how to program. Students will design, code and test interactive media using standard and custom designed classes. PREREQUISITE(S): Experience in at least one high-level programming language.

UXD 360 | USER EXPERIENCE RESEARCH METHOD (FORMERLY ISM 360) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Overview of user research and usability evaluation methods. User research includes interviews, profiles and scenarios. Usability evaluation methods include expert inspections and usability testing.

UXD 210 is the prerequisite for this class.

UXD 381 | QUANTITATIVE DESIGN RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students are introduced to quantitative design methods used to understand users. Specifically, students will learn the role of quantitative design research in the design process and how to select the most appropriate methods to collect and analyze quantitative data about users. Methods taught include (but are not limited to) surveys, web analytics, A/B testing, card sorting, and eye tracking. Students will also learn how to effectively communicate and summarize their findings using description and basic statistics reported in formats such as design documents, presentations, reports, and visualizations.

UXD 210 and IT 223 are prerequisites for this class.

UXD 382 | QUALITATIVE DESIGN RESEARCH METHODS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

In this course, students are introduced to qualitative design methods used to understand users and the context of technology use. Students will understand the role of qualitative design research in the design process and learn how to select the most appropriate methods to collect and analyze qualitative data about users including (but are not limited to) contextual inquiry, interviews, secondary research, and focus groups. Students will learn methods for synthesizing qualitative data such as affinity diagramming experience mapping. User personas, scenarios, and sketches, will also be practiced to effectively communicate and summarize findings.

UXD 210 and IT 223 are prerequisites for this class.

UXD 390 | TOPICS IN INTERACTIVE AND SOCIAL MEDIA (FORMERLY ISM 390) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Specific topics will be selected by the instructor and may vary with each quarter. PREREQUISITE(S): For specific prerequisites, see syllabus or consult with course instructor.

UXD 394 | USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN PROJECTS (FORMERLY ISM 394) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The User Experience Design Projects Capstone 2-course sequence engages students in design scenarios in connection with an organization, initiative, or creative project. Students work in groups to assess project needs, apply research methods, generate ideas, develop and test prototypes, and implement solutions, all from a human-centered design approach. Students must successfully complete both User Experience Design Projects Capstone 1 and 2 in sequence to receive any credit. At the end of the UX Design Projects Capstone sequence students will 1) present results to an audience [communications], 2) create a comprehensive case study [connecting concepts/reflection], and 3) create content relevant for a professional portfolio and/or resume based on the course project. These courses provide students with an opportunity to integrate their major area of design study with concepts introduced in their general education program while satisfying both the Experiential Learning requirement and the Capstone requirement.

UXD 395 | USER EXPERIENCE DESIGN PROJECTS 2 (FORMERLY ISM 395) | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

The User Experience Design Projects Capstone 2-course sequence engages students in design scenarios in connection with an organization, initiative, or creative project. Students work in groups to assess project needs, apply research methods, generate ideas, develop and test prototypes, and implement solutions, all from a human-centered design approach. Students must successfully complete both User Experience Design Projects Capstone 1 and 2 in sequence to receive any credit. At the end of the UX Design Projects Capstone sequence students will 1) present results to an audience [communications], 2) create a comprehensive case study [connecting concepts/reflection], and 3) create content relevant for a professional portfolio and/or resume based on the course project. These courses provide students with an opportunity to integrate their major area of design study with concepts introduced in their general education program while satisfying both the Experiential Learning requirement and the Capstone requirement.

UXD 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY (FORMERLY ISM 399) | 1-8 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Independent study supervised by an instructor. Independent study form required. Can be repeated for credit. Variable Credit. PREREQUISITE(S): None. (variable credit)

Value-Creating Education (VCE)

VCE 310 | HUMAN GEOGRAPHY AND COMMUNITIES STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores Japanese educator Tsunesaburo Makiguchi's (1871-1944) pioneering educational paradigm of human geography and its innovative curricular application in local communities studies. Students will also explore Makiguchi's unique approaches to reading and writing instruction. Bringing the community into the classroom and the classroom into the community, Makiguchi's synergistic harmonization of life and learning outlines multiple modes of interaction between humans and their natural surroundings. This approach employs direct observation of phenomena, fact, and daily living to elucidate the causal laws connecting humans and their surroundings. Special focus is placed on the contemporary relevance of this approach and on Makiguchi's unique contributions of "humanitarian competition", the development of identity in local, national, and global dimensions, and on education as a socially and epistemologically empowering act.

VCE 311 | VALUE-CREATING APPROACHES TO SOCIETY, KNOWLEDGE, AND POWER | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the formative context and content of value creation as the font of agency, social engagement, and genuine, almost existential happiness. Centered on the non-Western perspectives, radical critiques, and pragmatic actions of Japanese educator and Buddhist war resister Tsunesaburo Makiguchi (1871- 1944), the course addresses important differences between cognition and evaluation, fact and value, knowing and belief. Framing value in terms of aesthetic or sensory beauty, subjective gain or utility, and social good, the course engages students in considerations of value-creating approaches to society, knowledge, and power, and the educative impact this has for oneself and others to lead contributive lives in an interconnected world.

VCE 320 | HUMAN REVOLUTION IN SCHOOLS AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the thought and practice of influential Japanese educator and peace activist, Josei Toda (1900-1958). Centered on Today's principle of human revolution, or the profound and persistent inner transformation at one's deep interiority, the course covers the history and context informing Today's early and late pedagogy and social activism, and examines themes underpinning his sweeping and widely popular approaches to education and human development, including deductive reasoning across the curriculum, literacy development, educating society's most marginalized children, educational leadership, test-preparation, and value creation. The course also examines Today's declaration for the abolition of nuclear weapons and perspective on global citizenship as unifying forces across racial, ethnic, and geographic boundaries.

VCE 331 | HUMAN EDUCATION AND THE POETIC SPIRIT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

What does it mean to be "fully human"? This course explores that question through the unique lenses of "human education" (ningen kyiku) and the "poetic spirit" (shigokoro) advanced by renowned global educator Daisaku Ikeda. Comprising four interlocking ideals and commitments, dialogue, global citizenship, value creation, and creative coexistence, human education is an East-West approach to being and becoming, encouraging and fostering others, and awakening to the fullness and possibility of our shared humanity in a complex and socio-ecologically interconnected world. The poetic spirit is an expansive and all-encompassing heart or mind free from the fetters of institutional and ideological impositions; it underpins human creativity and imagination, imparts hope and joy, and propels us to transform our inner world and manifest the causality of the eternal in the present. Together, human education and the poetic spirit offer a fresh and necessary perspective on the interdependence of all life and living and on courageous practices of compassion, inclusivity, diversity, and equity.

VCE 332 | DAISAKU IKEDA'S EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE (2) DIALOGUES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces candidates to Daisaku Ikeda's (b. 1928) philosophy and practice of dialogue in, as, and for education. The course covers the history and context informing Ikeda's approach to dialogue across difference and examines key themes and topics in Ikeda's over 70 published dialogues with leaders in politics, peace, culture, and education. Candidates in this course will read a number of Ikeda's published dialogues on education.

VCE 333 | PEACEBUILDING AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the relationship between education and global peace. Centered on the philosophy and practice of renowned global peacebuilder and educator, Daisaku Ikeda, this course engages students in considering the causes, conditions, and modes of confronting the most urgent and persistent challenges facing humanity and our planet. Focus is placed on Ikeda's citizen diplomacy, policy analyses, faith in civil society, and decades of annual peace proposals as a sweeping curriculum of global citizenship and value creation. Students will map the interrelated concepts, themes, issues, and aspects that animate this peacebuilding curriculum and explore the ways that humanity's most pressing challenges and sources of division are, fundamentally, matters of education.

VCE 340 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS OF VALUE-CREATING EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces candidates to the Eastern and Western theoretical foundations undergirding the educational philosophies and practices of Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Although, theoretical foundations of Makiguchi's early curriculum theorizing will be addressed, special focus will be placed on the Eastern and Western perspectives and practices informing Makiguchi's value-creating pedagogy and Ikeda's value-creating education.

VCE 350 | EDUCATION FOR GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines education for global citizenship, or what is also called cosmopolitanism and world citizenship. Global citizenship is the idea that human individuals, irrespective of place of birth or cultural background, are citizens of the world. This course explores the idea of global citizenship and its implications for questions of justice, culture, and education. The course engages global citizenship from its historical development in the Western philosophical tradition, beginning in Ancient Greece, through the Enlightenment and into its most recent incarnation as a response to conditions of globalization. It will consider the manifestations of global citizenship beyond the West, with an especial focus on global citizenship in the pedagogy of value-creating educators Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Drawing resources from various disciplines (political theory, anthropology, moral philosophy, curriculum theory), this course seeks to understand the potential and limitations of global citizenship to respond to contemporary issues in education in times of globalization.

VCE 360 | DIALOGUE AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines dialogue in, as, and for education. It explores the role of dialogue across difference and dialogue relative to questions of justice, culture, and education. The course engages dialogue as conceptualized from various educational philosophers and in various contexts, including its most recent incarnation as a necessity in an interdependent, multilingual, and globalized world. The course will consider the manifestations of dialogue and education beyond the West, with an especial focus on dialogue for global citizenship in the pedagogy of value-creating educators Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Drawing resources from various disciplines (political theory, anthropology, literary theory, moral philosophy, education), this course seeks to understand the potential and limitations of dialogue in response to contemporary issues in education in times of globalization.

