Procedure for Providing Reasonable Accommodations Requests for Individuals with Disabilities

The Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, requires Federal agencies to provide reasonable accommodations to qualified employees or applicants with disabilities, unless doing so would cause undue hardship. In general, an accommodation is a change in the work environment or in the way things are customarily done that would enable a qualified individual with a disability to enjoy equal employment opportunities. There are three categories of reasonable accommodations: 1) Modifications or adjustments to a job application (excluding offerors) to permit an individual with a disability to be considered for a position (i.e., providing forms in alternative formats like large print or Braille and/or providing a sign language interpreter); 2) Modifications or adjustments necessary to enable a qualified individual with a disability to perform the essential functions of the job (i.e., providing sign language interpreters; making existing facilities accessible; job restructuring or part-time or modified work schedules and/or reassignment to a vacant position for non-PSC positions; acquiring or modifying equipment; changing tests or training materials; providing qualified readers or interpreters); and 3) Modifications or adjustments that enable qualified individuals with disabilities to enjoy equal benefits and privileges of the Agency's workforce, depending on whether such individuals are Direct-Hire or PSC (i.e., training; services (e.g., employee assistance programs (EAPs), credit unions, cafeterias, lounges, gymnasiums, auditoriums, transportation)); and social functions (e.g., retirement celebrations and birthdays, and Agency outings). Many individuals with disabilities can apply for and perform jobs without the need for an accommodation. However, where workplace barriers exist, such as physical obstacles or rules about how a job is to be performed, reasonable accommodations serve two fundamental purposes. First, reasonable accommodations remove barriers that prevent people with disabilities from applying for or performing jobs for which they are qualified. 07/01/2021 Partial Revision ADS Chapter 111 5 Second, reasonable accommodations enable agencies to expand the pool of qualified workers, thereby allowing agencies to benefit from the talents of people they might otherwise have arbitrarily excluded from employment.

To determine an effective reasonable accommodation, management (supervisors and hiring managers) must participate in an interactive process when a request, either verbal or written, is made by a qualified individual for a reasonable accommodation and make efforts to resolve requests for accommodations through this interactive process whenever possible. If needed or desired, qualified individuals may designate a representative, advocate, physician, union steward, relative, etc., in writing, to request an accommodation or otherwise participate in the accommodation process. For Direct Hire employees, bargaining unit employees have the right to include their Union Steward in the process. Qualified individuals with a disability who make requests for accommodations are expected to fully cooperate in the interactive process to ensure that effective and appropriate accommodations are provided.

About the DMV Exam

A Department of Transportation (DOT) physical examination is conducted by a licensed "medical examiner." The term includes, but is not limited to, Doctor of Medicine (MD), doctors of osteopathy (DO), physician assistants (PA), advanced practice nurses (APN), and doctors of chiropractic (DC).

A DOT physical exam is valid for up to 24 months. The medical examiner may also issue a medical examiner's certificate for less than 24 months when it is desirable to monitor a condition, such as high blood pressure.

Understanding The DOT Physical: Requirements Explained

The DOT Physical is one of the most important qualifications for any CDL driver. Its purpose is intended to help ensure the safety of both the CDL holder and the other drivers sharing the road with him.

The Department of Transportation requires every CDL driver to receive periodic physical examinations conducted by an approved DOT medical examiner. The DOT medical exam looks for certain pre-existing medical conditions that might impair a driver's ability to safely operate a commercial motor vehicle. A medical examiner's certificate, which is commonly known as a DOT medical card, provides proof the driver has met the medical requirements to hold a CDL. In most states, a prospective CDL driver must hold a valid DOT medical card before a CDL learner's permit can be issued.

Conditions & Issues Covered In A CDL Physical Exam

The medical requirement guidelines we mention here are very basic. Any questions should be addressed by a medical professional familiar with your physical condition.

Basic DOT Medical Requirements

Medical and Physical Requirements

The physical demands of the trucker's job depends on which type of driving he's doing. But no matter which type, a driver must be physically capable of operating a commercial motor vehicle and to perform the varied types of non-driving trucking duties. This includes handling long periods of driving, irregular sleep schedules, potential family and/or social challenges, and job-related stress. In addition, some jobs require heavy lifting in the loading/unloading process, twisting and bending, getting in and out of the truck many times a day, occasional (depending on where you work) installing of tire chains, and many other possible physical activities.

A holder of a CDL must have 20/40 correctable vision in each eye.

The key here is correctable vision and that means eyeglasses or contact lenses are OK.

A CDL driver cannot be a diabetic requiring needle-injected insulin.

Diabetes controlled by diet may be permissible.

A driver's blood pressure must be 140 over 90 or less for a 24-month DOT Medical Certificate.

Additional blood pressure standards:

140-159/90-99 – 12-month certificate

160-179/100-109 – 3-month temporary certificate

Over 180/110 – DOT disqualifier

In some instances, a prescription blood pressure drug can be used to control high blood pressure.

The blood sugar level must be under 200.

The use of a narcotic or any other habit forming drugs will prevent you from passing the DOT physical.

A current diagnosis of any cardiovascular disease or cardiac issues may require you to provide additional information from your doctor