VCE 370 | IKEDA/SOKA STUDIES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course engages students in critically analyzing scholarship and modes of inquiry in the international field of Ikeda/Soka studies in education. Centered on the far-reaching thought of Daisaku Ikeda and the heritage of ideas and ideals from Tsunesaburo Makiguchi and Josei Toda that he has embraced, developed, and spread globally under the broad banner of soka, or "value creation," this rapidly growing field shapes the practice of value-creating education for global citizenship across diverse disciplines and contexts. Students will analyze intrinsic and extrinsic scholarship in the field, formulate their own lines of inquiry, and conduct reviews of related literature.

VCE 380 | VALUE CREATION IN APPLICATION (LOCAL AND GLOBAL CONTEXTS) | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course engages candidates in the practical application of value-creating approaches in local and global contexts. Whether educating learners in schools, active in the arts, or confronting the challenges of climate change, global health, systemic racism, or political divisions in civil society, the corporate sector, or nongovernmental and faith organizations, candidates will apply theoretical and empirical perspectives on value creation to their personal and professional activities. They will map out dispositional orientations, programmatic designs, practices, assessment, and reflective evaluation relating to these activities to engage with others in the dialogic and agentic creation of aesthetically gratifying, individually beneficial, and socially contributive outcomes of value. Candidates will consider the relevance of themes from core courses in the Value-Creating Education for Global Citizenship Program and explore ways of fostering value-creating approaches in others. Prerequisites: at least 6 VCE courses (or equivalent)

VCE 390 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This Independent study/Internship course is specially designed for candidates in Value-Creating Education for Global Citizenship. It is intended for students who wish to deepen understanding of, and explore, key ideas, theories, and practices in value-creating education for global citizenship. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with tools for curriculum development and practical instructional opportunities that will enable them to become critical and reflective practitioners. Permission of Department Chair and Associate Dean is required.

VCE 395 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This special topics course is specially designed for candidates in Value-Creating Education for Global Citizenship. It focuses on unique and timely issues in value-creating education for global citizenship. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with opportunities that will enable them to become critical and reflective practitioners of value-creating education for global citizenship.

VCE 510 | HUMAN GEOGRAPHY AND COMMUNITIES STUDIES | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course explores Japanese educator Tsunesaburo Makiguchi's (1871-1944) pioneering educational paradigm of human geography and its innovative curricular application in local communities studies. Students will also explore Makiguchi's unique approaches to reading and writing instruction. Bringing the community into the classroom and the classroom into the community, Makiguchi's synergistic harmonization of life and learning outlines multiple modes of interaction between humans and their natural surroundings. This approach employs direct observation of phenomena, fact, and daily living to elucidate the causal laws connecting humans and their surroundings. Special focus is placed on the contemporary relevance of this approach and on Makiguchi's unique contributions of "humanitarian competition", the development of identity in local, national, and global dimensions, and on education as a socially and epistemologically empowering act.

VCE 511 | VALUE-CREATING APPROACHES TO SOCIETY, KNOWLEDGE, AND POWER | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course explores the formative context and content of value creation as the font of agency, social engagement, and genuine, almost existential happiness. Centered on the non-Western perspectives, radical critiques, and pragmatic actions of Japanese educator and Buddhist war resister Tsunesaburo Makiguchi (1871-1944), the course addresses important differences between cognition and evaluation, fact and value, knowing and belief. Framing value in terms of aesthetic or sensory beauty, subjective gain or utility, and social good, the course engages students in considerations of value-creating approaches to society, knowledge, and power, and the educative impact this has for oneself and others to lead contributive lives in an interconnected world.

VCE 520 | HUMAN REVOLUTION IN SCHOOLS AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the thought and practice of influential Japanese educator and peace activist, Josei Toda (1900-1958). Centered on Today's principle of human revolution, or the profound and persistent inner transformation at one's deep interiority, the course covers the history and context informing Today's early and late pedagogy and social activism, and examines themes underpinning his sweeping and widely popular approaches to education and human development, including deductive reasoning across the curriculum, literacy development, educating society's most marginalized children, educational leadership, test-preparation, and value creation. The course also examines Today's declaration for the abolition of nuclear weapons and perspective on global citizenship as unifying forces across racial, ethnic, and geographic boundaries.

VCE 531 | HUMAN EDUCATION AND THE POETIC SPIRIT | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

What does it mean to be "fully human?" This course explores that question through the unique lenses of "human education" (ningen kyiku) and the "poetic spirit" (shigokoro) advanced by renowned global educator Daisaku Ikeda. VCE 532 | DAISAKU IKEDA'S PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE OF DIALOGUE | 4 quarter hours(Graduate)

This course introduces candidates to Daisaku Ikeda's (b. 1928) philosophy and practice of dialogue in, as, and for education. The course covers the history and context informing Ikeda's approach to dialogue across difference and examines key themes and topics in Ikeda's many published dialogues with leaders in fields of politics, peace, culture, and education. Candidates in this course will read and analyze a number of Ikeda's published dialogues on education.

VCE 533 | PEACEBUILDING AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course explores the relationship between education and global peace. Centered on the philosophy and practice of renowned global peacebuilder and educator, Daisaku Ikeda, this course engages students in considering the causes, conditions, and modes of confronting the most urgent and persistent challenges facing humanity and our planet. Focus is placed on Ikeda's citizen diplomacy, policy analyses, faith in civil society, and decades of annual peace proposals as a sweeping curriculum of global citizenship and value creation. Students will map the interrelated concepts, themes, issues, and aspects that animate this peacebuilding curriculum and explore the ways that humanity's most pressing challenges and sources of division are, fundamentally, matters of education.

VCE 540 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS OF VALUE-CREATING EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces candidates to the Eastern and Western theoretical foundations undergirding the educational philosophies and practices of Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Although, theoretical foundations of Makiguchi's early curriculum theorizing will be addressed, special focus will be placed on the Eastern and Western perspectives and practices informing Makiguchi's value-creating pedagogy and Ikeda's value-creating education.

VCE 550 | EDUCATION FOR GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines education for global citizenship, or what is also called cosmopolitanism and world citizenship. Global citizenship is the idea that human individuals, irrespective of place of birth or cultural background, are citizens of the world. This course explores the idea of global citizenship and its implications for questions of justice, culture, and education. The course engages global citizenship from its historical development in the Western philosophical tradition, beginning in Ancient Greece, through the Enlightenment and into its most recent incarnation as a response to conditions of globalization. It will consider the manifestations of global citizenship beyond the West, with an especial focus on global citizenship in the pedagogy of value-creating educators Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Drawing resources from various disciplines (political theory, anthropology, moral philosophy, curriculum theory), this course seeks to understand the potential and limitations of global citizenship to respond to contemporary issues in education in times of globalization.

VCE 560 | DIALOGUE AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines dialogue in, as, and for education. It explores the role of dialogue across difference and dialogue relative to questions of justice, culture, and education. The course engages dialogue as conceptualized from various educational philosophers and in various contexts, including its most recent incarnation as a necessity in an interdependent, multilingual, and globalized world. The course will consider the manifestations of dialogue and education beyond the West, with an especial focus on dialogue for global citizenship in the pedagogy of value-creating educators Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, Josei Toda, and Daisaku Ikeda. Drawing resources from various disciplines (political theory, anthropology, literary theory, moral philosophy, education), this course seeks to understand the potential and limitations of dialogue in response to contemporary issues in education in times of globalization.

VCE 570 | IKEDA/SOKA STUDIES IN EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course engages students in critically analyzing scholarship and modes of inquiry in the international field of Ikeda/Soka studies in education. Centered on the far-reaching thought of Daisaku Ikeda and the heritage of ideas and ideals from Tsunesaburo Makiguchi and Josei Toda that he has embraced, developed, and spread globally under the broad banner of soka, or "value creation," this rapidly growing field shapes the practice of value-creating education for global citizenship across diverse disciplines and contexts. Students will analyze intrinsic and extrinsic scholarship in the field, formulate their own lines of inquiry, and conduct reviews of related literature.

VCE 580 | VALUE CREATION IN APPLICATION (LOCAL AND GLOBAL CONTEXTS) | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course engages candidates in the practical application of value creation in diverse local and global contexts, professional fields, and personal activities. Synthesizing theoretical, applied, and empirical research and core concepts and principles from Daisaku Ikeda, Josei Toda, and Tsunesaburo Makiguchi, candidates will develop concrete, appropriate, and professionally feasible applications of value-creating approaches for global citizenship. Prerequisites: at least 6 VCE courses (or equivalent).

VCE 590 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This Independent study/Internship course is specially designed for candidates in Value-Creating Education for Global Citizenship. It is intended for students who wish to deepen understanding of, and explore, key ideas, theories, and practices in value-creating education for global citizenship. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with tools for curriculum development and practical instructional opportunities that will enable them to become critical and reflective practitioners. Permission of Department Chair and Associate Dean is required.

VCE 595 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This special topics course is specially designed for candidates in Value-Creating Education for Global Citizenship. It focuses on unique and timely issues in value-creating education for global citizenship. The course has as an overall objective to provide learners with opportunities that will enable them to become critical and reflective practitioners of value-creating education for global citizenship.

VCE 633 | DAISAKU IKEDA'S EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE - PEACE PROPOSALS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces candidates to Daisaku Ikeda's (b. 1928) philosophy and practice of peace. The course covers the history and context informing Ikeda's extensive peace proposals and engages students in reading in translation a number of Ikeda's published peace proposals, particularly as these relate to education in global contexts. The course will address key concepts in Ikeda's peace proposals such as human education, human dignity, human security, nuclear abolition, Buddhist humanism, value creation, human revolution, interdependence, student-teacher relationship, happiness, world citizenship, and dialogue. Status as an EDD student with a Global Catholic Educational Leadership concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

VCE 700 | REGISTERED DOCTORAL STUDENT IN GOOD STANDING | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This registration is required of all doctoral students who are not enrolled in a doctoral course, but are completing course requirements and/or dissertation research. It provides access to University facilities.

Academic advisor approval required. After the third enrollment, dissertation chair approval required. (0 credit hours)

Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

VCE 706 | CANDIDACY PAPER | 0 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Registration in this course is required of all students who are not enrolled in a course but are completing a dissertation. It provides access to university facilities. Permission of advisor required. This registration indicates that a student has successfully completed the candidacy paper as specified in the Doctoral Student Handbook. (0 credit hours)

Status as a EDD student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class.

VCE 710 | HUMAN GEOGRAPHY AND COMMUNITIES STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores Japanese educator Tsunesaburo Makiguchi's (1871-1944) pioneering educational paradigm of human geography and its innovative curricular application in local communities studies. Students will also explore Makiguchi's unique approaches to reading and writing instruction. Bringing the community into the classroom and the classroom into the community, Makiguchi's synergistic harmonization of life and learning outlines multiple modes of interaction between humans and their natural surroundings. This approach employs direct observation of phenomena, fact, and daily living to elucidate the causal laws connecting humans and their surroundings. Special focus is placed on the contemporary relevance of this approach and on Makiguchi's unique contributions of humanitarian competition, the development of identity in local, national, and global dimensions, and on education as a socially and epistemologically empowering act. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of human geography and communities studies, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 711 | VALUE-CREATING APPROACHES TO SOCIETY, KNOWLEDGE, AND POWER | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores the formative context and content of value creation as the font of agency, social engagement, and genuine, almost existential happiness. Centered on the non-Western perspectives, radical critiques, and pragmatic actions of Japanese educator and Buddhist war resister Tsunesaburo Makiguchi (1871-1944), the course addresses important differences between cognition and evaluation, fact and value, knowing and belief. Framing value in terms of aesthetic or sensory beauty, subjective gain or utility, and social good, the course engages students in considerations of value-creating approaches to society, knowledge, and power, and the educative impact this has for oneself and others to lead contributive lives in an interconnected world. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of value-creating education for global citizenship, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry. Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 720 | HUMAN REVOLUTION IN SCHOOLS AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the thought and practice of influential Japanese educator and peace activist, Josei Toda (1900-1958). Centered on Toda's principle of human revolution, or the profound and persistent inner transformation at one's deep interiority, the course covers the history and context informing Today's early and late pedagogy and social activism, and examines themes underpinning his sweeping and widely popular approaches to education and human development, including deductive reasoning across the curriculum, literacy development, educating society's most marginalized children, educational leadership, test-preparation, and value creation. The course also examines Today's declaration for the abolition of nuclear weapons and perspective on global citizenship as unifying forces across racial, ethnic, and geographic boundaries. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of value-creating education for global citizenship, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 731 | HUMAN EDUCATION AND THE POETIC SPIRIT | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

What does it mean to be "fully human"? This course explores that question through the unique lenses of "human education" (ningen kyoiku) and the "poetic spirit" (shigokoro) advanced by renowned global educator Daisaku Ikeda. Comprising four interlocking ideals and commitments, dialogue, global citizenship, value creation, and creative coexistence, human education is an East-West approach to being and becoming, encouraging and fostering others, and awakening to the fullness and possibility of our shared humanity in a complex and socio-ecologically interconnected world. The poetic spirit is an expansive and all-encompassing heart or mind free from the fetters of institutional and ideological impositions; it underpins human creativity and imagination, imparts hope and joy, and propels us to transform our inner world and manifest the causality of the eternal in the present.

Together, human education and the poetic spirit offer a fresh and necessary perspective on the interdependence of all life and living and on transformational practices of inclusivity, diversity, and equity. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of value-creating education for global citizenship, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry. Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 732 | DAISAKU IKEDA'S PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE OF DIALOGUE | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course introduces candidates to Daisaku Ikeda's philosophy and practice of dialogue in, as, and for education. The course covers the history and context informing Ikeda's approach to dialogue across difference and examines key themes and topics in Ikeda's many published dialogues with leaders in the fields of politics, peace, culture, and education. Candidates in this course will read a number of Ikeda's published dialogues on education. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of value-creating dialogue, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry.

Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 733 | PEACEBUILDING AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course explores the relationship between education and global peace. Centered on the philosophy and practice of renowned global peacebuilder and educator, Daisaku Ikeda, this course engages students in considering the causes, conditions, and modes of confronting the most urgent and persistent challenges facing humanity and our planet. Focus is placed on Ikeda's citizen diplomacy, policy analyses, faith in civil society, and decades of annual peace proposals as a sweeping curriculum of global citizenship and value creation. Students will map the interrelated concepts, themes, issues, and aspects that animate this peacebuilding curriculum and explore the ways that humanity's most pressing challenges and sources of division are, fundamentally, matters of education. In addition to deepening candidates' understanding and critical analyses of content and constituent elements of peacebuilding and education, this course provides conceptual, theoretical, and philosophical frameworks for dissertational research and lines of inquiry. Status as an EDD, PhD or EdS student with a declared concentration is a prerequisite for this class..

VCE 849 | SUPERVISED DISSERTATION (PHD) PROPOSAL DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students register for this course for the quarter in which they defend their dissertation proposals. Permission of dissertation chair required.

VCE 859 | INDEPENDENT DISSERTATION RESEARCH (PHD): VALUES-CREATING EDUCATION FOR GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Students register for this course for the quarter in which they defend their dissertations. Permission of dissertation chair required.

Visual Effects (VFX)

VFX 200 | INTRODUCTION TO VISUAL EFFECTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Introduction to the use, history, and production methodologies of visual effects. Fundamental techniques will be explored through compositing exercises and projects. PREREQUISITES: NONE.

VFX 301 | VISUAL EFFECTS FOR EDITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course integrates principal visual effects tools into post-production editorial workflows. Emphasis on efficient image manipulation and basic compositing practices. PREREQUISITE(S): VFX 200.

VFX 305 | VISUAL EFFECTS PIPELINES WORKSHOP | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This workshop is a comprehensive survey of the creative and technical pipelines used for the production of visual effects. Emphasis is placed on how images, CG assets, and data are created and flow through production departments from acquisition through final imagery.

VFX 310 | GAME ENGINES FOR FILMMAKERS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course focuses on teaching both filmmakers and artists the fundamentals of a game engine. Topics include how to develop or import materials, environment pieces, animations, as well as creating lighting, post processing and cinematics. Emphasis will be placed on creating 3D set pieces and cinematic sequences. No previous experience with 3D is required.

VFX 320 | FUNDAMENTALS OF VIRTUAL PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the creation of in-camera visual effects on a virtual production stage. Topics include volume setup, camera tracking, virtual environment operation, screen management, and filming procedures.

FILM 110 or ANI 156 or GAM 180 or VFX 310 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 330 | VISUAL EFFECTS SUPERVISION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines production from the perspective of the visual effects supervisor. The visual effects supervisor is the creative and technical director overseeing all aspects of the visual effects creation. Emphasis is placed on sequence design, on-set photography and data collection, as well as production management.

FILM 110 and POST 110 are prerequisites for this class.

VFX 334 | VIRTUAL CINEMATOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces real world cinematic techniques within a computer graphics environment. Emphasis is placed on camera movement, composition, pacing, lighting, and aesthetics.

(VFX 200 or VFX 374) and ANI 230 are prerequisites for this class.

VFX 340 | PREVISUALIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces techniques for the rapid prototyping of creative camera and visual solutions for film and animation. Topics include story analysis, shot and sequence design, motion capture editing, technical visualization for production, and editing an effective previsualized animatic.

ANI 310 or VFX 334 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 374 | COMPOSITING I | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Compositing is the art and science of manipulating the content of photographic images. This project-based course builds the core tool set for compositing live-action filmed footage. PREREQUISITE(S): VFX 200 or ANI 105 or GD 105 or DC 225.

VFX 378 | COMPOSITING II | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course expands compositing workflows into three dimensional space for set extensions and compositing with complex camera movement. Emphasis on camera tracking, projections, camera stitching, morphing, and advanced compositing techniques.

VFX 374 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 380 | CG COMPOSITING | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces advanced concepts in compositing utilizing computer generated and filmed assets. Workflows will be explored employing matchmoving, realistic CG lighting, render passes, and multi-pass compositing techniques.

VFX 374 and ANI 339 are prerequisites for this class.

VFX 382 | FLAME WORKSHOP | 2-2.5 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides an advanced workshop for students to learn how to finish media using Autodesk Flame. Students will learn how to set up a project, composite, color correct, and finish shots for distribution. Post-production workflow, visual effects, and integration with editorial will also be emphasized.

VFX 390 | ADVANCED TOPICS IN VISUAL EFFECTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Advanced study in visual effects focusing on a specific area each quarter such as: virtual reality, stereoscopic compositing, visual effects supervising, visual effects producing, optical effects, etc. May be repeated for credit.

VFX 391 | VISUAL EFFECTS STUDIO | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course provides practical experience in visual effects. Participants will apply learned techniques in a real-world experience serving as visual effects artists for various projects that may include thesis, capstone and other student work. A key element of this course will be in-class reviews and critiques of students' work in progress to sharpen technical, collaborative, and storytelling skills.

VFX 478 or VFX 380 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-8 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Variable credit. PREREQUISITE(S): Consent of dean.

VFX 405 | VISUAL EFFECTS PIPELINES WORKSHOP | 2 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This workshop is a comprehensive survey of the creative and technical pipelines used for the production of visual effects. Emphasis is placed on how images, CG assets, and data are created and flow through production departments from acquisition through final imagery.

VFX 410 | GAME ENGINES FOR FILMMAKERS | 4 quarter hours

Emphasis will be placed on creating 3D set pieces and cinematic sequences. No previous experience with 3D is required.

VFX 420 | FUNDAMENTALS OF VIRTUAL PRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to the creation of in-camera visual effects on a virtual production stage. Topics include volume setup, camera tracking, virtual environment operation, screen management, and filming procedures.

FILM 401 or FILM 410 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 430 | VISUAL EFFECTS SUPERVISION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines production from the perspective of the visual effects supervisor. The visual effects supervisor is the creative and technical director overseeing all aspects of visual effects creation. Emphasis is placed on sequence design, on-set photography and data collection, as well as production management.

(POST 400 or POST 401) and FILM 401

VFX 434 | VIRTUAL CINEMATOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces real world cinematic techniques within a computer graphics environment. Emphasis is placed on camera movement, composition, pacing, lighting, and aesthetics.

ANI 423 is a prerequisite for this course.

VFX 440 | PREVISUALIZATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces techniques for the rapid prototyping of creative camera and visual solutions for film and animation. Topics include story analysis, shot and sequence design, motion capture editing, technical visualization for production, and editing an effective previsualized animatic.

ANI 450 or VFX 434 is a prerequisite for this class.

VFX 474 | COMPOSITING I | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Compositing is the art and science of manipulating the content of photographic images. This project-based course builds the core tool set for compositing live-action filmed footage. Students will be introduced to design, supervision and production of a visual effects project.

POST 400 or POST 401 or ANI 423 is a prerequisite for this course.

VFX 478 | COMPOSITING II | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course expands compositing workflows into three dimensional space for set extensions and compositing with complex camera movement. Emphasis on camera tracking, projections, camera stitching, morphing, and advanced compositing techniques.

VFX 474 is a prerequisite for this class.

Women's and Gender Studies (WGS)

WGS 100 | WOMEN'S LIVES: RACE/CLASS/GENDER | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will introduce students to Women's & Gender Studies by exploring a range of issues that contemporary women face through experiences stratified by race, class, gender, sexuality, and disability. Topics will include women's identities; body image and the media; women's sexuality; intimate relationships and families; women, violence and criminalization; women's work, wage discrimination, and welfare reform; women's health issues, such as reproductive rights, and medical research. Participants will have opportunities to examine ways that this stratification interacts in varied eras, cultures, and sub-cultures to shape women's lives. Students will engage in an activist focus as they are introduced to the layers of oppression that affect many women's lives, from the personal to the global. As they analyze social, cultural, and political issues through "gendered lenses", participants may expand a view of their personal lives to include a framework that encourages resilient responses to such oppression.

WGS 105 | DATING IN COLLEGE: ENDING VIOLENCE AND CREATING CHANGE | 2 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Growing out of a decade-long community-based service learning program held in Chicago high schools entitled "Take Back the Halls: Ending Violence in Relationships and Schools," this college course brings topics of activism, community, and ending violence into a university setting. In this course, we will meet weekly to examine personal, interpersonal, and institutionalized systems of oppression including issues of domestic violence, sexual violence, racism, homophobia, and sexism, among others. We will explore how these issues intersect with one another and will formulate strategies on how to activate against forms of violence and systems of oppression. The course will operate as a seminar in which we will discuss these issues in relation to readings, popular media, and personal lived experience.

WGS 200 | WOMEN'S STUDIES IN TRANSNATIONAL CONTEXTS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is a transnational approach to Women's & Gender Studies, examining how goods, money, and media images of women cross national in new ways. A further focus is on how this transformation of national boundaries depends not only upon political changes but also upon economic and cultural shifts. This transnational perspective pays attention to the inequalities and differences intersecting race, class, and gender that arise from new forms of globalization as well as from older histories of colonialism and racism. The course is designed to give the student an in-depth look at a world of connections that do not necessarily create similarities in how women variously experience that world. It introduces students to research by and about women that reflects transnationality in all of its possibilities and challenges.

WGS 212 | GROWING UP FEMALE IN THE U.S. | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines what it means to grow up female in the contemporary U.S. It explores the ways in which girls develop and are socialized through childhood and adolescence, focusing on how families, schools, peers, and the larger culture influence young women's lives and the ways in which race, ethnicity, class and sexual orientation affect their growth and learning and how their interaction might affect the behaviors and choices of young women as they mature.

WGS 215 | GENDER AND EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines gender as a social construct and its meanings within the context of educational institutions, its implications for teaching and learning, and organizational practices that may oppress and/or empower groups or individuals. Emphasis is given to social forces within the larger society that affect education and schooling; sex-stereotyping and gender bias; teacher behaviors; attitudes, practices, and expectations; student motivation and achievement; principles of non-sexist education; gender bias in settings outside of schools; current issues in the media and popular culture; and the ways in which gender bias and sexism interact with other forms of prejudice, inequality, and oppression.

WGS 219 | WOMEN AND SCIENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

In this course, we will examine the evolving relationship between women and science. There are growing opportunities for and representation of women in scientific fields in many parts of the world, but there are historical contexts that should be considered and remaining challenges that are being addressed. We will begin the course with a review of the scientific method— what is this process and what about it has enabled it to attain legitimacy as a way of knowing the world? We will also learn about female scientists in the fields of environmental geography and ecology who have broken gender norms and boundaries and made notable scientific contributions. Students will learn through several case studies of both well-known scientists as well as those who are less widely recognized. Finally, we will examine aspects of science and culture that have impacted women's participation and achievements.

WGS 225 | CONSTRUCTING GENDER AND SEXUALITY | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will explore through interdisciplinary theory and research how gender and sexuality are socially constructed. It will examine how such constructions have evolved over time and how individuals of diverse identities and cultural backgrounds have been affected by the changes. Discussion will focus on the roles played by powerful societal institutions (e.g. religious, political, and medical) in effectively defining what is considered gender-appropriate behavior and legitimate sexual expression. Finally, the activism of recent social movements to psychological and politically empower individuals who are neither heterosexual nor traditionally masculine or feminine will be explored.

WGS 230 | CONTESTED BODIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course will consider the theories and practices of differential embodiments and the experiences of bodies that don't fit the norm: queer bodies, fat bodies, transgender bodies, bodies of color. In Western/Global North cultures, the mind is given more importance than the body, and historically, oppressed groups have been associated more with bodies than minds. The course will aid in understanding and questioning the dominant norms that promote "normal" bodies and normative embodiment and offer alternative theories and practices of embodiment. Students interested in the performing arts, social and health sciences, fat studies and disability studies, as well as women's and gender studies students will find valuable frameworks in this class.

WGS 249 | GENDER AND POLITICS IN IRELAND | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the relationship between gender and politics in Ireland, focusing on the political history of gender relations in Ireland, women's political involvement throughout the enormous changes of the 20th Century, and contemporary legal and public policy issues related to sex/gender. The attitudes and behaviors of women as voters, activists, officeholders and peace activists will be examined, as will Ireland's place in global gender issues. We will pay particular attention to the changes that have taken place since Ireland's entry into the EU, the "Celtic Tiger" transformations of the Irish economy, and the impact of the recent worldwide economic recession on gender and politics in Ireland, along with the efforts of women, North and South, to further the process of peace in the North, which has been wracked by violence for several decades. Cross-listed with IRE 249.

WGS 250 | FEMINIST FRAMEWORKS | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course introduces feminist theories and methodologies with an emphasis on how theoretical frameworks shape specific research, policies, and praxis. The course will provide an introductory exploration of feminist frameworks in relationship to specific issues and questions within women's studies, with some attention to the resulting research/analytic methods. The class will delineate, analyze and compare the underlying assumptions and frameworks of a variety of feminist theories (i.e. historical materialist, liberal, radical, standpoint and identity-based, critical race, postcolonial, and transnational theoretical frameworks) in relation to a set of issues and questions (e.g. violence against women, sex discrimination, reproductive rights). The class will explore the relationship between these frameworks and knowledge production, public policy, and social change efforts within national and transnational contexts. Thus, the students will be able to discern how theories frame research questions and methods, as well as how they frame policy issues and action proposals; and students will be able to analyze the theoretical frameworks comparatively.

WGS 255 | DECONSTRUCTING THE DIVA | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course studies the figure of the diva as a powerful cultural text, central to both understanding historical conceptions of socially normative femininity and to uncovering and examining our own present-day conceptions of what it means to be feminine, to be a woman. Through fiction, drama, biography, autobiography, film, audio recordings, and gender, the course explores representations of the diva in literature, art, and popular and high culture. The goal of this course is to investigate the ways that "diva" has actually been code for women (and sometimes men) behaving outside of societal norms. Students will do this both historically and thematically, uncovering a path in which "women behaving badly" are routinely censured, and silenced. Students will also investigate how women both resist and re-appropriate this label. This course also seeks to explore the lives of both extraordinary and ordinary women, contextualizing the historical moments that they both contested and were sometimes consumed by.

WGS 260 | GENDER, SEXUALITY AND VIOLENCE | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the social, political, and cultural contexts of interpersonal violence with a focus on sexual violence and dating violence among and against adolescents and young adults. This course also will emphasize activist strategies and anti-violence movements.

WGS 265 | YOGA AND FEMINIST THOUGHT: EMBODYING INDIVIDUAL AND COLLECTIVE TRANSFORMATION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course explores the links between yoga and feminist thought, considering the benefits of applying each philosophy to the practice of the other. Through direct experience with the practice of yoga, we will consider both the tension points and commonalities between yoga and feminist perspectives. We take up questions of how yoga practices can promote individual healing and growth, and also look beyond the individual to a consideration of the potential that yoga has to animate community-engaged practices toward social justice.

WGS 270 | WOMEN IN CARIBBEAN SOCIETIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This is a survey course which focuses on the diverse social, cultural and political realities of women in the Caribbean region across and within historical periods marked by colonialism, slavery and indentureship; anti-colonial, nationalist and labor movements; economic globalization and the emergence of the postcolony. Drawing on primary documents, images, feminist postcolonial writings, the course investigates how women of indigenous, African, Chinese, Indian and multiracial (or "mixed") descent have been positioned within various societies, and in relationship to each other. Topics covered include visual representations of women, gender and sexuality; forms of resistance and political engagement; motherhood, reproduction and the State; women in various religious traditions; work and economic status; social class, color and femininities; popular culture.

WGS 275 | BLACK FEMINIST THEORIES IN A U.S. CONTEXT | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the major figures, statements, and movements that shape Black feminist thinking, writing and activism in the United States. Issues examined may include social and economic equity, beauty and voice, activism and social change; and the exploration of identity and subjectivity through the lens of intersectionality, including race, gender, sexual orientation, class, citizenship, and immigrant status. Throughout we will consider how Black feminist thought is situated in larger frameworks of Western feminist thought and its linkages with international feminist discourses.

WGS 290 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

See course schedule for current offerings.

WGS 300 | FEMINIST THEORIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Disagreements about what counts as feminist theory have raged as the borders of feminist discourse have shifted over the past two and a half decades. Yet most feminists continue to insist that sex/gender be considered basic categories of analysis and theory. Broadly conceived, feminist theory—historical or contemporary—represents an attempt to understand and interpret the roots and causes of women's place in the world. This course examines how different theoretical perspectives address gender, class, racial, and sexual inequalities and the method(s) proposed for social change. Students will be required to critically engage these theories in terms of how they address the commonalities and differences among women, especially insofar as these are grounded in race, class, and sexual identifications and dissonances. This course is a core requirement for the Women's & Gender Studies major.

WGS 250 is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 303 | GENDER, VIOLENCE AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course explores the social and cultural contexts of interpersonal violence in women's lives, with a focus on domestic violence, rape, harassment. The course seeks to understand how gender, race, class, sexuality, and national differences and inequalities shape the experiences of violence, the social and institutional responses to violence, and strategies for resistance and change.

WGS 305 | MOTHERING, WORK, AND REPRODUCTIVE JUSTICE | 4quarter hours*(Undergraduate)

This course examines the institution of motherhood and gendered and racialized divisions of labor through the framework of reproductive justice in a cross-cultural and transnational perspective. What does mothering have to do with the feminization of poverty? How does the labor of mothers impact struggles for social justice and equality? Why is making visible the work of mothering critical to the pursuit of economic justice? What are the entanglements of mothering in relation to queerness as well as heterosexuality? Central topics will include ideas about motherwork, sexuality, labor and wealth inequalities, marriage, reproductive rights and politics, and capitalism with attention to the imperatives of gender, racial, and economic justice. This course includes interdisciplinary scholarship drawing from history, popular culture, autobiography, critical race theory, feminist economics, and motherhood studies.

WGS 306 | GENDER AND FAMILIES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Gender and Families is an upper-level undergraduate course that considers issues raised by the diverse roles that women, men, and children play in families. It focuses particular attention on the social construction of gender in families, and examines families in their social, economic, and political contexts. Topics covered include adult intimate relationships, the social construction of motherhood and fatherhood, and shifting gender relations of power in families, family stress and adaptation, and the impact of social policies on families' lives.

WGS 307 | WOMEN IN THE MIDDLE EAST: BEYOND THE VEIL | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course explores how Middle Eastern Women have been represented in the media outside of the Middle East, by Arab women scholars, and "Third World" feminists and challenges these representations by focusing on issues such as veiling, the everyday lives of Middle Eastern Women, political activism, literary works, economics and social class, and media representations.

WGS 310 | FEMINIST ETHICS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course explores theoretical issues regarding women's moral experience and feminist approaches to liberation from various forms of socio-cultural and political oppression. It explores the moral status of women from their own experiences and perspectives, in contrast to traditional Western ethics' characterizations, as well as feminist ethical perspectives on oppressive social practices, such as racism and violence against women, and the ethical dimensions of difference among women.

WGS 314 | ANTIRACIST FEMINISMS | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to the wide array of feminist thinking regarding ideologies of race, racism, white privilege, ethnocentrism, racial and ethnic identifications, and their relationship to gender, class, sexual and national identities and locations. The ways that racism has divided women's movements and feminist organizations will be examined along with the work of feminist scholars, writers, activists, and advocates who have articulated explicitly anti-racist theories, analyses, and programs within the U.S. as well as internationally.

WGS 316 | REPRESENTATIONS OF THE BODY | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course reflects the current explosion of intellectual interest in the body as a site of cultural meaning. The course addresses the questions of how the body is socially created and sustained. It explores those questions in terms of tensions between nature and culture, body and spirit, and how discourses of power converge in and on the body.

WGS 320 | TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: THEORY AND PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course introduces students to transformative justice responses to violence that do not rely on state institutions. These include collective processes for support and healing, intervention, accountability, and prevention. The pedagogical praxis of learning will be through communal peacemaking circles and collective strategy sessions to create community responses to violence. Cross-listed as WGS 420.

WGS 322 | FEMALE IDENTITIES: YOUNG ADULT LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to Young Adult Literature as a genre and explores how this literature relates to adolescent girls' experiences in diverse cultural contexts. It addresses themes related to physical and emotional development, the development of personal values and beliefs; the construction of identity; beliefs and attitudes about the body; interpersonal relationships; gender and sexuality; and coping with change, death, belonging, alienation, and escape. Course materials are multicultural with a focus upon the experiences of female adolescents in terms of ethnicity, culture, gender, religion, disability, as well as other dimensions of difference within national and international contexts.

WGS 324 | WOMEN IN THEATRE: A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the concepts of gender and theatrical performance with reference to history, culture, critical response, viewer interpretation, and identity in a global context. Students will study character as a dramatic construct with respect to gender, race, and class; it examines how dramatic images are as diverse as their cultural contexts; explores the concepts of reader and viewer response to theater; and interrogates the relationship between the American theatrical image and the larger global context within which images are created.

WGS 326 | WOMEN AND LAW | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course investigates the variety of ways in which women come into relation with the law, e.g., through laws and judicial decisions dealing with equal opportunity. Cross-listed as PSC 363.

WGS 330 | LESBIAN LIVES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores constructions of lesbian lives, politics, and communities in the U.S. using the political cartoons of artist Alison Bechdel as a primary text, along with theoretical and historical readings. Students examine the constructions of identities and politics within lesbian culture, paying particular attention to how these have changed and evolved over time, and how community can be created and sustained. Cross-listed with WGS 430.

WGS 332 | CREATING CHANGE: CONTEMPORARY LGBTQ POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores the historical roots and contemporary realities of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered (GLBT) politics, nationally and internationally. GLBT groups and individuals are gaining political recognition, challenging institutions, and creating change by asserting claims to rights and protections under law. Such issues as hate crimes, marriage, AIDS, and ballot initiatives over non-discrimination law and policy have entered the political mainstream since the 1970's. This course examines the GLBT movement, its political and social strategies, conflicts and issues, and the political roles played by its members as participants in political culture. Cross-listed as PSC 312 and LGQ 332.

WGS 334 | GIRLHOOD ALL AROUND THE WORLD | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will address issues related to growing up female and coming of age in the 21st century within a global context. We will focus on the following questions, what does it mean to be female, a girl, a young woman in diverse cultural and cultural contexts, examining the ways in which community, family, peers, schools and relationships with others, popular culture and public policy influence their lived experiences, attitudes, beliefs, behaviors, choices and possibilities. The analytical framework will be rooted in understanding how the intersections of race, ethnicity, class, sexual orientation, religion, and belief systems influence notions of the self, the body, and the construction of female identities.

WGS 336 | WOMEN AND FILM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course engages in the practice of critical literacy in the viewing of films, U.S. based and international, with attention to issues of representation, images, construction of identities and circulation of messages about what it means to be female in the contemporary world. Central topics will include issues and ideas about film as art, as a cultural product, and as an industry. Various genres of films will be examined and the course will also explore women as subjects, actors, producers and critics of film.

WGS 338 | SEXUAL JUSTICE: LESBIANS, GAYS AND THE LAW | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the historical and contemporary relationships between lesbians, gays, and the law in the U.S., focusing on the intersections of power, sexuality, and identity with issues of sexuality-based discrimination. It focuses on case law, along with social science and legal literature, seeking out a diversity of voices and experiences. Primary emphasis will be on cases that have come before the U.S. Supreme Court since the mid-1950's, with particular attention paid to how groups and individuals have reached out to the court system for redress of injustice and how these groups and individuals have exercised or failed to exercise power within the legal process. Cross-listed with LGQ 338.

WGS 342 | QUEER PIONEERS: CULTURE, GENDER, AND POLITICAL ACTIVISM | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines some of the historical roots and contemporary realities of lesbian and gay politics in the United States through the biographies of pioneering individuals whose lives and work shaped an ongoing struggle for civil rights and social justice. The biographies of individuals who, as activists and artists, rose to challenge the conventions of culture, gender, and political exclusion will be studied in-depth to both illuminate the politics of social movement and suggest how these diverse individuals and experiences may influence past and future efforts for cultural and political change. Cross-listed with LGQ 319.

WGS 345 | WOMEN, WAR AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course aims to make feminist sense of contemporary wars and conflicts. It analyzes the intersections between gender, race, class, and ethnicity in national conflicts. The class traces the gendered processes of defining citizenship, national identity and security, and examines the role of institutions like the military in the construction of femininity and masculinity. The course focuses on the gendered impact of war and conflict through examining torture, mass rape, genocide, and refugee displacement.

WGS 352 | GENDER, COMMUNITY, AND ACTIVISM: COMMUNITY-BASED LEARNING IN WGS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Gender, Community, and Activism : Community-Based Learning in WGS is an interdisciplinary experiential/service learning seminar designed for undergraduate and graduate students in the field of Women's and Gender Studies. In an effort to provide students with an experience that integrates the feminist-informed theoretical work of the classroom with practical application in the community, the course will pair students with internship opportunities at community-based organizations that focus on a cause/issue related to their particular area of scholarly interest. The course is designed to encourage learning by doing and reflecting, where students will be asked to reflect on their internship experiences outside of the classroom through course readings, written assignments, and class discussion.

WGS 354 | CONTEMPORARY KNITTING: GENDER, CRAFT, AND COMMUNITY SERVICE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course will explore the gendered history of knitting and its contemporary popularity as both a creative leisure-time activity and a means of providing community service. The social history and social construction of a gendered division of labor surrounding knitting, with its complexities, provide the theoretical foundation of the course. Students will learn the basic techniques of knitting and will be expected to practice their new skills in- and out-side of the classroom. They will reach a level of proficiency sufficient to producing a minimum of three contributions to service knitting projects.

WGS 355 | WOMEN AND ART | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class considers both the history of women artists and representations of women from other cultures around the world, from prehistory to the contemporary era. In addition, it will introduce feminist methodologies that can be applied to specific case studies. Cross-listed with HAA 366, WGS 455 and MLS 474.

100/200-level History of Art and Architecture course or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 362 | INTRODUCTION TO TRANSGENDER STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course considers the emerging interdisciplinary field of transgender studies and its indebtedness to transgender history and activism, paying particular attention to the relationship between trans studies in the academy and in queer and feminist communities. Introducing the student to the relationship between trans studies and feminist studies, philosophy, science and LGBTQ studies, we won't attempt to justify trans existence or identity but rather address the interlocking structures that both survey and exclude trans bodies. Cross-listed with LGQ 362.

WGS 363 | GLOBALLY QUEER: TRANSNATIONAL LGBTQ POLITICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course explores how political issues affecting lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) communities and individuals are linked to global and transnational politics of citizenship, power, security, and political economy. It focuses on how gender roles, relationships, and identities are constructed, deployed, challenged, and resisted around the world, paying particular attention to how these systems and structures are interconnected. Cross-listed as WGS 463.

WGS 364 | POLITICAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This class explores the interplay of political, social, economic and aesthetic factors in feminist autobiography from a transnational perspective. We examine the ways that women's autobiography is being used to write themselves into history. Story is integral in the process of healing and building solidarity and coalitions for gender based organizing. Further, autobiography creates a space for the "alter-history" to be told: the absence of testimony and experience is created for others to gain hope, strength, and deeper understanding of others and themselves. Various forms and critiques of feminist autobiographies are explored, and how each impacts the political possibilities for readers. Cross-listed with PAX 364.

WGS 375 | FEMINISMS OF THE BLACK DIASPORA | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is designed to offer a critical examination of black women's experiences and thought within a global and transnational framework. The course examines works by and about black women in diverse social, political, and geographical contexts: the continent of Africa, Western Europe, Canada, Latin America, the Caribbean, and Australia. Topics to be explored will include issues of politics and ideology; power and inequality based on intersectionality of race and other dimension of identity; agency, activism, and social movements; the mass media, popular culture and social policies. Cross-listed with WGS 475.

WGS 378 | UTOPIAN AND DYSTOPIAN LITERATURE AND FILM: GENDER, RACE AND BEYOND | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

What does the future hold for humankind on this planet and elsewhere? What will life be like in the not too distant as well as far distant futures? How will societies be organized? What kinds of cultural milieus will shape life and living? How will identities be articulated and negotiated? Who will govern? Who will be in resistance? Who will be present and who will be absent? How will things come to be? These questions will form the core of our study of a genre devoted to social commentary, envisioning vastly different ideas about the future, emergent from 20th century works.

WGS 386 | BLACK WOMEN'S EXPERIENCES: VARIABLE TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

Topics vary. This course is designed to address issues related to the particular experiences of women in the Black Diaspora. Topics will vary in terms of their particular focus in addressing issues that are important to understanding Black women's experiences in a US context and globally--making interconnections to the experiences of women of other ethnic, cultural, and national backgrounds. The course will provide occasions for students to study and examine issues such as Black women's cultural criticism, Black women in the arts, engagement in activism and social and political movements--literature and the media. Cross-listed with WGS 486 and ABD 386.

WGS 387 | TEEN VIOLENCE PREVENTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course is an interdisciplinary experiential/service learning seminar in which students will participate in, and critically reflect upon, a relationship violence prevention program in Chicago area high schools. This class will explore adolescent development, considering the ways in which economic, social, political and cultural contexts influence that development. In addition, we will focus on adolescent relationships, group work with teens, aggression and violence in intimate – in particular teen – relationships, and evaluation of programs to prevent teen violence. Each week students will address a set of theoretical and/or practical themes that in some way relate to teen violence and aggression, as well as prevention of such violence. Discussions of each theme will draw on course readings, lecture materials, and perhaps most importantly, students' experiences working with teens in schools.

WGS 388 | QUEER THEORY: AN INTRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

This course examines some of the central texts of queer theory in order to contextualize and historicize the notion of homosexuality as a primary category of identity. The issue of sexual normativity as it relates to gay and lesbian assimilation will also be discussed. Because of the significant relationship of gender and sexuality, we will also examine theories of embodiment and take up the debates around the politics of intersex and transgender identities. Formerly WMS 284.

WGS 390 | WOMEN ACROSS CULTURES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

A critical analysis of the experiences of women around the world in diverse social contexts, examined through different disciplines, with a special emphasis on economics, politics and culture. Focus is on African, Asian and Latin American cultures and nondominant groups within western societies. (Cross-listed as WGS 490 and MLS 441)

WGS 391 | METHODS AND SCHOLARSHIP IN WOMEN'S STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

An exploration of the transforming effects that feminist methodologies and scholarship have had in the social sciences and humanities. This course emphasizes interdisciplinary research approaches, feminist publishing, and the interplay of research and activism, as it prepares students to write a research proposal. Not recommended for non-majors. (Cross-listed as WGS 491)

WGS 392 | INTERNSHIP | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

By arrangement. Variable credit.

WGS 394 | WOMEN, SELF, AND SOCIETY SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

Women, Self and Society Seminar (cross-listed as Women's and Gender Studies 480 and Master's of Liberal Studies 468). Variable Topics. See course schedule for current offerings.

WGS 395 | WOMEN'S STUDIES ADVANCED SEMINAR | 4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

The Advanced Seminar emphasizes interdisciplinary methodology and students' independent research. Designed to be an integrating experience, the seminar will focus on discussion, response to research, and blending theory and application. The primary goal of the Advanced Seminar is the successful completion of a project or thesis reflecting your knowledge and passionate interests developed in your Women's and Gender Studies major, and it is designed to facilitate this process. Not recommended for non-majors.

WGS 391 or instructor permission is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 398 | TRAVEL/STUDY | 1-4 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

(Cross-listed with WGS 498)

WGS 399 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 1-6 quarter hours
(Undergraduate)

By arrangement. Variable credit.

WGS 400 | FEMINIST THEORIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to provide you with an introduction to the development of some contemporary feminist theories: local, global, transnational. The theories are interpretive frameworks to analyze, understand and act in the world. The theorists/writers offer concepts to critically analyze structures and practices of oppression, privilege, resilience, and resistance; they provide frameworks for conducting feminist research, advocacy, and activism for personal, social, intellectual, and/or political change and transformation. In this course, we will examine how these theoretical perspectives seek to understand and address various systems of inequality and power and the method(s) that we - theorists, scholars, researchers, advocates, activists, artists, writers - propose for change. We will discuss how these various feminisms continue to develop and evolve in relation to one another and to changing historical, political, social, economic contexts. Cross-listed with MLS 440.

WGS 405 | MOTHERING. WORK AND REPRODUCTIVE JUSTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the institution of motherhood and gendered and racialized divisions of labor through the framework of reproductive justice in a cross-cultural and transnational perspective. What does mothering have to do with the feminization of poverty? How does the labor of mothers impact struggles for social justice and equality? Why is making visible the work of mothering critical to the pursuit of economic justice? What are the entanglements of mothering in relation to queerness as well as heterosexuality? Central topics will include ideas about motherwork, sexuality, labor and wealth inequalities, marriage, reproductive rights and politics, and capitalism with attention to the imperatives of gender, racial, and economic justice. This course includes interdisciplinary scholarship drawing from history, popular culture, autobiography, critical race theory, feminist economics, and motherhood studies.

WGS 406 | GENDER AND FAMILIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course considers issues raised by the diverse roles that women, men, and children play in families. It focuses particular attention on the social construction of gender in families, and examines families in their social, economic, and political contexts. Topics covered include adult intimate relationships, the social construction of motherhood and fatherhood, and shifting gender relations of power in families, family stress and adaptation, and the impact of social policies on families' lives.

WGS 407 | WOMEN IN THE MIDDLE EAST: BEYOND THE VEIL | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores how Middle Eastern Women have been represented in the media outside of the Middle East, by Arab women scholars, and "Third World" feminists and challenges these representations by focusing on issues such as veiling, the everyday lives of Middle Eastern Women, political activism, literary works, economics and social class, and media representations.

WGS 410 | FEMINIST ETHICS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores theoretical issues regarding women's moral experience and feminist approaches to liberation from various forms of socio-cultural and political oppression. It explores the moral status of women from their own experiences and perspectives, in contrast to traditional Western ethics' characterizations, as well as feminist ethical perspectives on oppressive social practices, such as racism and violence against women, and the ethical dimensions of difference among women.

WGS 414 | ANTIRACIST FEMINISMS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to the wide array of feminist thinking regarding ideologies of race, racism, white privilege, ethnocentrism, racial and ethnic identifications, and their relationship to gender, class, sexual and national identities and locations. The ways that racism has divided women's movements and feminist organizations will be examined along with the work of feminist scholars, writers, activists, and advocates who have articulated explicitly anti-racist theories, analyses, and programs within the U.S. as well as internationally.

WGS 415 | FEMINIST GENEALOGIES IN WOMEN'S AND GENDER STUDIES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces graduate students to the field of Women's and Gender Studies. It delves into the divergent ways in which scholars have approached the intellectual project of studying women and gender. Through tracing the historical growth and development of the discipline and its institutionalization, the course explores how attention to intersectional, transnational, and queer feminisms have expanded the field and its topics of study.

WGS 416 | REPRESENTATIONS OF THE BODY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course reflects the current explosion of intellectual interest in the body as a site of cultural meaning. The course addresses the questions of how the body is socially created and sustained. It explores those questions in terms of tensions between nature and culture, body and spirit, and how discourses of power converge in and on the body.

WGS 420 | TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: THEORY AND PRACTICE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course introduces students to transformative justice responses to violence that do not rely on state institutions. These include collective processes for support and healing, intervention, accountability, and prevention. The pedagogical praxis of learning will be through communal peacemaking circles and collective strategy sessions to create community responses to violence. Cross-listed with WGS 320.

WGS 422 | FEMALE IDENTITIES: YOUNG ADULT LITERATURE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is an introduction to Young Adult Literature as a genre and explores how this literature relates to adolescent girls' experiences in diverse cultural contexts. It addresses themes related to physical and emotional development, the development of personal values and beliefs; the construction of identity; beliefs and attitudes about the body; interpersonal relationships; gender and sexuality; and coping with change, death, belonging, alienation, and escape. Course materials are multicultural with a focus upon the experiences of female adolescents in terms of ethnicity, culture, gender, religion, disability, as well as other dimensions of difference within national and international contexts.

WGS 424 | WOMEN IN THEATRE: A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines the concepts of gender and theatrical performance with reference to history, culture, critical response, viewer interpretation, and identity in a global context. Students will study character as a dramatic construct with respect to gender, race, and class; it examines how dramatic images are as diverse as their cultural contexts; explores the concepts of reader and viewer response to theater; and interrogates the relationship between the American theatrical image and the larger global context within which images are created.

WGS 426 | WOMEN AND LAW | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course investigates the variety of ways in which women come into relation with the law, e.g., through laws and judicial decisions dealing with equal opportunity.

WGS 430 | LESBIAN LIVES | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course explores constructions of lesbian lives, politics, and communities in the U.S. using the political cartoons of artist Alison Bechdel as a primary text, along with theoretical and historical readings. Students examine the constructions of identities and politics within lesbian culture, paying particular attention to how these have changed and evolved over time, and how community can be created and sustained. Cross-listed with WGS 330.

WGS 440 | GENDERED COMMUNICATION | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Examines research into the ways the various aspects of communication are affected by and affect the social construction of gender. Topics covered include language and language usage differences, interaction patterns and perceptions of the sexes generated through language and communication. (Cross-listed as CMNS 523)

WGS 445 | WOMEN, WAR AND RESISTANCE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course aims to make feminist sense of contemporary wars and conflicts. It analyzes the intersections between gender, race, class, and ethnicity in national conflicts. The class traces the gendered processes of defining citizenship, national identity and security, and examines the role of institutions like the military in the construction of femininity and masculinity. The course focuses on the gendered impact of war and conflict through examining torture, mass rape, genocide, and refugee displacement. Cross-listed as WGS 345.

WGS 452 | GENDER, COMMUNITY, AND ACTIVISM: COMMUNITY-BASED LEARNING IN WGS | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Gender, Community, and Activism : Community-Based Learning in WGS is an interdisciplinary experiential/service learning seminar designed for undergraduate and graduate students in the field of Women's and Gender Studies. Further, autobiography creates a space for the "alter-history" to be told: the absence of testimony and experience is created for others to gain hope, strength, and deeper understanding of others and themselves. Various forms and critiques of feminist autobiographies are explored, and how each impacts the political possibilities for readers.

WGS 465 | GLOBALIZATION, TRANSNATIONALISM, AND GENDER | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course examines how gender-based inequities are linked to global and transnational politics of power, security, political economy, militarism, and ecology. There will be a focus on how gender roles, relationships, and identities are constructed, deployed, challenged, and resisted around the globe, paying particular attention to how systems and structures of gender, race, class, sexuality, age, ability, culture, religion, nation etc. are interconnected. It will explore how resistance to structural inequities is constructed within and across national boundaries, paying particular attention to the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) worldwide and how the responses of NGOs to crises (e.g., nuclearism, uneven economic development, environmental degradation) highlight the shortcomings of state-centered decision making.

WGS 470 | ADVANCED PSYCHOLOGY OF WOMEN AND GENDER | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

A review of research and theory on women's and gender, including sexist biases and methodology, feminist therapy, violence against women, and gender differences in the development of power and sexuality. Cross-listed as MLS 478 and PSY 561.

WGS 473 | SEMINAR IN GRADUATE PROPOSAL WRITING | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This is a required proposal writing course designed for graduate students in Women's and Gender Studies. The class will provide space for discussion, shared experiences and intellectual resources for students to be able to write effective proposals for their final MA projects or research grants grounded in feminist praxis. The main objective of the class will be to provide a structured process toward constructing proposals collaboratively, highlighting practices of peer feedback.

WGS 400 and WGS 491 are prerequisites for this class.

WGS 475 | FEMINISMS OF THE BLACK DIASPORA | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course is designed to offer a critical examination of black women's experiences and thought within a global and transnational framework. The course examines works by and about black women in diverse social, political, and geographical contexts: the continent of Africa, Western Europe, Canada, Latin America, the Caribbean, and Australia. Topics to be explored will include issues of politics and ideology; power and inequality based on intersectionality of race and other dimension of identity; agency, activism, and social movements; the mass media, popular culture and social policies. Cross-listed with WGS 375.

WGS 478 | UTOPIAN & DYSTOPIAN LITERATURE AND FILM: GENDER, RACE AND BEYOND | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

What does the future hold for humankind on this planet and elsewhere? What will life be like in the not too distant as well as far distant futures? How will societies be organized? What kinds of cultural milieus will shape life and living? How will identities be articulated and negotiated? Who will govern? Who will be in resistance? Who will be present and who will be absent? How will things come to be? These questions will form the core of our study of a genre devoted to social commentary, envisioning vastly different ideas about the future, emergent from 20th century works.

WGS 480 | SELECTED TOPICS: WOMEN, SELF AND SOCIETY | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

Topics vary. See schedule for current offerings. [Cross-listed as MLS 468 and WGS 394].

WGS 485 | WOMEN, GENDER, AGENCY, AND SOCIAL CHANGE | 4 quarter hours
(Graduate)

This course will examine women's individual and collective involvement in social, economic, and political resistance and change. The course will focus on women's participation with attention to the ways that gender shapes the history and development of social movements organized at local, national, regional and global levels, within and across differences of race, class, ethnicity, nationality, religion, geographic location and sexuality. Concrete examples of women's and gender movements within particular historical and geographical contexts, including within Africa, Latin America, Europe, the Middle East, Asia, the United States, among others, will be highlighted.

WGS 486 | BLACK WOMEN'S EXPERIENCES: VARIABLE TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

Topics vary. This course is designed to address issues related to the particular experiences of women in the Black Diaspora. Topics will vary in terms of their particular focus in addressing issues that are important to understanding Black women's experiences in a US context and globally: making interconnections to the experiences of women of other ethnic, cultural, and national backgrounds. The course will provide occasions for students to study and examine issues such as Black women's cultural criticism, Black women in the arts, engagement in activism and social and political movements –literature and the media.

WGS 488 | QUEER THEORY: AN INTRODUCTION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course examines some of the central texts of queer theory in order to contextualize and historicize the notion of homosexuality as a primary category of identity. The issue of sexual normativity as it relates to gay and lesbian assimilation will also be discussed. Because of the significant relationship of gender and sexuality, we will also examine theories of embodiment and take up the debates around the politics of intersex and transgender identities.

WGS 490 | WOMEN ACROSS CULTURES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

A critical analysis of the roles of women in societies around the world, with special emphasis on economics, politics and culture. Focus is on African, Asian and Latin American cultures and nondominant groups within Western societies. Topics vary each quarter. (Cross-listed as MLS 441 and WGS 390)

WGS 491 | METHODS AND SCHOLARSHIP IN WOMEN'S & GENDER STUDIES | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

An exploration of the transforming effects that feminist methodologies and scholarship have had in the social sciences and humanities. This course emphasizes interdisciplinary research approaches, feminist publishing, and the interplay of research and activism, as it prepares students to write a research proposal.

WGS 400 is a prerequisite for this course.

WGS 492 | WGS MA PRACTICUM | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course is an individual practicum that will encompass research, pedagogy, or organization-based experiential learning. The practicum experience must be designed in consultation with the Director of Graduate Studies, and/or the student's WGS Faculty Advisor. The practicum course may take the shape of a community service project or internship, a teaching assistant internship, a research assistant internship, or a micro-internship (a short-term project to help the student develop new skills and explore professional or career options). Students who are planning to continue their graduate education and pursue doctoral-level work will likely choose to work closely with a faculty member as a research intern or by participating in our teaching assistant internship program. This course meets the experiential-based learning requirement for the master's program. A minimum of 4 credit hours required (in either WGS 492 or WGS 452). Course cannot be repeated.

WGS 493 | FINAL PROJECT INDEPENDENT RESEARCH | 4-8 quarter hours (Graduate)

This course involves individual investigation and research (toward completion of the Master's thesis, project, or portfolio) under the supervision of a faculty member. A minimum of 4 credit hours required. Course can be repeated for a total of 8 credit hours.

Foreign Study.

WGS 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 12.00 quarter hours (Graduate)

World Language Education (WLE)

WLE 326 | THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS OF TEACHING ESL AND WLE | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course introduces key foundational theories of English as a second language and world language education that form the basis of our development as language education practitioners and professionals. The course explores theories of language, theories of learning and learners from early childhood to adult, and theory-driven teaching, as well as the philosophical paradigms that inform them. Foundational theories are introduced as problem-solving tools that provide interdisciplinary perspectives of English as a second language and world language education, and as frameworks for critically reading literature on language education theory, research, and methods.

WLE 349 | STANDARD AND CONTENT-BASED METHODS OF TEACHING WORLD LANGUAGES K-12 | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course prepares candidates to teach world languages at the elementary, middle and secondary school levels consonant with an aligned approach to meeting national and state WLE standards and Common Core standards. It examines the theory and practice of traditional or standard methods of teaching world languages (e.g., communicative approach, natural approach, etc.) with an emphasis on developing alternative, post-method strategies and using diverse resources, as well as on reformulating world languages instruction to integrate subject matter content into the curriculum, including science, social studies, math, fine arts, etc. Engages candidates in understanding and applying the "Five Cs"-Communication, Cultures, Connections, Comparisons, and Communities outlined in the national standards-toward this end. Lesson and unit development, evaluation/assessment, and classroom management also will be discussed. Issues that emerge in planning and instruction are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required fieldwork (20/15 hours; level 1 in language of certification).

WLE 360 | SECOND, WORLD AND HERITAGE LANGUAGE ACQUISITION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is an introduction to the theoretical study of second, world and heritage language acquisition (SLA) from a generative and psycholinguistic perspective. The content of the class is founded on the major concepts and issues of language acquisition, including UG-access, L1-transfer, age effects, and the acquisition of form vs. meaning. The course pays particular attention to empirical second and world language studies at the syntax/semantics interface. Course readings and discussion examine the complexities of the processes involved in acquiring a world language that includes the relation between first and second language acquisition; contrastive and error analysis; interlanguage; the social and cultural influences on SLA; learner variability; learning strategies; and classroom interaction analysis. Issues surrounding second, world and heritage language acquisition are discussed and deliberated through university classroom experiences as well as required field experiences. Includes clinical hour requirement.

WLE 370 | LANGUAGE, LITERACIES AND CULTURES | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course examines the interdisciplinary study of first, second and world languages and multiple L1 and L2 literacies in their cultural, social, and political contexts, with emphasis on issues of ethnicity, identity, social class, gender, power, and other related topics relative to ideologies of reading and writing the world through reading and writing the word. Especial focus is placed on these topics as they pertain to the extant research on language, literacy, and culture represented in language communities, as well as in the literature, art, music, and popular culture of those communities as a means of advocating for students' sense of identity as global citizens. Includes clinical hour requirement.

WLE 375 | WLE HISTORY, POLICY, AND CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course engages students in WLE curriculum development and language program advocacy, creation, and sustainability based on an examination of federal and state WLE history and policies and on a review of national and state standards. Reviews theory and application of curriculum development to world language instructional programs, such as design, scope and sequence, organizational patterns, materials and media, teacher training, parent and community involvement, and evaluation. Principal world language education program models are examined and analyzed in light of WLE history, policy, and standards (20/15 hours; level 1).

WLE 326, WLE 349, WLE 360, WLE 370 and BBE 307 are prerequisites for this class.

WLE 384 | CAPSTONE IN WORLD LANGUAGE EDUCATION | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

This course is taken concurrently with WLE 385, Student Teaching in World Languages. In this course, students will have opportunities to reflect on their student teaching experience and prepare materials to support their employment searches and career as teachers. COREQUISITE(S): WLE 385.

WLE 385 | STUDENT TEACHING IN WORLD LANGUAGES | 12 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

(12 credits) Student teaching is the culminating experience of the World Languages certification program. It is a ten-week, 30-hour/week experience. Students must successfully complete student teaching with a grade of B- or better in a language classroom in which they are seeking certification to teach. The course is taken concurrently with WLE 384, World Languages Capstone. Application and approval required. Open only to DePaul students. (12 credit hours)

Writing Rhetoric and Discourse (WRD)

WRD 98 | PREPARATION FOR COLLEGE READING | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

For students who need extra preparation in the development of college reading skills. Emphasizes development of reading strategies suitable for understanding a range of texts.

WRD 102 | BASIC WRITING II | 4 quarter hours (Undergraduate)

WRD 102 prepares students for college-level writing by examining composing processes and the way writers function in a community of other writers and readers. The course helps students increase the effectiveness of their writing practices and develop a sense of confidence in themselves as writers. The course is ideal for students with less writing experience or those who want more exposure before taking WRD 103.

WRD 102X | BASIC WRITING (FOR NON-NATIVE SPEAKERS) | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

WRD 102x prepares students for college-level writing by examining composing processes and the way writers function in a community of other writers and readers. The course helps students increase the effectiveness of their writing practices and develop a sense of confidence in themselves as writers. The course is ideal for students with less writing experience or those who want more exposure before taking WRD 103 or 103x. X sections are specifically designed for students whose first or dominant language is not English. Students have the opportunity to focus on writing challenges that are unique to writing English as a second or additional language, including increased attention to language skills and to the cultural expectations of U.S. academic audiences. The lower enrollment capacity allows for greater attention to students' individual writing needs. WRD 102x addresses the same learning outcomes as WRD 102.

WRD 103 | COMPOSITION AND RHETORIC I | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the forms, expectations, and conventions of writing at the college level. Emphasis on audience analysis, rhetorical stance, and the nature of the composing process.

WRD 103X | COMPOSITION AND RHETORIC I (FOR NON-NATIVE SPEAKERS) | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the forms, expectations, and conventions of writing at the college level. Emphasis on audience analysis, rhetorical stance, and the nature of the composing process. X sections are specifically designed for students whose first or dominant language is not English. The lower enrollment capacity allows for greater attention to students' individual writing needs. WRD 103x addresses the same learning outcomes as WRD 103.

WRD 104 | COMPOSITION AND RHETORIC II | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Developing a convincing argument with information and evidence drawn from a variety of sources. Emphasis on effective research strategies and professional use of sources.

WRD 103 (C- or better required) or HON 100 is a prerequisite for this course.

WRD 104X | COMPOSITION & RHETORIC II (FOR NON-NATIVE SPEAKERS) | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Developing a convincing argument with information and evidence drawn from a variety of sources. Emphasis on effective research strategies and professional use of sources. X sections are specifically designed for students whose first or dominant language is not English. Students have the opportunity to focus on writing challenges that are unique to writing English as a second or additional language, including increased attention to language skills and to the cultural expectations of U.S. academic audiences. The lower enrollment capacity allows for greater attention to students' individual writing needs. WRD 104x addresses the same learning outcomes as WRD 104.

WRD 103 or WRD 103X or equivalent is a prerequisite for this class. A grade of C- or better is required in the prerequisite class.

WRD 108 | COLLEGE READING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Devoted to the acquisition and development of analytical, critical, and interactive reading skills essential to continued success in college, regardless of intended major. Emphasizes effective reading techniques, vocabulary development, and comprehension improvement applicable to all academic disciplines.

WRD 111 | TRANSITION DEPAUL | 2 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

This course prepares new international transfer students for academic success at DePaul. It serves as an introduction to academic support services and opportunities available at DePaul, and the conventions of US academic culture, and the City of Chicago as an academic and culture resource. Topics include differences in approaches to teaching and learning; creating and sustaining productive student-faculty relationships; successful study patterns; and the relationship between liberal and professional education in American culture. Students will do assigned reading on course topics, keep a reflective journal, and engage with each other through discussion and presentation.

WRD 200 | WRITING IN THE DISCIPLINES | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

Preparation for writing in academic disciplines. Special attention to forms, conventions, and expectations in university writing at the intermediate level.

WRD 201 | DIGITAL WRITING | 4 quarter hours(Undergraduate)

An introduction to the study and practice of writing in the digital age. Students will consider a range of digital text types, such as web pages, social media, blogs, online videos, and interactive media, to better understand the technologies, rhetorical conventions, and practices that contribute to and emerge from digital texts. Students will also produce digital texts of their own. No prior digital production experience is necessary.

WRD 103 (C- or better required) or HON 100 is a prerequisite for this course.
